

Rep. Tangie Herring
District 145

Biography

Born and raised in Macon, Georgia, Representative Tangie Herring is a 28-year classroom teacher whose life is rooted in community service and a steadfast commitment to creating opportunities for others. Her father, a career Airman, and her mother, a dedicated public-school teacher, instilled in her the importance of living out her faith in service to others. Growing up in the Bloomfield neighborhood, she was also profoundly influenced by her grandmother, a trailblazer who broke barriers as one of the first Black women employed by the Keebler company in Macon. These formative experiences shaped Rep. Herring's dedication to perseverance, advocacy and service.

With more than two decades of experience as an educator in Georgia's public schools, Rep. Herring has shaped countless young minds while advocating for educational equity. She holds a Bachelor's degree from Georgia College, a Master's degree from Mercer University and a Specialist degree from Georgia State University. Her professional accomplishments are matched by her commitment to community empowerment and revitalization, particularly in Macon-Bibb and Monroe counties.

As a passionate advocate for our public schools and equitable opportunities, Rep. Herring is dedicated to addressing the needs of her constituents. Her priorities include improving educational resources, enhancing community safety, fostering economic development and ensuring fiscal responsibility by keeping taxes low.

Rep. Herring is married to Wallace Herring of Macon and has one daughter, Zion, who is the light of her life.

Guided by the values instilled by her family and anchored by her commitment to service, Rep. Herring steps into her role as Georgia State Representative with a vision to unlock opportunities for all Georgians. She is driven to ensure that every voice is heard and valued in the legislative process and to help create a brighter future for the communities she is proud to represent.
