JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Requirements for raising question as to constitutionality of law. — In order to raise a question as to the constitutionality of a “law,” at least three things must be shown: (1) the statute or the particular part or parts of the statute which the party would challenge must be stated or pointed out with fair precision; (2) the provisions of the Constitution, which it is claimed have been violated must be clearly designated; and (3) how the statute, or some designated part of it, violates such constitutional provision. Lockaby v. City of Cedartown, 151 Ga. App. 281, 259 S.E.2d 683 (1979).

When charge as to unconstitutionality of statute too indefinite. — Any charge as to unconstitutionality of a statute, failing to state how the statute violates the specified provisions of the Constitution, is too indefinite to invoke any ruling upon the constitutionality of the statute. Jordan v. State, 172 Ga. 857, 159 S.E. 235 (1931).

General Consideration

Due process of law means the administration of general laws according to established rules, not violative of the fundamental principles of private right, by a competent tribunal having jurisdiction of the subject matter, and proceeding upon notice and hearing. Norman v. State, 171 Ga. 527, 156 S.E. 203 (1930); Dependable Ins. Co. v. Gibbs, 218 Ga. 305, 127 S.E.2d 454 (1962); Shoemake v. Whitlock, 226 Ga. 771, 177 S.E.2d 677 (1970).

This section is safeguard against arbitrary power. Cutsinger v. City of Atlanta, 142 Ga. 555, 83 S.E. 263, 1915B L.R.A. 1097, 1916C Ann. Cas. 280 (1914).

Personal jurisdiction. — Because a seller sued an Illinois limited liability company (LLC) on an open account, long-arm jurisdiction over the LLC under the “transacting business” section of O.C.G.A. § 9-10-91(1) was reasonable and comported with due process. The LLC initiated the relationship with the seller and handled payment, the goods were delivered in Georgia to a Georgia apartment complex controlled by a related Georgia entity, and there was a long course of dealing between the parties. Home Depot Supply, Inc. v. Hunter Mgmt., LLC, 289 Ga. App. 286, 656 S.E.2d 898 (2008).

Discovery procedures of O.C.G.A. § 17-16-1 et seq. do not violate due process. — Amended discovery procedure of O.C.G.A. § 17-16-1 et seq. does not violate due process, as it imposes reciprocal discovery upon the state; any difference in the scope of mitigating evidence and the scope of non-statutory aggravating evidence is too minimal to be of constitutional significance on the question of reciprocity of discovery. Stinski v. State, 281 Ga. 783, 642 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

Identification of specific dictates of due process generally requires consideration of three distinct factors: first, the private interest that will be affected by the official action; second, the risk of an erroneous deprivation of such interest through the procedures used, and probable value, if any, of additional or substitute procedural safeguards; and, finally, the government’s interest, including the function involved and the fiscal and administrative burdens that the additional or substitute procedural requirement would entail. Tucker v. Caldwell, 608 F.2d 140 (5th Cir. 1979).

State action involved in denial of due process. — For something to constitute a denial of equal protection of the law as guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment and due process under the federal and state constitutions, state action must be involved. Walker v. State, 220 Ga. 415, 139 S.E.2d 278 (1964), rev’d on other grounds, 381 U.S. 355, 85 S. Ct. 1557, 14 L. Ed. 2d 681 (1965).

Due process of law is denied when an arm of the state acts directly against an individual’s property and deprives the individual of it without notice or an opportunity to be heard. Thus, the requirements of “state” action can rarely be satisfied when the action is taken by one not a state official. Reinertsen v. Porter, 242 Ga. 624, 250 S.E.2d 475 (1978).

State cannot be deemed guilty of violation of due process simply because of court error. — State cannot be deemed guilty of a violation of the due process clause of its constitution, or of the due process clause of the federal constitution, simply because one of its courts while acting within its jurisdiction has made erroneous rulings or decisions. In such a case a party is left to the appropriate remedies for the correction of errors in judicial proceedings. Norman v. State, 171 Ga. 527, 156 S.E. 203 (1930).

Grand jury report properly expunged. — Trial court properly expunged a grand jury presentment of statements unnecessary to the purpose sought to be accomplished by the report that cast reflections of misconduct in office upon a public officer and impugned the officer’s character; the remainder of the report was properly filed and published as the grand jury report was in the nature of a general presentment in which the grand jury took note of alleged excessive overtime for county employees, which was within the province of the grand jury, and its limited remaining criticisms came within the ambit of O.C.G.A. §§ 15-12-71(b) and (c), and 15-12-80 as they did not appear to be criticisms of misconduct in office or impugned character. In re July-August, 2003 DeKalb County Grand Jury, 265 Ga. App. 870, 595 S.E.2d 674 (2004).

Due process principles extend to every proceeding which may deprive person of life, liberty, or property. — Legislative fiat may not take the place of fact in the judicial determination of issues involving life, liberty, or property, a fortiori the finding of a bureau chief or a government department head ruling cannot do so, consistently with the guarantees embodied in the constitutions of this state and the United States. The protective principles summed up in these due process clauses extend to every proceeding which may deprive a person of life, liberty, or property, whether the process be judicial, administrative, or executive in its nature. Zachos v. Huie, 195 Ga. 780, 25 S.E.2d 806 (1943).

Law may not be legally applied so as to deprive person of rights, privileges, and immunities. — A law, even though fair and constitutional on its face, may not legally be applied so as to deprive any person of rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution of Georgia and the United States. Walker v. State, 220 Ga. 415, 139 S.E.2d 278 (1964), rev’d on other grounds, 381 U.S. 355, 85 S. Ct. 1557, 14 L. Ed. 2d 681 (1965).

Construction under state and federal due process provisions may differ. — The fact that the United States Supreme Court may construe the Fourteenth Amendment as not imposing a particular limitation would not prevent this court from giving a different construction to the Georgia due process clause and holding that under this clause the limitation does exist. National Mtg. Corp. v. Suttles, 194 Ga. 768, 22 S.E.2d 386 (1942).

Greater protection than federal due process. — The higher due process standard imposed by the due process clause of the Georgia Constitution requires that an agency present “sufficient justification” for its decisions. Suber v. Bulloch County Bd. of Educ., 722 F. Supp. 736 (S.D. Ga. 1989).

The due process clause of the Georgia Constitution, while mirroring the language of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, affords greater protection than does federal due process. Suber v. Bulloch County Bd. of Educ., 722 F. Supp. 736 (S.D. Ga. 1989).

Equal protection. — Driver’s equal protection challenge to O.C.G.A. § 40-5-22(c)(2) failed as the statute did not create a suspect class or impact a fundamental right and there was a rational basis to create a class of driver’s license applicants whose out-of-state licenses were suspended or revoked; the classification bore a direct relation to the strong governmental interests in protecting the public from drivers whose licenses had been revoked for driving under the influence and in preventing license shopping by nonresidents with revoked out-of-state licenses. Roberts v. Burgess, 279 Ga. 486, 614 S.E.2d 25 (2005).

Driver's equal protection challenge to O.C.G.A. § 40-5-22(c)(7) failed because a driver applied for a Florida license, the driver was voluntarily subjected to that state's laws relating to the issuance of licenses; Florida validly suspended the driver's license and neither Georgia nor Florida was precluded from taking into account offenses that occurred in another state in deciding whether to issue or revoke an already issued operator's license. Roberts v. Burgess, 279 Ga. 486, 614 S.E.2d 25 (2005).

Litigant's right to fair trial when there are contested issues of fact. — When there are contested issues of fact no litigant has any constitutional right to have a verdict in the litigant's favor; the litigant has only the right to a fair trial under which the jury returns a verdict for that party, plaintiff or defendant, whom it believes entitled thereto. That is due process. YMCA v. Bailey, 112 Ga. App. 684, 146 S.E.2d 324 (1965), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 868, 87 S. Ct. 131, 17 L. Ed. 2d 95 (1966).

It cannot be said the doctrine of interspousal immunity is unconstitutional, as a matter of due process or equal protection. Robeson v. International Indem. Co., 248 Ga. 306, 282 S.E.2d 896 (1981).

Civil sanctions. — Imposition of fines and penalties on members of an association of taxicab owners in the form of suspension or revocation of their certificates of public necessity and convenience for infractions of taxicab regulations by their drivers did not violate substantive due process because the civil sanctions were a valid exercise of the police power; the city was authorized to find that in the legitimate interest of promoting and protecting the public safety, subjecting the members to civil sanctions for infractions committed by their drivers was a reasonably necessary and less onerous alternative than the imposition of vicarious criminal liability. Atlanta Taxicab Co. Owners Ass'n v. City of Atlanta, 281 Ga. 342, 638 S.E.2d 307 (2006).

Civil contempt order in divorce case. — A civil contempt order in a di-vorice case requiring a husband to pay $1,500 to the wife for each day that passed without him paying the wife insurance proceeds pursuant to an oral order did not violate due process; a trial court could sua sponte raise an issue of contempt, and although the order to pay the proceeds was oral, the order was not ineffective as a matter of law, as the husband was well aware that the payment of the proceeds would be at issue and that the trial court would decide the matter without a jury. Chatfield v. Adkins-Chatfield, 282 Ga. 190, 646 S.E.2d 247 (2007).

Claimant must act in timely manner. — If a claimant has a remedy provided by law, under which the claimant can assert a claim within a reasonable time, then the claimant has a "day in court." If the claimant fails to assert it within such time, then the claimant, not the law, is at fault. Berry v. Siskin, 128 Ga. App. 3, 195 S.E.2d 255 (1973).

Standing to raise question of constitutionality. — One cannot raise the question of constitutionality of a statute, or of the action of an administrative agency acting under statutory power, as violative of constitutional rights, unless the interest or rights of such complaining party are affected by the statute or the action of the agency. West v. Housing Auth., 211 Ga. 133, 84 S.E.2d 30 (1954).

Framing of question as to constitutionality of statute. — When question as to constitutionality of statute is properly raised by attacking specific Code sections as denying the defendant equal protection and due process of law as guaranteed by the Constitution of Georgia and the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, and the answer clearly points out wherein the statute violates the constitutional provisions, the court cannot refuse to consider the question merely because it fails to point out the exact location of the due process and the equal protection clauses in the Constitutions. Buchanan v. Heath, 210 Ga. 410, 80 S.E.2d 393 (1954).

Counties are not persons as against state within meaning of constitutional provision guaranteeing due process to all persons. Bibb County v. Hancock, 211 Ga. 429, 86 S.E.2d 511 (1955).

Due process does not require action against defendant be brought in county of defendant's residence. Dependable Ins. Co. v. Gibbs, 218 Ga. 305, 127 S.E.2d 454 (1962).

Legislation that proof of fact constitutes prima-facie evidence of main fact in issue valid if rational connection. — State legislation declaring that proof of one fact or a group of facts shall constitute prima-facie evidence of the main or ultimate fact in issue is valid if there is a rational connection between what is proved and what is to be inferred. If the presumption is not unreasonable and is not made conclusive of the rights of the person against whom raised, it does not constitute a denial of due process of law. Reid v. Perkerson, 207 Ga. 27, 60 S.E.2d 151 (1950).

Statute purporting to determine conclusive evidence void as unauthorized invasion of court function. — Insofar as former Civil Code 1910, § 1790, purported to make an official analysis of fertilizers by the state chemist conclusive evidence, it was an unauthorized invasion of the functions of the courts, and is void as violative of this paragraph, because it is an unauthorized attempt to legislate the truth of facts upon which the rights of parties are made to depend in judicial investigations. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Raines, 171 Ga. 154, 155 S.E. 484 (1930).

Final judgment concerning nonresident juveniles. — When nonresident juveniles are ordered after the adjudicatory hearing to be transferred to the juvenile court authorities of another state, the judgment is final and dismissal of the appeal as not being from a final judgment constitutes deprivation of constitutional due process. G.W. v. State, 233 Ga. 274, 210 S.E.2d 805 (1974).

O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(4) is not void for vagueness and not violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution or the due process clause of the Constitution of the State of Georgia. Scott v. Walker, 253 Ga. 695, 324 S.E.2d 187 (1985) (percentage by weight of alcohol in driver's blood).

Access to courts. — The 1987 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 9-3-73, which altered tolling provisions otherwise applicable to tort claims by injured minors in cases in which tort claims arose from health care professionals' malpractice, did not violate a brain-damaged child's right to equal protection or right of access to the courts. Smith v. Cobb County-Kennestone Hosp. Auth., 262 Ga. 566, 423 S.E.2d 235 (1992).

Although a court may in some circumstances issue sua sponte dismissals pursuant to its inherent authority recognized in O.C.G.A. § 15-6-9(8), a blanket prefilig order entered outside of a pending suit, imposing restrictions on the pro se right of access, may not be issued without a hearing on the court's contemplated action. In re Carter, 235 Ga. App. 551, 510 S.E.2d 91 (1998).

Abstention by federal courts. — Since Georgia decisional law extends due process protections beyond what federal due process alone affords, abstention by federal courts is warranted with regard to Georgia due process claims involving provisions which have never been construed by Georgia courts. Fields v. Rockdale County, 785 F.2d 1558 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 984, 107 S. Ct. 571, 93 L. Ed. 2d 575 (1986).

Child testimony statute not vague. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not violate the due process clause of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I on its face and is not void for vagueness and uncertainty. Weathersby v. State, 262 Ga. 126, 414 S.E.2d 200 (1992).

County homestead tax exemptions did not violate due process. — County homestead exemptions from ad valorem and education taxes did not violate due process or equal protection because they were rationally related to the legitimate government interests of the encouragement of neighborhood preservation, continuity, and stability, and the protection of reliance interest of existing homeowners, and the limits placed on the exemptions were not arbitrary. Blevins v. Dade County Bd. of Tax Assessors, 288 Ga. 113, 702 S.E.2d 145 (2010).

Privatization of probation services. — In a suit brought by misdemeanor defendants challenging the privatization of probation services under O.C.G.A. § 42-8-100(g)(1), the Georgia Supreme Court agreed with the trial court that § 42-8-100(g)(1) was not unconstitutional on the statute's face and did not offend due process or equal protection nor condone imprisonment for debt. Sentinel Offender Svcs., LLC v. Glover, No. S14A1271, S14X1272, 2014 Ga. LEXIS 940 (Nov. 24, 2014).

Necessity for Notice and Hearing

Nothing short of notice of proceeding and opportunity to be heard in opposition thereto will satisfy due process clause of the state Constitution. Keenan v. Hardison, 245 Ga. 599, 266 S.E.2d 205 (1980).

Because the trustees for the property at issue, a parcel of property used for religious purposes, never received notice of a tax sale concerning the property, their due process rights were violated, making the sale of that property void. Marathon Inv.

Corp. v. Spinkston, 281 Ga. 888, 644 S.E.2d 133 (2007).

Fundamental idea of “due process of law” is that of “notice” and “hearing.” City of Macon v. Ries, 179 Ga. 320, 176 S.E. 21 (1934), overruled on other grounds, Derrick v. Campbell, 219 Ga. 795, 136 S.E.2d 381 (1964); Dependable Ins. Co. v. Gibbs, 218 Ga. 305, 127 S.E.2d 454 (1962); Mulcay v. Murray, 219 Ga. 747, 136 S.E.2d 129 (1964); Blocker v. Blackburn, 228 Ga. 285, 185 S.E.2d 56 (1971).

As matter of right when one's property rights involved. — Due process of law, as guaranteed by this paragraph of the Constitution, includes notice and hearing as a matter of right when one's property rights are involved. Sikes v. Pierce, 212 Ga. 567, 94 S.E.2d 427 (1956); Atlantic Ref. Co. v. Spears, 214 Ga. 126, 103 S.E.2d 547 (1958); Dansby v. Dansby, 222 Ga. 118, 149 S.E.2d 252 (1966); Blocker v. Blackburn, 228 Ga. 285, 185 S.E.2d 56 (1971); Hamilton v. Edwards, 245 Ga. 810, 267 S.E.2d 246 (1980).

Citizen must be afforded hearing before condemned. — The fundamental idea in “due process of law” is that of “notice” and “hearing.” It means that the citizen must be afforded a hearing before the citizen is condemned. There must be a hearing first, and judgment can be rendered only after trial. Citizens' & Contractors' Bank v. Maddox, 175 Ga. 779, 166 S.E. 227 (1932); City of Macon v. Ries, 179 Ga. 320, 176 S.E. 21 (1934), overruled on other grounds, Derrick v. Campbell, 219 Ga. 795, 136 S.E.2d 381 (1964); Morman v. Board of Educ., 218 Ga. 48, 126 S.E.2d 217 (1962).

Under due process clause without notice and opportunity to be heard, there is no jurisdiction to pass judgment. Citizens' & Contractors' Bank v. Maddox, 175 Ga. 779, 166 S.E. 227 (1932).

Valid, binding judgment cannot be set aside without notice and opportunity for hearing. — Due process requires that a valid and binding judgment cannot be set aside without notice and opportunity for a hearing being afforded the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered. Citizens' & Contractors' Bank v. Maddox, 175 Ga. 779, 166 S.E. 227 (1932).

Necessity for Notice and Hearing (Cont'd)

Statute complies with due process if the statute provides for notice and hearing as right. — A statute complies with constitutional provisions as to due process if the statute provides for notice and hearing as a matter of right, either in express terms, or by necessary implication. Robitzsch v. State, 189 Ga. 637, 7 S.E.2d 387 (1940); Kirton v. Biggers, 232 Ga. 223, 206 S.E.2d 33 (1974).

Notice and hearing not matter of grace. — The benefit of notice and a hearing required by due process before judgment is not a matter of grace, but is one of right. Citizens' & Contractors' Bank v. Maddox, 175 Ga. 779, 166 S.E. 227 (1932).

Medical malpractice claims. — In a medical malpractice action brought by a married couple, it was error for the trial court to dismiss the claims against two defendants because it found that the couple had abused the civil litigation process; nothing indicated that the couple had been given notice that the trial court intended to dismiss their claims for this reason, and Georgia law did not authorize a dismissal on this basis. Whitley v. Piedmont Hosp., Inc., 284 Ga. App. 649, 644 S.E.2d 514 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 626, 651 (Ga. 2007).

Requirements of due process are satisfied if a citizen has reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard, and to present a claim or defense, with due regard to the nature of the proceeding and the character of the rights which may be affected by it. Hancock v. Board of Tax Assessors, 226 Ga. 570, 176 S.E.2d 102 (1970).

An elementary and fundamental requirement of due process in any proceeding which is to be accorded finality is notice reasonably calculated to apprise interested parties of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections. Hamilton v. Edwards, 245 Ga. 810, 267 S.E.2d 246 (1980).

Due process concerns were satisfied by a trial court's order, which announced that a hearing would be held "to allow final argument as to whether" the land should be partitioned or sold and which directed the parties to be "prepared to present all evidence on all issues"; the order was clearly adequate to inform a minority owner that the trial court intended the proceedings to be a final hearing and that a ruling would be issued thereafter. Talmadge v. Elson Props., 279 Ga. 268, 612 S.E.2d 780 (2005).

When required notice allows or requires act or response within certain time. — When notice is required by law to be given to a party who has the right or is required to in some way act or respond to the notice within a prescribed period of time, the date of the notice must run from the date of its receipt unless there is an express statutory provision to the contrary. Hamilton v. Edwards, 245 Ga. 810, 267 S.E.2d 246 (1980).

Statute upheld if persons accorded notice and hearing applicable to cases of similar nature. — A statute does not violate due process of law if all persons to whom the statute applies are accorded notice and a hearing applicable to all cases of a similar nature. Southern Ry. v. Overnite Transp. Co., 223 Ga. 825, 158 S.E.2d 387 (1967).

Procedural due process of law does not require "preseizure" hearing in cases of contraband condemnation. Tant v. State, 247 Ga. 264, 275 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Forfeiture provision affords adequate notice and hearing to comport with due process. — O.C.G.A. § 16-13-49 affords adequate notice and adequate hearing so as to comport with due process of law as required by the federal Constitution and the Georgia Constitution. Tant v. State, 247 Ga. 264, 275 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

The fact that the owner of property sought to be condemned under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-49 had adequate notice and an opportunity for hearing is apparent from the facts of the owner's timely filing of a response to the condemnation petition and the owner's presentation of oral testimony at the hearing. Tant v. State, 247 Ga. 264, 275 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Notice by publication under § 48-4-46. — It is not presumed that the General Assembly intended to enable a tax sale purchaser to forego any methods of notice of foreclosure of the right to redeem which might be required by the due process clause, and the words “for any reason” in O.C.G.A. § 48-4-46(c) are construed to mean that notice by publication is permissible only if a sheriff’s inability to effect personal service satisfies the constitutional mandate of due process. Hamilton v. Renewed Hope, Inc., 277 Ga. 465, 589 S.E.2d 81 (2003).

In post-seizure cases only reasonable notice and reasonably fair opportunity for hearing before forfeiture required. — All that procedural due process of law requires in “post-seizure” cases is notice and a hearing at which the owner or other party having an interest to be protected can appear and present a claim to the property being condemned. Any stipulated period of time as notice is not constitutionally required. All that is required by due process of law is that the affected party have reasonable notice and a reasonably fair opportunity for a hearing before the vehicle or other property is forfeited for a violation of the law. Tant v. State, 247 Ga. 264, 275 S.E.2d 312 (1981).

Whether or not one is deprived of fundamental right to fair hearing depends upon facts of each case. Brownlee v. Williams, 233 Ga. 548, 212 S.E.2d 359 (1975).

Overlap in judicial and prosecutory functions not per se violative of due process. — It is not unusual at administrative type hearings to have considerable overlap in judicial and prosecutory functions. Such is not per se violative of due process. Brownlee v. Williams, 233 Ga. 548, 212 S.E.2d 359 (1975).

When due process denied. — If a body vested with a duty to make judgments has unlawfully delegated that responsibility to another, or if the inseparation of judicial and prosecutory functions engenders a biased hearing, due process is denied. Brownlee v. Williams, 233 Ga. 548, 212 S.E.2d 359 (1975).

Banning expert from testifying. — In a medical malpractice action, the trial court was required to afford an expert notice and an opportunity to be heard before imposing the sanction of banning the expert from testifying. Whitley v. Piedmont Hosp., Inc., 284 Ga. App. 649, 644 S.E.2d 514 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 626, 651 (Ga. 2007).

Notice to and hearing of valid license holder required before revocation of license. — The holder of a valid license which has been properly issued may enjoin its revocation and the interference with the holder’s lawful business thereunder in the absence of notice and a hearing. Rose v. Grow, 210 Ga. 664, 82 S.E.2d 222 (1954).

Statutory procedure for garnishments comports with due process. — Constitutional due process requirements are adequately met by the judicial supervision and notice to the defendant mandated by the statutory procedure for garnishments. Garnishment of wages to satisfy alimony orders or judgments meets the demands of due process. Black v. Black, 245 Ga. 281, 264 S.E.2d 216 (1980).

When notice and hearing implied. — Act providing for removal of commissioners of roads and revenues of a named county, by the judge of the superior court or the ordinary (now judge of the probate court) after investigation of charges preferred by 25 qualified voters, or by the judge of the superior court after such investigation when charges are made by the grand jury, did not violate the due process clause of either the state or the federal Constitution for lack of requirement as to notice and hearing, in view of the provision that the judge or the ordinary to whom the complaint was presented should cause an investigation to be made of such charges, “at which investigation the accused shall have the benefit of counsel, if desired,” since the provision quoted implied such requirement as to notice and hearing. Robitzsch v. State, 189 Ga. 637, 7 S.E.2d 387 (1940).

Notice of hearing presumed sufficient. — After a trial court indicated that the court sent a notice of a combined rescheduled hearing on a construction manager’s motion for summary judgment and a hearing on the issue of unliquidated damages to a condominium owner, it was presumed that such notice was sent and received in compliance with O.C.G.A.

Necessity for Notice and Hearing (Cont'd)

§§ 9-11-5(b) and 9-11-6(d), and the owner's mere contention that the owner did not receive notice of the hearing was not controlling and did not satisfy the owner's burden of showing that notice was in fact not received; accordingly, the owner's claim that the owner did not appear at the hearing because notice was insufficient lacked merit, due process was met, and the judgment entered from the hearing was affirmed. Blue Stone Lofts, LLC v. D'Amelio, 268 Ga. App. 355, 601 S.E.2d 719 (2004).

Due process clause does not guarantee to state citizen any particular form or method of state procedure. Hancock v. Board of Tax Assessors, 226 Ga. 570, 176 S.E.2d 102 (1970).

Constitutional validity of any chosen method of service may be defended on the ground that it is in itself reasonably certain to inform those affected or, when conditions do not reasonably permit such notice, that the form chosen is not substantially less likely to bring home notice than other of the feasible and customary substitutes. Benton v. Modern Fin. & Inv. Co., 244 Ga. 533, 261 S.E.2d 359 (1979).

Notice of process reasonably certain to inform excused when persons missing or unknown. — As examples of conditions which would not permit notice of process reasonably certain to inform and which would therefore excuse the use of a form of service falling below this standard, the United States Supreme Court cited "the case of persons missing or unknown." Benton v. Modern Fin. & Inv. Co., 244 Ga. 533, 261 S.E.2d 359 (1979).

Service of process insufficient. — Service upon a spouse against whom a temporary protective order had been granted under the Georgia Family Violence Act was insufficient. The original service provided the spouse with no notice of the allegations, and service upon the spouse as the spouse left a hearing in the case was improper under the rule insulating a party in attendance upon the trial of a case from service of process. Loiten v. Loiten, 288 Ga. App. 638, 655 S.E.2d 265 (2007).

Out of state ex parte proceeding not given effect. — When the putative father of an illegitimate child sought and obtained a decree of a Tennessee court declaring him to be the father of such child and creating the relationship of parent and child between the petitioner and the child, the decree showing on its face that it was an ex parte proceeding, it will not be given effect in this state as against the mother when she was not made a party in the proceeding, was not served, did not appear and plead, or otherwise waive service or consent to such decree or have notice thereof, as it was violative of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Day v. Hatton, 210 Ga. 749, 83 S.E.2d 6 (1954).

Authorization of suit against non-residents in residence when cause arose not violative of due process. — Georgia Laws, 1957, p. 649, § 1, which authorizes a suit against any person who is a bona fide resident of another state and who was a resident of this state when the cause of action related to a vehicular accident arose, is not violative of this section of the Georgia Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Crowder v. Ginn, 248 Ga. 824, 286 S.E.2d 706 (1982).

Jurisdiction over nonresident under long arm statute. — Under the long arm statute, jurisdiction over a nonresident exists on the basis of transacting business in this state if the nonresident has purposefully done some act or consummated some transaction in this state, if the cause of action arises from or is connected with such act or transaction, and if the exercise of jurisdiction by the courts of this state does not offend traditional fairness and substantial justice. Hollingsworth v. Cunard Line, 152 Ga. App. 509, 263 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

The long arm statute contemplates that jurisdiction shall be exercised over nonresident parties to the maximum extent permitted by procedural due process. Hollingsworth v. Cunard Line, 152 Ga. App. 509, 263 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

Showing of nonresident's "minimum contact" with forum state. — In order to satisfy the constitutional requirement of procedural due process, it must be shown that the nonresident defendant has some “minimum contact” with the forum state so as to make the state’s exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable. Hollingsworth v. Cunard Line, 152 Ga. App. 509, 263 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

Sufficient connection between defendant and forum state and reasonable notice to defendant. — The existence of personal jurisdiction, in turn, depends upon the presence of reasonable notice to the defendant that an action has been brought and a sufficient connection between the defendant and the forum state as to make it fair to require defense of the action in the forum. Hollingsworth v. Cunard Line, 152 Ga. App. 509, 263 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

Since a husband did not present any evidence demonstrating a lack of personal jurisdiction, there was nothing to refute the wife’s showing that the parties’ only marital domicile in the United States was Georgia and that the husband had come back to Georgia several times in an attempt to reconcile; therefore, the trial court erred in dismissing the divorce for lack of personal jurisdiction. Walters v. Walters, 277 Ga. 221, 586 S.E.2d 663 (2003).

Sufficient connection if suit based on contract with substantial connection with state. — It is sufficient for purposes of due process that a suit is based on a contract which has substantial connection with that state. Hollingsworth v. Cunard Line, 152 Ga. App. 509, 263 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

To the extent that a corporation exercises the privilege of conducting activities within a state, it enjoys the benefits and protection of the laws of that state; the exercise of that privilege may give rise to obligations; and, so far as those obligations arise out of or are connected with the activities within the state, a procedure which requires the corporation to respond to a suit brought to enforce them can, in most instances, hardly be said to be undue. Hollingsworth v. Cunard Line, 152 Ga. App. 509, 263 S.E.2d 190 (1979).

Hearing implies right to support allegations by argument and proof. — The hearing required by due process in its essence implies that one who is entitled to it shall have the right to support one’s allegations by argument and proof. City of Macon v. Ries, 179 Ga. 320, 176 S.E. 21 (1934), overruled on other grounds, Derrick v. Campbell, 219 Ga. 795, 136 S.E.2d 381 (1964).

If plaintiff had hearing complying with state law, no deprivation of due process. — The point that petitioner was unconstitutionally deprived of any due process right lost all its force when the plaintiff admitted that the plaintiff had a hearing, which complied with state law, before the plaintiff’s property was destroyed to abate a nuisance. Stephens v. City of Ellijay, 171 Ga. 612, 156 S.E. 253 (1930).

Local rules providing defendant is to appear for trial one hour from the time the court notified the defendant by telephone to appear provide for reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard and are not constitutionally defective. Archer v. Monroe, 165 Ga. App. 724, 302 S.E.2d 583 (1983).

Defendant waived due process argument by actually appearing and failing to object. — In an action in which defendant claimed that defendant’s due process rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I were violated when defendant was not given written notice of the intention to terminate defendant from the drug court program, defendant waived the issue by failing to object and by appearing at the hearing. Andrews v. State, 276 Ga. App. 428, 623 S.E.2d 247 (2005).

Statutory Notice of Proscribed Conduct

Statute must be definite and certain in its provisions to be valid, and when it is so vague and indefinite that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, it violates the first essential of due process of law. City of Atlanta v. Southern Ry., 213 Ga. 736, 101 S.E.2d 707 (1958).

Constitution does not require impossible standards of statutory clarity, and does not require more than that the language convey sufficiently definite warning as to the proscribed conduct when measured by common understanding and practices. If a statute is so designed that persons of ordinary intelligence who would be law abiding can tell what conduct must be to conform to its requirements and it is susceptible of uniform interpretation and application by those charged with the responsibility of enforcing it, it is invulnerable to an attack for vagueness. Watts v. State, 224 Ga. 596, 163 S.E.2d 695 (1968).

Statute must convey sufficiently definite warning as to proscribed conduct. — Due process only requires that a statute convey a sufficiently definite warning as to the proscribed conduct when measured by common understanding and practices. Jones v. State, 219 Ga. 848, 136 S.E.2d 358, cert. denied, 379 U.S. 935, 85 S. Ct. 330, 13 L. Ed. 2d 345 (1964); Lanthrip v. State, 235 Ga. 10, 218 S.E.2d 771 (1975); Constantino v. State, 243 Ga. 595, 255 S.E.2d 710, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 940, 100 S. Ct. 293, 62 L. Ed. 2d 306 (1979).

When uncertainty in statute amounts to denial of due process. — Uncertainty in a statute which will amount to a denial of due process of law is not the difficulty of ascertaining whether close cases fall within or without the prohibition of the statute, but whether the standard established by the statute is so uncertain that it cannot be determined with reasonable definiteness that any particular act is disapproved. Mixon v. State, 226 Ga. 869, 178 S.E.2d 189 (1970).

Sufficient definiteness of criminal statute. — A criminal statute that defines a crime with sufficient definiteness to enable one familiar with the acts made criminal to determine when the statute is being violated is not void as offending the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, or this section of the Constitution of Georgia. Farrar v. State, 187 Ga. 401, 200 S.E. 803 (1939); Lanthrip v. State, 235 Ga. 10, 218 S.E.2d 771 (1975).

Appellant, a juvenile, was not entitled to the dismissal of two counts of street gang activity based on the juvenile's assertion that O.C.G.A. § 16-15-4(a) failed to inform ordinary citizens of what associations with a criminal street gang were prohibited under the statute; the statute required that a defendant's association with a group be active and include the commission of an enumerated offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-15-13(1), and that provided a sufficiently definite warning to persons of ordinary intelligence of the prohibited conduct. In re K.R.S., 284 Ga. 853, 672 S.E.2d 622 (2009).

Even in penal statutes, due process requires only certainty and definiteness for common understanding act forbidden. — Even in statutes penal in nature, due process only requires that they be of such certainty and definiteness as would enable a person of ordinary intelligence to comprehend that the particular act the person proposes to do is forbidden by the statute. Campbell v. J.D. Jewell, Inc., 221 Ga. 543, 145 S.E.2d 569 (1965).

With application not as strict with respect to civil statutes. — Application of due process with respect to vagueness and uncertainty is not applied as strictly to civil statutes as to those penal in nature. The rule is that a statute may be too vague and uncertain to be capable of enforcement as a penal statute and yet may be sufficiently certain to set forth a rule of civil conduct. Campbell v. J.D. Jewell, Inc., 221 Ga. 543, 145 S.E.2d 569 (1965); Willis v. Jackson, 148 Ga. App. 432, 251 S.E.2d 341 (1978).

Vagueness challenges to statutes not involving First Amendment freedoms must be examined in light of facts of the case at hand. State v. Hudson, 247 Ga. 36, 273 S.E.2d 616 (1981).

Statutory crime of reckless conduct sufficiently definite. — Former Code 1933, § 26-2910 (see now O.C.G.A. § 16-5-60) was sufficiently definite to give a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice that such conduct was forbidden by the statute. Horowitz v. State, 243 Ga. 441, 254 S.E.2d 828 (1979).

Statutory crime of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute not indefinite. — O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(j)(1), prohibiting possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, is not vague and uncertain, and does not violate due process. Walker v. State, 261 Ga. 739, 410 S.E.2d 422 (1991).

Standard for lawyer's conduct not vague or overbroad. — The standard providing that a lawyer shall not without just cause to the detriment of the lawyer's client willfully abandon or willfully disregard a legal matter entrusted to the lawyer, or so continuously neglect a legal matter as to be tantamount or equivalent to willfulness is not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad. In re Sliz, 246 Ga. 797, 273 S.E.2d 177 (1980).

Revocation of liquor license. — That part of the Jasper, Ga., Alcoholic Beverages Ordinance that authorized license revocation for any legal violation that the city council determined to have occurred violated due process principles and could not stand; there were no limits on the council's discretionary revocation authority and no "ascertainable standards" to guide or limit the grounds for the council's decision. Folsom v. City of Jasper, 279 Ga. 260, 612 S.E.2d 287 (2005).

Interim ethics rule not void for vagueness. — Good and sufficient cause standard in Interim Ethics Rules 505-2-.03(1)(o), Ga. Comp. R. & Regs. r. 505-2-.03(1)(o), which permitted suspension or revocation of an educator's certificate, was not void for vagueness as it gave a School Superintendent notice that the Superintendent's decision to bypass the sheriff's department and brandish a firearm and threaten a suspect of criminal activity on a public highway during school hours could constitute "good and sufficient cause" for the suspension of an educator certificate. Prof'l Stds. Comm'n v. Alberson, 273 Ga. App. 1, 614 S.E.2d 132 (2005).

Provision relieving surety of liability after final judgment not void for uncertainty. — Although former Code 1933, § 27-904 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-6-31) failed to describe the procedure by which the surety may be relieved after final judgment, it was not on this account void for uncertainty and indefiniteness as it named the court in which the relief must be had as being the same court rendering the final judgment, and made it mandatory for that court to relieve the surety, thus requiring the court to act in such manner as a court may properly act to effectually grant such relief, and to the extent that the act was silent, the provisions of former Code 1933, § 3-105 (see now O.C.G.A. § 9-2-3) may be resorted to. Fields v. Arnall, 199 Ga. 491, 34 S.E.2d 692 (1945).

Sufficient definiteness of "place of amusement" to be basis of criminal prosecution. — The words "place of amusement" in former Act forbidding establishment of certain businesses outside municipal limits without obtaining a license from municipal authorities were not so vague and indefinite that they could not be made the basis of a criminal prosecution. Ingram v. State, 193 Ga. 565, 19 S.E.2d 493 (1942).

Statutory prohibition of harassing phone calls comports with due process. — Ga. L. 1968, p. 1249, § 1 and Ga. L. 1968, p. 9, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 16-11-39.1 and 46-5-21), which prohibit telephone calls for the purpose of harassing, are clear and can be readily understood by people of ordinary intelligence seeking to avoid their violation, and therefore these sections are not unconstitutionally vague or broad and do not violate due process. Constantino v. State, 243 Ga. 595, 255 S.E.2d 710, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 940, 100 S. Ct. 293, 62 L. Ed. 2d 306 (1979).

Vagueness of ordinance forbidding disorderly conduct. — An ordinance forbidding "anyone to engage in or do anything that is disorderly, either by words or unbecoming conduct at any place on any street, alley, park, or any place where such disorderly conduct may be seen or heard by any person in any said city," is too vague and indefinite to be the basis for the infliction of corporal punishment, such as service on a city chain gang, or the imposition of a fine as an alternative. Griffin v. Smith, 184 Ga. 871, 193 S.E. 777 (1937).

Definition and determination of alimony comports with due process. — Because the legislative intent was clear and the statute provided "fair notice" of its meaning, former Code 1933, § 30-201 (see now O.C.G.A. § 19-6-1) did not violate the due process clause of the state or federal Constitution. Davenport v. Davenport,

Statute proscribing inducement to parents to part with children. — The terms of O.C.G.A. § 19-8-24, making it unlawful to directly or indirectly hold out an inducement to parents to part with children, were sufficiently clear to apprise defendant that offering an automobile to a parent in exchange for physical custody or control of the child was proscribed. Douglas v. State, 263 Ga. 748, 438 S.E.2d 361 (1994).

Terms “nuisance” and “offensive.” — Term “nuisance” itself had a definite and determined meaning in the law, and was not indefinite, vague, or uncertain; furthermore, the term “offensive” did not render a nuisance standard unconstitutionally vague; thus, Glynn County, Ga., Ordinance § 2-16-237 was not unconstitutionally vague. Stanfield v. Glynn County, 280 Ga. 785, 631 S.E.2d 374 (2006).

For involuntary mental hospital commitment clear and convincing standard of proof required. — Precepts of due process require a clear and convincing standard of proof in a civil proceeding to commit an individual to a mental hospital involuntarily. Pitts v. State, 151 Ga. App. 691, 261 S.E.2d 435 (1979).

Trial court had for the court’s consideration the evidence of numerous prior commitments for psychiatric treatment, evidence that following release from such structured treatment defendant had suffered decompensation and had often become violent and aggressive toward others or the defendant personally when not undergoing a regular course of treatment and medication, even though the state did not affirmatively offer it or any additional evidence at the release hearing. Pitts v. State, 151 Ga. App. 691, 261 S.E.2d 435 (1979).

Statutory method of determining lunacy and appointing guardian compports with due process. — In view of the express requirement as to formal examination by inspection of a person alleged to be a lunatic, the statute prescribing ing the method of determining an issue of lunacy, and providing for the appointment of a guardian of one adjudged to be a lunatic, does not violate the due process clause of the state or the federal Constitution in that it fails to provide for any notice to the person alleged to be insane. Georgia R.R. Bank & Trust Co. v. Liberty Nat’l Bank & Trust Co., 180 Ga. 4, 177 S.E. 803 (1934).

Legislation may require judiciary to provide definitions. — One of the traditional functions of courts is to interpret and construe legislative enactments. There is no due process prohibition on the enactment of legislation which requires definitions to be provided by the judiciary. Bell v. Barrett, 241 Ga. 103, 243 S.E.2d 40 (1978).

Court’s duty to adopt construction of law sustaining constitutionality when capable of two constructions. — When a statute or an ordinance is capable of two constructions, constitutional under one construction and unconstitutional under the other, it is the duty of the court to adopt that construction which will sustain the statute’s constitutionality. City of Newnan v. Atlanta Laundries, Inc., 174 Ga. 99, 162 S.E. 497, appeal dismissed, 286 U.S. 526, 52 S. Ct. 495, 76 L. Ed. 1269 (1932).

Higher court’s appeal order improperly dismissed. — Superior court erred in dismissing appellant’s appeal without allowing the appellant an opportunity to be heard, in contravention of an order of the Court of Appeals and resulting in the violation of the appellant’s right to due process. Walton v. State, 207 Ga. App. 787, 429 S.E.2d 158 (1993).

DUI offenses. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant’s motion to quash the uniform traffic citation even though the citation did not specify whether defendant was being charged with DUI under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(1), known as “less safe DUI” or under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(5), known as “per se DUI” since those provisions were not separate offenses but were merely alternative ways to prove the offense of DUI; however, the trial court did violate defendant’s procedural due process rights to present evidence by telling the state to stick to proving “per se DUI” because the trial court indicated to defendant that it was not going to require defendant to defend against a “less safe DUI” charge even though it later clarified that the resulting conviction was for “less safe DUI.” Rigdon v. State, 270 Ga. App. 217, 605 S.E.2d 903 (2004).

Police Power — Generally

Regulation for promotion of public welfare under police power. — While the maxim salus populi suprema lex cannot be used as a mere pretext for the curtailment of constitutional safeguards still, when the maxim does apply, it acts as a limitation on the rights of the individual which otherwise would be beyond the power of the legislature to regulate or circumscribe. Ingram v. State, 193 Ga. 565, 19 S.E.2d 493 (1942).

Principle of laws passed under inherent police power. — When a law is attacked on the ground that it deprives a citizen of liberty or property without due process of law, the underlying principle of laws passed under the inherent police power of the government is that it is the duty of each citizen to use one’s property and exercise one’s rights and privileges with due regard to the personal and property rights of others. De Berry v. City of La Grange, 62 Ga. App. 74, 8 S.E.2d 146 (1940).

Due process clause not designed to interfere with police power. — Due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions were not designed to interfere with the police power of the state. Davis v. Stark, 198 Ga. 223, 31 S.E.2d 592 (1944).

Municipal ordinances must be reasonable; the limitations of the power of a city council in this regard are not to be measured by the more extensive powers of the state legislature. De Berry v. City of La Grange, 62 Ga. App. 74, 8 S.E.2d 146 (1940).

Municipal ordinances cannot be oppressive or unfairly discriminate. — Ordinances cannot be oppressive or unreasonable, nor can they unfairly discriminate in favor of one citizen or of one class against another. De Berry v. City of

La Grange, 62 Ga. App. 74, 8 S.E.2d 146 (1940).

Construction of ordinance imposing liability on property owners for injuries to third persons. — If a city ordinance can be taken and construed as meaning that the owner of any improved or vacant premises of whatever character and size, within the limits of the city, becomes instantly liable for injuries to third persons on account of and from the moment any trash, banana peeling, ice, snow, or what not falls upon the abutting sidewalk, without fault or knowledge on the part of such owner, it would manifestly be a rule so harsh and unconscionable as would render such municipal ordinance unconstitutional and void as violative of this paragraph. Ellis v. Southern Grocery Stores, Inc., 46 Ga. App. 254, 167 S.E. 324 (1933).

Prohibition on scalping tickets comports with due process. — By prohibiting the practice of “scalping” tickets, Ga. L. 1970, p. 172 and Ga. L. 1973, p. 196 was reasonably related to a proper legislative objective and consequently did not violate the due process clause of either the state or federal Constitution. The statute puts all sports fans on an equal footing in the race to the ticket window. State v. Major, 243 Ga. 255, 253 S.E.2d 724 (1979).

Statutes concerning illegality of possession of marijuana not violative of due process. — State has no right, under the guise of exercising police power, to invade the personal rights and liberty of the individual citizen by legislation which has no reasonable relation to a legitimate state purpose. If marijuana is a perfectly harmless substance, then its possession cannot constitutionally be made criminal. If marijuana is a dangerous drug, the state has a right to make its sale and use criminal. Marijuana is not demonstrated to be such a harmless substance that the legislature has no right to make its sale and possession criminal. Blincoe v. State, 231 Ga. 886, 204 S.E.2d 597 (1974).

Classification of cocaine as narcotic drug not violative of due process. — Classification of cocaine by the legislature as a narcotic drug, when there is scientific evidence to the contrary, does not violate the due process and equal protection clauses of the United States and Georgia Constitutions. Robinson v. State, 244 Ga. 15, 257 S.E.2d 523 (1979).

Right of legislature to make reasonable classifications of persons and things for purpose of legislation is clearly recognized by all authorities. The mere fact that legislation is based on a classification and is made to apply to certain persons and not to others does not affect its validity, if it is so made that all persons subject to its terms are treated alike under like circumstances and conditions. When provisions operate uniformly upon all minors who are employed under such circumstances as to come under the Workers' Compensation Act, who are 18 years of age or over, and who are not mentally incompetent or physically incapable of earning a livelihood, the fact that they do not apply to all minors, that is, all persons below the age of 21 years, in no way affects the validity of the statute under the provisions of the Constitution. Rourke v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co., 187 Ga. 636, 1 S.E.2d 728 (1939).

Basis for statutory classification must relate to legislative purpose. — When provisions of statute require hotels and inns charging $2.00 per day or more to provide outside fire escapes and make violation a misdemeanor, the amount charged the guests has no conceivable relation to the danger of fire, the danger the law seeks to avoid. The basis for statutory classification must relate in some degree to the purpose of the legislation; and the classification here is arbitrary, rendering the law unconstitutional. Geele v. State, 202 Ga. 381, 43 S.E.2d 254 (1947).

Justification for legislative classification and regulation of business. — Classification of businesses into different classes for legislative regulation is not justified by a mere difference in the nature or character of two businesses. A right of classification arises on behalf of the general public if a business is affected with a great public interest in which all of the citizens of the state are concerned and injury will result to the general public unless regulatory control is applied. Harrison v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 183 Ga. 1, 187 S.E. 648 (1936), rev'd on other grounds, 301 U.S. 459, 57 S. Ct. 838, 81 L. Ed. 1223 (1937).

Discriminatory requirement for business certificate. — Georgia Law 1937, p. 748, § 12 is discriminatory against individuals not connected with a partnership or corporation, since the individual would not be allowed to engage in the plumbing or steamfitting business without obtaining the certificate provided for by the Act, whereas a partnership or corporation would have the right to engage in either of the businesses if one person holding a certificate is connected with the partnership or corporation, whether or not that person is supervising the plumbing or steamfitting work done. Jenkins v. Manry, 216 Ga. 538, 118 S.E.2d 91 (1961).

No reasonable basis for discrimination between classes of persons. — There is no reasonable basis for requiring examination and licensing of plumbing and steamfitters who are not employees of public utility corporations, and exempting employees of public utility corporations operating in the territory covered by the Act. This is an unjust discrimination between classes of persons and renders the proviso in Ga. L. 1937, p. 748, § 16-A unconstitutional and void, as a violation of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Jenkins v. Manry, 216 Ga. 538, 118 S.E.2d 91 (1961).

Arbitrary declaration that home solicitors constitute nuisance and are subject to punishment violates due process. — To arbitrarily declare, without qualification, that every solicitor who goes to a private home to try to conduct an otherwise perfectly legal business is a nuisance and subject to fine or imprisonment is an unreasonable interference with one's normal legal rights, and is without due process of law. De Berry v. City of La Grange, 62 Ga. App. 74, 8 S.E.2d 146 (1940).

When Act purporting to amend city charter is void, ordinances adopted pursuant thereto are unenforceable. — Georgia Law 1951, p. 3074, which purported to amend city's charter, was too vague, indefinite, and uncertain in meaning to be enforced by the courts and was therefore void; and being so, the ordinances which the city adopted pursuant thereto were unsupported by charter authority and therefore unenforceable. City of Atlanta v. Southern Ry., 213 Ga. 736, 101 S.E.2d 707 (1958).

Need to specify what ordinance violates in order to raise question of constitutionality. — In prosecution for violation of city code provision making it unlawful to possess a lottery ticket, demurrer (now motion to dismiss) on constitutional grounds which does not specify by chapter number, section number or paragraph number, or in any other manner identify what law or constitutional provision it is contended is violated by the ordinance attacked is entirely too vague and general to raise any question as to the constitutionality of the ordinance insofar as it might contravene the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Smith v. City of Albany, 97 Ga. App. 731, 104 S.E.2d 488 (1958).

Officer empowered to order owner away from burning building. — Under the police power, a deputy sheriff is authorized to go upon private property and direct the owner to move back from a burning building. Veit v. State, 182 Ga. App. 753, 357 S.E.2d 113 (1987).

Police Power — Business

Right to transact business within realms or bounds not contrary to public health, safety, morals, or policy is property right, and a citizen's business is entitled to protection against discriminatory or prohibitive legislation. Jones v. City of Atlanta, 51 Ga. App. 218, 179 S.E. 922 (1935).

Trade regulation in exercise of police power within power of General Assembly. — It is within the power of the General Assembly, in the proper exercise of the police power of the state, to regulate certain trades or occupations, and not regulate others, unless the regulations are so unreasonable and extravagant that the property or personal rights of the citizen are unnecessarily and arbitrarily interfered with, without due process of law.

Business regulations void when without reasonable or substantial relation to general welfare. — Georgia Law 1937, p. 280, establishing a state board of photographic examiners, and providing, among other things, that except as to stated classes, persons desiring to engage in the business of photography or photofinishing must stand an examination and thereby qualify as to competency, ability, and integrity, and denouncing as a crime a violation of any of the terms of the Act, is unconstitutional and void as an exercise of the police power. The prescribed regulations are imposed upon a lawful business, and considered as a whole do not bear any reasonable or substantial relation to the public health, safety, or morality, or other phase of the general welfare. Bramley v. State, 187 Ga. 826, 2 S.E.2d 647 (1939).

Municipal bylaws and ordinances undertaking to regulate useful business enterprises are subject to investigation in the courts with a view to determining whether the law or ordinance is a lawful exercise of the police power, or whether, under the guise of enforcing police regulation, there has been an unwarranted and arbitrary interference with the constitutional right to carry on a lawful business or use and enjoy property. Borough of Atlanta v. Kirk, 175 Ga. 395, 165 S.E. 69 (1932).

If the facts and evidence before the municipal body at the time of passing the ordinance would authorize the exercise by that body of a discretion in passing or refusing to pass the ordinance, then a court should not declare the ordinance unreasonable, arbitrary, and void merely because the court should take the view that it would be best for the public that the ordinance should not be enforced. Borough of Atlanta v. Kirk, 175 Ga. 395, 165 S.E. 69 (1932).

Legislature may pass reasonable cemetery regulations. — In the exercise of the police power of the state, and in order to promote the public health and well-being, the legislature may pass reasonable regulations as to the establishment and operation of cemeteries. Arling-

Legislative power to regulate professions. — Portion of Act regulating the practice of dentistry which defines the making or repairing of appliances usable on teeth or as teeth, unless ordered by a licensed dentist as part of the practice of dentistry, did not violate this provision. Holcomb v. Johnston, 213 Ga. 249, 98 S.E.2d 561 (1957).

Contract bidding process. — Bidding insurer's summary judgment motion was properly granted as to its substantive due process claim against a county as the county's decision to throw out the entire bidding process was rational in light of the taint caused by a consultant's lack of a counselor's license under O.C.G.A. §§ 33-23-1.1 and 33-23-4. Benefit Support, Inc. v. Hall County, 281 Ga. App. 825, 637 S.E.2d 763 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0306, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 214 (Ga. 2007).

What due process requires prior to professional board's decision to initiate proceedings against professional.

— When an investigator was attempting to gain information concerning a doctor's fitness to practice medicine, due process did not require at this stage of the matter that the doctor be informed of the nature of the charges that have been made to the board or the names of the doctor's accusers, nor was the doctor denied due process because the doctor was not permitted to participate in selecting the documents to be collected by the investigator or to participate in the deliberations prior to the decision to initiate proceedings against the doctor. Gilmore v. Composite State Bd. of Medical Exmrs., 243 Ga. 415, 254 S.E.2d 365 (1979).

"Fair Trade Act" unconstitutional for violation of due process. — Georgia Law 1953, Nov.-Dec. Sess., p. 549, permitting a manufacturer under guise of protecting the manufacturer's property rights in a trade name and trademark to control the price of the manufacturer's product through the channels of trade into the hands of the ultimate consumer and into the hands of persons with whom the manufacturer had no contractual relationship violated the due process clause of the state Constitution. Cox v. GE Co., 211 Ga. 286, 85 S.E.2d 514 (1955).

Legislature empowered to regulate personal contracts in insurance industry. — The business of insurance is so far affected with a public interest as to justify legislative regulation. It is within the power of the legislature to regulate the personal contracts involved in such business. Harrison v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 183 Ga. 1, 187 S.E. 648 (1936), rev'd on other grounds, 301 U.S. 459, 57 S. Ct. 838, 81 L. Ed. 1223 (1937).

Ordinance requiring ice cream sellers to secure board of health permit comports with due process. — The provisions of the ordinance requiring those selling ice cream in a city to secure a permit from the board of health of that city is not unreasonable, unlawful, or void under state laws and the state Constitution. The health and physical welfare of many citizens would be endangered if milk products were not free from all infection. Wright v. Richmond County Dep't of Health, 182 Ga. 651, 186 S.E. 815 (1936).

Municipal ordinance prohibiting sales during certain times at certain place valid under police power. — A municipal ordinance providing that it shall be illegal "for any person, firm, or corporation to sell or offer for sale any goods, wares, merchandise, pamphlets, magazines, maps, or other article of value, on any Saturday between the hours of 12 Noon and 9 P.M. on any of the following congested sidewalks of said city," designating certain sidewalks and providing a penalty therefor, is a valid and reasonable regulation for public safety and convenience, under the police power of the city. It was not error to deny an injunction after plaintiffs sought to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance against them, on the grounds that the magazines sold and offered for sale were devoted to religious subjects, and advocated the adoption of a particular form of religion, the distribution of which was a part of their religious belief, and urged that to prohibit the sale of the magazines would be in violation of their rights of religious freedom under the state and federal Constitutions. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943).

Ordinance prohibiting pinball machine business not violative of due process. — Ordinance prohibiting the owning, maintaining, or operating of pinball machines and the like, authorized under the general welfare clause of the charter of the municipality enacted in pursuance of the police power of the state, is not violative of the due process of law clauses of the federal and state Constitutions, for any reason assigned, or void on the ground of unreasonableness, merely because the effect of the ordinance is to destroy and confiscate the business and property of the petitioner (distributing and leasing novelty machines used for pleasure and skill only), whereas other articles of pleasure and skill are not included in the ordinance. Woodward v. City of Lithonia, 191 Ga. 234, 11 S.E.2d 476 (1940).

Ordinance imposing occupational tax on linen rental service not violative of state or federal due process clause. National Linen Serv. Corp. v. City of Gainesville, 181 Ga. 397, 182 S.E. 610 (1935).

License to sell malt beverages is privilege, not absolute right. — The refusal of a license to sell malt beverages did not deprive the petitioner of life, liberty, or property as the sale of malt beverages is declared to be a privilege, and denial of a license did not deprive the petitioner of anything to which the petitioner had an absolute right. Harbin v. Holcomb, 181 Ga. 800, 184 S.E. 603 (1936).

License charge imposed by ordinance not deprivation of property without due process. — License charge imposed by ordinance on dairies, defined as those milking more than six cows, was not void as depriving petitioners of property without due process, nor as denying them the full enjoyment of their rights. Rossman v. City of Moultrie, 189 Ga. 681, 7 S.E.2d 270 (1940).

When ordinance fixing graduated scale of license fees violative of due process. — A municipal ordinance which uses the gross sales of the preceding year as a basis on which to fix a graduated scale of license fees for meat markets, and makes no provision for fees for meat markets not in business the preceding year, is unconstitutional in that it is discriminatory and violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Elder v. Smith, 188 Ga. 65, 2 S.E.2d 670 (1939).

Ordinance requiring laundry license applicant to give bond not unreasonable. — An ordinance which requires the applicant for a laundry license to give a bond when articles are taken from a city for the purpose of laundering is not arbitrary and unreasonable, and is not in conflict with the due process clause of the state Constitution or U.S. Const., amend. 14. City of Newnan v. Atlanta Laundries, Inc., 174 Ga. 99, 162 S.E. 497, appeal dismissed, 286 U.S. 526, 52 S. Ct. 495, 76 L. Ed. 1269 (1932).

Act prohibiting operation of public dance halls without license and permission to operate is not unconstitutional as denying “due process of law” or “equal protection of laws.” Poss v. Norris, 197 Ga. 513, 29 S.E.2d 705 (1944).

Failure of Act granting power to license to provide for review does not make it unconstitutional. — Even though an Act granting power to license occupations may not make provision for an appeal, this will not prevent a citizen who has been wronged by an arbitrary or capricious exercise of the power from seeking aid from the courts to protect the citizen from oppression, and the failure of the Act to provide for a review does not make it unconstitutional. Jenkins v. Manry, 216 Ga. 538, 118 S.E.2d 91 (1961).

Laws impairing vested rights violate due process but first in field gets no monopoly protection. — The due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions prohibit the enactment of a law which would impair vested rights, but do not inure to a person, first in the field, a monopoly in any line of business. Villyard v. Regents of Univ. Sys., 204 Ga. 517, 50 S.E.2d 313 (1948).

Constitutional guarantee of due process forbids action that curtails free competition or impairs value of private property. — Any statute which deprives a free citizen of the right to agree upon a price which the citizen will accept for the citizen's private property robs the citizen of the most valuable element of that property and renders private ownership a farce and is consequently unconstitutional. Cox v. GE Co., 211 Ga. 286, 85 S.E.2d 514 (1955), adopting the specially concurring opinion in Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

Protection of property right to contract and to agree on price. — The right to contract, and for the seller and purchaser to agree upon a price, is a property right protected by the due process clause of the Constitution, and unless it is a business "affected with a public interest," the General Assembly is without authority to abridge that right. Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

Though reasonable sale and distribution regulations allowable under police power. — As a health measure, reasonable regulations may be enacted by the legislature, applying to sale and distribution of milk under the police power of the state; but provision to fix the price takes from the seller and purchaser the right to agree upon the price of their choice. Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

General Assembly can authorize price fixing in business "affected with public interest". — Before the General Assembly can authorize price fixing without violating the due process clause of the Constitution, among other requirements, it must be done in a business or where property involved is "affected with a public interest"; and the milk industry does not come within that scope. Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

"Affected with a public interest" defined. — For an industry or any particular business to become "affected with a public interest," its business or its property must be so applied to the public as to authorize the conclusion that it has been devoted to a public use and thereby its use, in effect, granted to the public. Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

Milk Control Law price fixing provision violated due process. — Georgia Law 1937, p. 247, formerly codified as former Code 1933, § 42-523 et seq., insofar as it provided for board to fix the prices of milk, was in violation of the due process clause of the state Constitution. Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

Ordinance can vary utility service rates according to territory. — An ordinance which provides that rates for water service shall be higher in territory outside the corporate limits is not unconstitutional and void as denying "due process" and "equal protection" under the federal and state Constitutions. Barr v. City Council, 206 Ga. 753, 58 S.E.2d 823 (1950).

Ordinance increasing rates and fixing higher rates for nonresident water users not violative of due process. — When the city has the right under the city's charter to furnish water to resident and nonresident users, and to classify the rates for such service, an ordinance increasing the rates and fixing rates for nonresident users higher than for resident users, is not violative of the due process and equal protection clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. Messenheimer v. Windt, 211 Ga. 575, 87 S.E.2d 402 (1955).

Protection of complainant's rights when rates fixed by Public Service Commission are confiscatory. — When in a case properly brought it is shown that telephone rates fixed by Public Service Commission are confiscatory and protection by a court of equity is sought to prevent a violation of the due process provisions of the state and federal Constitutions, the court is required to adjudicate the question and to render a judgment that will afford the complainant full protection of its constitutional rights. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 203 Ga. 832, 49 S.E.2d 38 (1948).

Rate set by commission must reach point of confiscation for utility to show legally protected interest. Georgia Power Co. v. Allied Chem. Corp., 233 Ga. 558, 212 S.E.2d 628 (1975).

Public utility has standing to challenge rate schedule on ground that schedule is so low that it is confiscatory and denies the utility substantive due process. Georgia Power Co. v. Allied Chem. Corp., 233 Ga. 558, 212 S.E.2d 628 (1975).

Requiring extension of existing power lines beyond carrier's public service commitment violates due process. — To require extension of existing power lines beyond the scope of the carrier's commitment to the public service is taking of property in violation of due process. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. Georgia Power Co., 182 Ga. 706, 186 S.E. 839 (1936).

Empowering county authorities to control and regulate establishment of businesses not violative of due process. — Georgia Law 1937, p. 624 providing that no person should establish a public dance hall, boxing or wrestling arena, or amusement place, tourist camps, and barbecue stands, for money or profit, outside the limits of incorporated towns or cities of a certain minimum population without first obtaining the permission of the commissioners or other authority in charge of such counties, and conferring authority on them to grant or refuse such permission for such time or under such regulations as they might deem proper for the public good, to levy a license or occupational tax on those endeavors and to provide punishment for a violation of the Act was not violative of the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions, or the constitutional provisions vesting legislative power in the General Assembly. Ingram v. State, 193 Ga. 565, 19 S.E.2d 493 (1942).

Operation of service at reduced price at and for educational institution not taking without due process. — Operation of the laundry and dry cleaning service at reduced prices in an educational institution for the benefit of students and persons connected with the school, by the Board of Regents of the University System, did not constitute the taking, by the defendants for the state, of private property of the petitioners without due process of law, in violation of this paragraph and U.S. Const., amend. 5. Villyard v. Regents of Univ. Sys., 204 Ga.

When denial of application for operation of taxicabs violated due process. — Petition alleging compliance with all the requirements of a city ordinance for the operation of taxicabs, denial of application for permit to operate taxicabs though no objection was made that applicant had not complied with the requirements of the ordinance, and that such denial was without legal justification or excuse, was arbitrary, illegal and capricious and an abuse of discretion, depriving the applicant of due process of law, and that because of denial of the permit the petitioner is deprived of the right to pursue the petitioner's chosen livelihood and suffers pecuniary loss for which the petitioner cannot be compensated in damages, states a cause of action for mandamus to compel city officials to issue a permit. McWhorter v. Settle, 202 Ga. 334, 43 S.E.2d 247 (1947).

Business license tax. — A catchall category of "agent or agency not specifically mentioned" following a list of specifically covered occupations was sufficient description to include the occupation of using a talking cat to obtain economic benefits on the streets of the city. Miles v. City Council, 551 F. Supp. 349 (S.D. Ga. 1982), aff'd, 710 F.2d 1542 (11th Cir. 1983).

Gasoline distributor. — O.C.G.A. § 10-1-234, which prohibits a gasoline distributor from selling gasoline to another distributor at distributor prices, violates Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I in that it seeks to regulate a business not affected with a public interest. Batton-Jackson Oil Co. v. Reeves, 255 Ga. 480, 340 S.E.2d 16 (1986).

O.C.G.A. § 10-1-233(6), which restricts changes in management of gasoline dealers, is unconstitutional under the due process clause of the Georgia constitution in that it purports to regulate an industry not affected with a public interest. O'Brien v. Union Oil Co., 699 F. Supp. 1562 (N.D. Ga. 1988).

Plumbers. — Former subparagraph (e)(2)(A) of O.C.G.A. § 43-14-8 was unconstitutional insofar as it denied to formerly locally licensed plumbers the rights extended to formerly state-licensed plumb-

Pawnbrokers. — Gwinnett County, Ga., Ord. No. 82-11 served the public purpose of impeding the sale of stolen property, and its requirements were reasonably necessary to achieve that end and did not unduly oppress pawnbrokers; thus, it did not violate a pawnbroker's due process rights. Pawnmart, Inc. v. Gwinnett County, 279 Ga. 19, 608 S.E.2d 639 (2005).

Judicial supervision over proposed temporary deprivation of property, and notice and opportunity for early preliminary hearing after deprivation are necessary to guard against mistaken and illegal deprivations of property. This is true even when the victim of the deprivation is an alleged judgment debtor. Apex Supply Co. v. Johnny Long Homes, Inc., 143 Ga. App. 699, 240 S.E.2d 171 (1977).

Person not deprived of property without due process by erroneous state court decision after hearing. — When the parties have been fully heard in the regular course of judicial proceedings, an erroneous decision of a state court does not deprive the unsuccessful party of property without due process of law. Gilmore v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co., 179 Ga. 267, 175 S.E. 681 (1934).

Ordinance is unconstitutional if city board of commissioners given arbitrary authority to grant permits. — An ordinance is constitutionally defective if it grants to the board of commissioners of a city the arbitrary authority to grant a permit to dig a well to some and to refuse others by prescribing no rule or guide by which it may be impartially executed and which will preclude partiality. City of Hawkinsville v. Clark, 135 Ga. App. 875, 219 S.E.2d 577 (1975).

Though municipality may make reasonable rules and regulations and may require permits. — While a municipality may make reasonable rules and regulations for the protection, safety, and health of its citizens and may require permits for the exercise of its power of regulation, the grant or refusal of a permit to dig a well cannot be left to arbitrary discretion. City of Hawkinsville v. Clark, 135 Ga. App. 875, 219 S.E.2d 577 (1975).

Distinction between use of eminent domain and use of police power is that the former involves the taking of property because it is needed for public use while the latter involves the regulation of the property to prevent its use in a manner detrimental to the public interest. *Pope v. Property interest in government job. — When it is determined by the duly elected city officials that the best interest of the public can be served by discontinuing certain procedures for reassignment or rehiring employees, the public interest overrides whatever property interest the individual employees have. City of Atlanta v. Mahony, 162 Ga. App. 5, 289 S.E.2d 250 (1982).

Employment did not implicate substantive due process concerns. — School district employee's allegation of termination of employment did not implicate substantive due process concerns. Palmer v. Stewart County Sch. Dist., No. 4:04-CV-21 (CDL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35511 (M.D. Ga. June 17, 2005).

No property interest in accessing Georgia Port Authority terminal. — Truck driver's claim that truck driver was improperly barred from an authority's terminal was properly dismissed because the driver failed to show an enforceable property interest for purposes of due process and eminent domain jurisprudence. Gambell v. Ga. Ports Auth., 276 Ga. App.

Regulation of game fish in private ponds proper. — While ownership of fish in private ponds is a property right, it is not an absolute and unqualified right, and is bound by the limitation that it must always yield to the state's power to regulate and preserve for the public good. Thus, O.C.G.A. § 27-4-74 (sale, purchase, transportation, etc. of game fish generally), which functions to protect the stocks of fish swimming freely in waters of this state, is a proper exercise of the police power. Maddox v. State, 252 Ga. 198, 312 S.E.2d 325, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 820, 105 S. Ct. 93, 83 L. Ed. 2d 39 (1984).

Moratorium on commercial development and building permit standards violated due process. — County board of commissioners' building permit resolution and "moratorium" resolution on commercial development did not provide sufficient objective standards to meet due process requirements since the resolutions allowed the board absolute discretion to grant or deny permission for construction for commercial uses with no standards whatsoever to control that discretion nor did they provide any notice to applicants of the criteria for the issuance of a permit; therefore, the resolutions were void because they improperly allowed uncontrolled discretion by the board in granting or denying a permit application and were too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to be enforceable. Davidson Mineral Properties, Inc. v. Monroe County, 257 Ga. 215, 357 S.E.2d 95 (1987).

2. Taking Property for Public Use

Sovereign's taking citizen's property must be for public purpose with just and adequate compensation. — The right of the sovereign in the property of the citizen is hedged by two fundamental safeguards — the taking must be for a public purpose, and it must be attended by just and adequate compensation. This includes every species of property in which the individual has a right of ownership, whether real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal. Weiner v. Fulton County, 113 Ga. App. 343, 148 S.E.2d 143, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 958, 87 S. Ct. 393, 17 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1966).

In order to determine the value of land taken by a transportation department that contained deposits of kaolin, the proper method was not to multiply the number of units of kaolin by a fixed, projected royalty per unit, as the kaolin had to be valued separately from the land, and it was impossible to determine what the kaolin was worth until it was removed from the earth and processed, so this method would result in improper speculation. DOT v. Bacon Farms, L.P., 270 Ga. App. 862, 608 S.E.2d 305 (2004).

When land taken by a transportation department contained deposits of kaolin and a buffer zone was required around the land actually taken, from which kaolin could not be mined, the resulting consequential damages to the land's owner were not determined from the value of the kaolin that would be "lost" as a result of the buffer zone, because the proper measure of damages was the difference between the fair market value of the remainder before the taking and the fair market value of the remainder after the taking. DOT v. Bacon Farms, L.P., 270 Ga. App. 862, 608 S.E.2d 305 (2004).

Owner not entitled to hearing on necessity or expediency of taking. — The necessity or expediency of taking property for public use is a legislative question upon which the owner is not entitled to a hearing under the due process clause of U.S. Const., amend. 14 and the same clause of the Constitution of this state. Miles v. Brown, 223 Ga. 557, 156 S.E.2d 898 (1967).

Neither legislature nor municipality authorized to take private property without notice to owner of hearing before condemnation. — Neither the General Assembly of this state, nor any municipality thereof, has authority to suspend the due process clauses of the federal and state Constitutions and to provide for the destruction of private property without notice to the owner of the time and place of hearing, prior to any judgment of condemnation. *City of Atlanta v. Slum clearance project not taking of private property in violation of due process. — The slum clearance project inaugurated by virtue of Art. 1, Ch. 3, T. 8 and Art. 2, Ch. 3, T. 8 does not involve the taking of private property in violation of the due process clause of the state Constitution or of U.S. Const., amend. 14. Williamson v. Housing Auth., 186 Ga. 673, 199 S.E. 43 (1938).

Outdoor Advertising Control Act, O.C.G.A. § 32-6-70, is a proper exercise of the police powers, as it provides for compensation for property rights in signs which were lawfully in existence on its effective date. DOT v. Shiflett, 251 Ga. 873, 310 S.E.2d 509 (1984).

Comprehensive sign ordinance providing for removal of nonconforming signs effected an unconstitutional taking of private property without just and adequate compensation. Lamar Adv. of S. Ga., Inc. v. City of Albany, 260 Ga. 46, 389 S.E.2d 216 (1990).

Citizens may maintain nuisance suits against the state under the constitutional prohibition against taking or damaging private property for public purposes. DOT v. Bonnett, 257 Ga. 189, 358 S.E.2d 245 (1987).

Waiver of sovereign immunity when county creates nuisance amounting to inverse condemnation.

— Nuisance suits for injunction and damages can be maintained against a county under the constitutional provisions against taking or damaging private property for public purposes. Therefore, the Constitution provides for a waiver of sovereign immunity when a county creates a nuisance which amounts to an inverse condemnation. Duffield v. DeKalb County, 242 Ga. 432, 249 S.E.2d 235 (1978).

A county, unlike a municipality, is not generally liable for creating nuisances. Duffield v. DeKalb County, 242 Ga. 432, 249 S.E.2d 235 (1978).

Municipalities liable for nuisance damaging property and health hazards. — A municipality, whether exercising its governmental or its ministerial functions, is liable for creating a nuisance which damages property and imposes health hazards. Duffield v. DeKalb County, 242 Ga. 432, 249 S.E.2d 235 (1978).

Ordinance (Ga. L. 1913, p. 893) providing for abatement of public nuisances by city is not violative of paragraph. Curtis v. Town of Helen, 171 Ga. 256, 155 S.E. 202 (1930).

Claims concerning reasonable certainty of continuing nuisance amounting to unlawful taking of property to be heard. — When it is alleged, inter alia, that the construction, maintenance, and operation of an airport in a residential area and the flights of airplanes in connection therewith will constitute a continuing nuisance, will cause the residents irreparable and constantly recurring damages, and will amount to an unlawful taking of their properties without due process of law in violation of the state and federal Constitutions, a motion by the defendants to dismiss the complaint on the basis that it fails to state a claim and that it is anticipatory of future conditions is properly overruled by the trial court. Camp v. Warrington, 227 Ga. 674, 182 S.E.2d 419 (1971).

City commissioners authorized to abolish city roadways provided city liable for damages. — Neither charter amendment providing that city commissioners should have authority in their discretion to close up and abolish any city street, road, or alley, or part, thereof, provided that the city should be liable for damages to any property right of any person occasioned by the exercise of such powers, nor ordinance adopted pursuant thereto, was violative of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Jones v. City of Decatur, 189 Ga. 732, 7 S.E.2d 730 (1940).

County decision to acquire land with no effect on abutting landowners' rights. — A mere decision by the governing body of a county to acquire land for an authorized public purpose, without more, in no way affects the constitutionally protected property rights of abutting landowners, and does not trigger due process considerations of personal notice because there was no deprivation of property in any cognizable sense. Lindsey v. Guhl, 237 Ga. 567, 229 S.E.2d 354 (1976).

When other land uses cannot be considered in valuation in condemnation case. — It is error in a condemnation case to charge that the jury might, in estimating the value of the land taken, consider other uses to which the land might be devoted when there is no evidence authorizing the jury to find that it was suitable for any use other than that to which it was devoted at the time of the taking or from which a reasonable inference of suitability for other uses might be drawn. State Hwy. Dep't v. Howard, 110 Ga. App. 373, 138 S.E.2d 597 (1964).

Owner not entitled to recover business loss damages. — In a condemnation action, partial summary judgment was properly granted in favor of the Georgia Department of Transportation because an owner was unable to recover losses for business damages since the evidence showed that the owner was not actually conducting a business on the condemned land, despite the fact that a lease agreement between the owner and a lessee gave the owner some control over the business operations of a service station and store located on the property. Davis Co. v. DOT, 262 Ga. App. 138, 584 S.E.2d 705 (2003).

3. Taxation

Legislative power to impose income tax. — The right to impose an income tax is an inherent right of the people and there is nothing in the Constitution of this state which denies to the legislature the power to impose an income tax if it is levied without infringing some provision of that instrument. Owens-Illinois Glass Co. v. Oxford, 216 Ga. 316, 116 S.E.2d 293 (1960).

When corporation utilized state services. — Having accepted and utilized valuable state services, the corporation cannot consistently contend or successfully assert under the facts that its property (the taxes collected) has been taken from it in violation of the due process clause of Georgia's Constitution. Owens-Illinois Glass Co. v. Oxford, 216 Ga. 316, 116 S.E.2d 293 (1960).

State cannot tax property over which it has no territorial jurisdiction. — For a state to undertake to tax property over which it has no territorial jurisdiction is a violation of the due process clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. It would be a taking of property without due process of law. Davis v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 198 Ga. 550, 32 S.E.2d 180, 160 A.L.R. 778 (1944), later appeal, 201 Ga. 821, 41 S.E.2d 406, cert. denied, 331 U.S. 829, 67 S. Ct. 1353, 91 L. Ed. 1844 (1947).

Any effort to tax property wholly beyond jurisdiction would be in violation of due process clause embodied in the U.S. Const., amend. 14, as well as the similar provision of the state Constitution. Suttles v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 193 Ga. 495, 19 S.E.2d 396 (1942), later appeal, 201 Ga. 84, 38 S.E.2d 786 (1946).

Due process not violated because property owners subjected to taxation by Act extending municipal boundaries. — Act extending municipal boundaries does not violate the constitutional guarantee of due process of the law because it subjects property owners in the area annexed to taxation by the municipality; nor does it deny to such property owners equal protection of the law within the meaning of U.S. Const., amend. 14. Lee v. City of Jesup, 222 Ga. 530, 150 S.E.2d 836 (1966), cert. denied, 386 U.S. 993, 87 S. Ct. 1307, 18 L. Ed. 2d 337 (1967).

An Act which subjected a landowner to municipal taxation by including property within the corporate limits of a municipality did not violate the landowner's rights under this paragraph. As noted in White v. City of Atlanta, 134 Ga. 532, 68 S.E. 103 (1910), a resident of a city receives certain corresponding benefits and should share the responsibility of the municipal burdens. Schneider v. City of Folkston, 207 Ga. 434, 62 S.E.2d 177 (1950).

Unequal benefit did not violate due process. — County's approval of a tax assessment of each property in the county in order to pay for medical care for indigent patients did not violate due process and equal protection under U.S. Const., amends. 5 and 14 and under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. I and II even though not all taxpayers benefitted; the question of the benefit to each taxpayer was for the legislature except in extraordinary cases, and the instant case was not extraordinary. Greene County Bd. of Comm'rs v. Higdon, 277 Ga. App. 350, 626 S.E.2d 541 (2006).

Review of ordinances imposing occupational taxes. — The constitutional-ity and legality of an occupation tax is to be judged by its effect upon dealers generally, and is not to be construed as unreasonable because it is prohibitive upon certain financially weak persons; only those laws imposing occupation taxes the general operation of which is confiscatory and oppressive are to be declared unconstitutional. Solomons v. Mayor of Savannah, 183 Ga. 631, 189 S.E. 230 (1936).

That a seller, in order to obtain business at a distant city and compete with its local laundries, subjects the seller to unusual expense and makes little profit under adverse conditions, does not afford a basis for declaring arbitrary, prohibitory, confiscatory, and void an ordinance imposing an occupational tax as applied to a business which admittedly is in its infancy. National Linen Serv. Corp. v. City of Gainesville, 181 Ga. 397, 182 S.E. 610 (1935).

Graduated business tax based on reasonable classification comports with due process. — Provisions of a city ordinance imposing a graduated tax on those persons using vehicles on the streets for business purposes in addition to the business tax required of them, and also levying a graduated tax for doing business on the streets upon carriers for hire, was not violative of U.S. Const., amend. 14, Sec. 1 or this paragraph. The city ordinance did not make unreasonable and arbitrary classifications. Solomons v. Mayor of Savannah, 183 Ga. 631, 189 S.E. 230 (1936).

Ordinance imposing graduated license tax on right to operate butcher shops and retail groceries reasonable revenue measure. — Ordinance imposing a license tax on the right to operate butcher shops and retail grocery stores, classified according to a graduated scale based on the number of meat blocks, or value of stock and fixtures, respectively, and number of hours operated, and applicable to all persons operating businesses of the designated classes within the city, was a reasonable revenue measure, and not violative of former Code 1933, §§ 2-102 and 2-103 (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. I and II), and U.S. Const., amend. 14, Sec. 1. Ard v. City of Macon, 187 Ga. 127, 200 S.E. 678 (1938).

Maintenance Tax Act of 1937 not void because of classifications for taxation purposes. — Georgia Law 1937, pp. 155-167 was not void as violative of the equal protection or due process clauses of the state Constitution or the due process clause of the federal Constitution merely because, for taxation purposes, it classified carriers for hire and carriers not for hire separately, and charged different amounts for each class, or because it set up subclassifications based on the manufacturer's rated capacity of the vehicles used and fixed different rates of tax accordingly. Dixie-Ohio Express Co. v. State Revenue Comm'n, 186 Ga. 228, 197 S.E. 887 (1938), aff'd, 306

When municipality's refusing conducting of business violative of due process. — An Act allowing a municipality to refuse the conduct of a business, irrespective of its compliance with any regulations adopted for the proper exercise of such business, is violative of Ga. Const. 1933, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. II and III (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. I and II), unless a business may be held to be a nuisance per se. Jones v. City of Atlanta, 51 Ga. App. 218, 179 S.E. 922 (1935).

Act taxing operation of motor-trucks for hire, but exempting persons hauling farm products exclusively not violative of due process. — The tax imposed on those operating motor-trucks or trailers for transportation of freight for hire with exclusion of haulers of farm produce, livestock, and fertilizers exclusively (Ga. L. 1927, p. 56, § 2, Para. 75A) did not violate Ga. Const. 1877, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. II, Para. I), U.S. Const., amend. 14, Sec. 1, or this paragraph. Exemption from operation of a tax is allowable when the exemption is not arbitrary and is based upon some good reason. Southern Transf. Co. v. Harrison, 171 Ga. 358, 155 S.E. 338 (1930).

Nonresident's intangible property taxable if integral part of local business. — Intangible property of a nonresident may be taxed in this state, consistently with U.S. Const., amend. 14 and the similar or due process clause of the Constitution of Georgia, if it is so used as to become an integral part of some local business conducted by the nonresident or the nonresident's agent. Suttles v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 193 Ga. 495, 19 S.E.2d 396 (1942), later appeal, 201 Ga. 84, 38 S.E.2d 786 (1946).

Credits or accounts receivable of nonresident corporation engaged in business in Georgia taxable. — When a nonresident corporation engaged in business in this state becomes the owner of accounts receivable arising out of the business conducted in this state, such credits or accounts receivable have a tax situs in the county wherein such business is conducted, notwithstanding that the orders taken for merchandise sold in this state are filled, the shipments made, the credit of the customers passed upon, and the books of account kept, at a point without the State of Georgia. Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co. v. Davis, 196 Ga. 681, 27 S.E.2d 326 (1943).

Tax enforceable on nonresident corporation's accounts receivable with situs in municipality where business conducted. — When a nonresident corporation became the owner of accounts receivable arising out of business conducted in a municipality in this state, such credits had a tax situs in the municipality where such business was conducted, so that the enforcement of a tax upon the credits would not be contrary to the guaranty of due process or equal protection of the law in the state and federal Constitutions. Parke, Davis & Co. v. City of Atlanta, 200 Ga. 296, 36 S.E.2d 773 (1946).

Jurisdiction to tax intangible credits when no business situs is involved is in state of domicile of creditor and not of the debtor. Davis v. Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co., 198 Ga. 550, 32 S.E.2d 180, 160 A.L.R. 778 (1944), later appeal, 201 Ga. 821, 41 S.E.2d 406, cert. denied, 331 U.S. 829, 67 S. Ct. 1353, 91 L. Ed. 1844 (1947).

Loans with situs for ad valorem taxation in county where loan business conducted. — In a suit by a nonresident insurance company against county taxing officials to enjoin enforcement of assessments and executions for state and county taxes based on credits existing in the company's favor as a result of loans made by it on county real estate before the taxable period, but remaining unpaid during the period of taxation, the evidence showed without dispute that the loans had a situs for ad valorem taxation in the county in question where the loan business was conducted, so that to tax them in the county would not violate the due process clause of either the state or federal Constitution. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Suttles, 201 Ga. 84, 38 S.E.2d 786 (1946), cert. denied, 329 U.S. 801, 67 S. Ct. 490, 91 L. Ed. 685 (1947).

its taxing power. — Since a nonresident life insurance company employed a loan agent in Georgia on a salary basis to solicit and submit applications for loans and make reports concerning applicants and the proffered security in a fixed office or place of business in the state leased in the agent's own name, with the rent paid by the company through reimbursement to the agent on expense account, and in all negotiations in reference to loans the company dealt with applicants by communications passing through the agent as its agent, with the notes and security deeds prepared in the home office and sent to the agent for execution by applicants in Georgia, and, after their return to and approval in the home office, checks were mailed to the agent for delivery to applicants in Georgia, so that all loan contracts were thus finally executed in Georgia, and where as many as 19 long-term loans were so made during continuous existence of such agency, the company in making such loans was conducting a loan business in Georgia, and thus came within its taxing power, as to property derived from or used in such business. Hence, the credits arising from such loans had a situs for ad valorem taxation in Georgia where the loan business was conducted so that to tax them would not violate the due process clause of either the state or the federal Constitution. Suttles v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co., 193 Ga. 495, 19 S.E.2d 396 (1942), later appeal, 201 Ga. 84, 38 S.E.2d 786 (1946).

Taxation of domesticated foreign corporation's intangibles that acquired business situs outside state, and on which the corporation had paid franchise taxes out of the state, did not violate due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. National Linen Serv. Corp. v. Thompson, 103 Ga. App. 786, 120 S.E.2d 779 (1961).

Law recognizes right and power of municipal government to make reasonable classifications of subjects for taxation and to make subclassifications of such classes. But it does not permit an arbitrary classification, the basis for which has no reasonable relationship to the purpose for which classification is made. Elder v. Smith, 188 Ga. 65, 2 S.E.2d 670 (1939).

Classification of oleomargarine with tax on one class valid. — Former statute (Ga. L. 1935, p. 81) which placed oleomargarine containing generally any fat or oil ingredient in one class, and oleomargarine containing oleo oil from cattle, oleo stock from cattle, oleo stearine from cattle, neutral lard from hogs, peanut oil, pecan oils, corn oil, cottonseed oil, soy bean oil or milk fat in another class, and imposed an excise tax on sale or exchange of first class, but no such tax on the sale or exchange of oleomargarine composed of any of the ingredients named in the second class, was reasonable and did not constitute an arbitrary and discriminatory classification, nor violate any property right to deal in oleomargarine. Coy v. Linder, 183 Ga. 583, 189 S.E. 26 (1936).

Phrase "doing business" within corporate tax provisions not violative of due process. — The phrase "doing business" within Ga. L. 1978, p. 309, § 2 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 48-7-31 (corporate income tax) and 48-13-72 (corporate net worth tax)), which means any activity or transactions for the purpose of financial profit or gain, does not violate the due process requirement of either U.S. Const., amend. 14 or this paragraph. Chattanooga Glass Co. v. Strickland, 244 Ga. 603, 261 S.E.2d 599 (1979).

Provision for taxpayer's affidavit of illegality to tax execution and hearing comports with due process. — Former Code 1933, § 92-7301 (see now O.C.G.A. § 48-3-1), which provided that a taxpayer may tender an affidavit of illegality when any writ of execution for payment of taxes was issued and provided for a hearing in order to determine whether the tax was legally due, was not violative of the due process clause of the state Constitution or of the Constitution of the United States. Hicks v. Stewart Oil Co., 182 Ga. 654, 186 S.E. 802 (1936).

Ordinances making tax assessment for street improvement a lien upon the property is not violative of this paragraph. Baugh v. City of LaGrange, 161 Ga. 80, 130 S.E. 69 (1925).

Legislature can grant municipality power to make improvements and assess cost against abutting land. — An Act of the legislature granting charter power to a municipality to make public improvements such as sidewalks and street paving, and by special assessment and execution against the abutting land collect the cost therefor, does not deprive the owner of due process of law when the Act also permits the owner of such land to file an affidavit of illegality and thereby contest the reasonableness or the lawfulness of the assessment before payment is finally required. Lockridge-Rogers Lumber Co. v. City of E. Point, 214 Ga. 255, 104 S.E.2d 228 (1958).

Section of city charter which empowers it to assess the actual cost of laying or constructing a sewer line along one of its streets against the abutting property on each side of the street and which also permits the owner of such land to file an affidavit of illegality contesting the assessment, does not offend the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions, even though it permits the city to assess the cost without prior notice to the owner of such land and without first affording such owner an opportunity to be heard respecting the reasonableness or lawfulness of the assessment. Lockridge-Rogers Lumber Co. v. City of E. Point, 214 Ga. 255, 104 S.E.2d 228 (1958).

City's legislative authority to pave street and to assess company using street within taxing and police power. — City of Decatur, under the Constitution and general law of Georgia, and under the city's charter and the amendments thereof, had legislative authority to pave the city's streets and to assess a portion of the costs of such improvement against the street railway company occupying and using, with the consent of the city, the paved street, irrespective of the benefit to the company. The authority came within both the taxing and the police power reserved in the state. Georgia Power Co. v. City of Decatur, 181 Ga. 187, 182 S.E. 32 (1935), aff'd sub nom Georgia Ry. & Elec. Co. v. City of Decatur, 297 U.S. 620, 56 S. Ct. 606, 80 L. Ed. 925 (1936).

Due process argument untimely when no legal action instituted to prevent paving. — When a city, in conformity to legislative authority and the city's ordinances, paved and incurred the expense of paving a street occupied by a street railway company, and when the company, with knowledge that the city intended, in conformity to the city's charter and ordinances, to charge the company with a part of the expense of such paving, stood by and saw the paving done and the expense incurred without instituting any legal action to prevent the paving, it was thereafter too late for the company to avoid payment on the ground that enforcement of the assessment would deprive the company of its property in violation of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Georgia Power Co. v. City of Decatur, 181 Ga. 187, 182 S.E. 32 (1935), aff'd sub nom Georgia Ry. & Elec. Co. v. City of Decatur, 297 U.S. 620, 56 S. Ct. 606, 80 L. Ed. 925 (1936).

When property owner estopped from questioning assessment for improvement as confiscatory and void. — When a city has obtained jurisdiction to make an assessment against an abutting property owner's property for the purpose of paving a street, and all the provisions and requirements of the special Act authorizing such assessment have been complied with by the city, and the abutting property owner has been given fair opportunity to object to the street improvement and the assessment against the owner's property therefor, but fails to object and then stands by and sees the street paving improvements made at an expense to the city, without entering any objection thereto, the owner is then estopped to raise the question that the assessment was confiscatory and void in that the assessment deprived the owner of property in violation of the due process clause of the state and federal Constitutions, although under the facts of the case this point would have been good and could have been sustained had the point been raised in time. City of Waycross v. Harrell, 59 Ga. App. 615, 1 S.E.2d 681 (1939).

Fixing of cigar and cigarette prices by statute did not comport with due process. — Former Code 1933,

3. Taxation (Cont'd)

§ 92-2204(h) was held unconstitutional as being violative of this paragraph because fixing of prices of cigars and cigarettes by statute was not a reasonable means to the legitimate end of collecting tobacco taxes. Strickland v. Rio Stores, Inc., 243 Ga. 600, 255 S.E.2d 714 (1979) (decided before repeal by Ga. L. 1980, p. 10, § 37).

Former Georgia bank share tax scheme constitutional. — The 1975 Georgia bank share tax scheme did not subject banks to a tax classification that was so “palpably arbitrary” or “invidious” as to run afoul of the constitutional equal protections of the equal protection clause of the United States Constitution and the due process clauses of the United States and Georgia Constitutions. Roberts v. Gunter, 251 Ga. 276, 304 S.E.2d 369 (1983).

Statute creating special districts for the purpose of implementing a hotel/motel tax did not violate state and federal constitutional due process and equal protection guarantees. Youngblood v. State, 259 Ga. 864, 388 S.E.2d 671 (1990).

4. Zoning

Police power to zone to prevent future use not subject to question or requirement for compensation. — The police power of the state to zone property to prevent the property’s use for certain purposes in the future, as distinguished from the taking or damaging in respect to a use already in existence, is not open to question, and does not require the payment of any compensation. National Adv. Co. v. State Hwy. Dep’t, 230 Ga. 119, 195 S.E.2d 895 (1973).

Local government zoning power exercisable through different ordinances at different times affecting different areas. — Municipalities and counties which have had conferred upon them the power to zone property cannot always at one and the same time enact such a comprehensive scheme of zoning and planning as will particularly describe and embrace every piece of property by metes and bounds in the entire area of the county or municipality; but when reasonably and fairly done, such power may be exercised by the enactment of different ordinances affecting different areas at different times. Taylor v. Shetzen, 212 Ga. 101, 90 S.E.2d 572 (1955).

When zoning ordinance is clearly unconstitutional. — A zoning ordinance in which no language appears providing for hearing and notice of hearing to the property affected thereby is clearly in contravention to the constitutional requirements of due process, and is therefore unconstitutional and void. Bell v. Studdard, 220 Ga. 756, 141 S.E.2d 536 (1965).

It is prerequisite to validity of municipal ordinance that notice be given and an opportunity for a hearing be accorded to anyone who has an interest or property right in the property which may be affected by the zoning regulation. Sikes v. Pierce, 212 Ga. 567, 94 S.E.2d 427 (1956).

City’s zoning ordinance restricting mobile homes to mobile home parks and subdivisions was not preempted by the National Manufactured Housing and Safety Standards Act of 1974, 42 U.S.C. § 5401 et seq., because the city did not infringe on the federal government’s control over safety and construction standards for mobile homes; thus, a mobile home owner, who was affected by such an ordinance, did not suffer a violation of substantive due process rights. King v. City of Bainbridge, 276 Ga. 484, 577 S.E.2d 772, cert. denied, 540 U.S. 876, 124 S. Ct. 228, 157 L. Ed. 2d 138 (2003).

Zoning is subject to constitutional prohibition against taking private property without just compensation. Barrett v. Hamby, 235 Ga. 262, 219 S.E.2d 399 (1975).

Justification necessary for zoning classification. — As the individual’s right to the unfettered use of the individual’s property confronts the police power under which zoning is done, the balance the law strikes is that a zoning classification may only be justified if it bears a substantial relation to the public health, safety, morality, or general welfare. Lacking such justification, the zoning may be set aside as arbitrary or unreasonable.

Barrett v. Hamby, 235 Ga. 262, 219 S.E.2d 399 (1975).

For unlawful confiscation to occur, requiring that the zoning be voided, it is not necessary that the property be totally useless for the purposes classified. When the damage to the owner is significant and is not justified by the benefit to the public, the zoning must be voided. Barrett v. Hamby, 235 Ga. 262, 219 S.E.2d 399 (1975).

If the zoning regulation results in relatively little gain or benefit to the public while inflicting serious injury or loss on the owner, the regulation is confiscatory and void. Barrett v. Hamby, 235 Ga. 262, 219 S.E.2d 399 (1975).

Application of zoning ordinance unreasonable when change of circumstances since passage. — Evidence as to change of condition and circumstances since passage in 1939 of ordinance zoning the defendants' property for residential and agricultural purposes because of uses of the property adjacent to or near the defendants' property, was sufficient to warrant the conclusion that to apply the provisions of the ordinance of 1939 to the property of the defendants would render such ordinance arbitrary and unreasonable. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

Determination made under circumstances and conditions at time of case. — In determining the reasonableness of an ordinance based upon statutory authority, such determination must be made under the circumstances and conditions of the case at the present time, and not contemporaneous with the passage of the original ordinance. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

With burden of proof on property owner. — When it is claimed that a zoning ordinance is unreasonable as to a particular tract of property, or that a change of conditions has rendered the ordinance unreasonable when applied to the particular property, the burden is on the owner of such property to produce sufficient evidence from which the court can make findings of fact and law such as would justify a holding as a matter of law that the ordinance is arbitrary and unreasonable; there must be a showing of an abuse of discretion on the part of the zoning authority, and that there has been an unreasonable and unwarranted exercise of the police power. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

Diminution of value alone resulting from a zoning classification does not constitute an unconstitutional deprivation. Grados v. Board of Comm'rs, 256 Ga. 469, 349 S.E.2d 707 (1986).

Police power may not be exerted arbitrarily or unreasonably. — A statute valid as to one set of facts may be invalid as to another, and a statute valid when enacted may become invalid by a change in the conditions to which it is applied; the police power is subject to the constitutional limitation that it may not be exerted arbitrarily or unreasonably. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

Court of equity justified in restraining enforcement because of particular unreasonable application. — A zoning ordinance may in its general aspects be valid, and yet, as to a particular state of facts involving a particular parcel of real estate, be so clearly arbitrary and unreasonable as to result in confiscation, thereby justifying the interposition of a court of equity to restrain its enforcement. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

When application completely deprives owner of beneficial use of property, attack on validity of regulation sustained. — A zoning ordinance must not infringe the constitutional guarantees of national or state Constitutions by invading personal or property rights unnecessarily or unreasonably; and if the application of a zoning ordinance has the effect of completely depriving an owner of the beneficial use of the owner's property by precluding all uses, or the only use to which it is reasonably adapted, an attack upon the validity of the regulation, as applied to the particular property involved, will be sustained. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

Circumstances under which zoning ordinances have been held invalid, as applied to certain specific property, fall into three general classes: (1) when a small parcel of property is zoned for residential purposes, when it is entirely surrounded by commercial or business enterprises; (2) when property zoned for residential use is entirely unsuited for residential purposes; or (3) when the purpose of the ordinance is not to protect the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare. Humthlett v. Reeves, 212 Ga. 8, 90 S.E.2d 14 (1955).

Churches subject to reasonable regulations, but absolute zoning exclusion from residential area generally invalid. — Generally, any zoning ordinance that absolutely excludes churches from a residential area is invalid under constitutional guarantees. Churches are, however, subject to reasonable regulation both referring to property in the zone generally and to churches specifically, provided the regulations are reasonable and contain some standards. Rogers v. Mayor of Atlanta, 110 Ga. App. 114, 137 S.E.2d 668 (1964).

City not authorized to refuse property owner's permit for construction conforming to building regulations. — The Act of the General Assembly granting to the City of Albany power to regulate garages and filling stations and other businesses (Ga. L. 1923, pp. 412, 416), to license them only in localities as may be least offensive to the public, and to revoke the license when they prove dangerous and injurious to health, is in conflict with the due process clause as found in this paragraph, and is also in conflict with Ga. Const. 1877, Art. I, Sec. III, Para. I (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. III, Paras. I, II), which provides for compensation for private property taken or damaged for public purposes, insofar as the Act is interpreted by the public officials of the City of Albany to authorize a refusal of a permit sought by an owner of property to construct a filling station which conforms in every way to the building regulations of the city. Reynolds v. Brosnan, 170 Ga. 773, 154 S.E. 264 (1930).

When denial of building permit not deprivation of owner's property. — The denial of a permit to the owner of a residence lot to erect thereon a filling station, when the lot is located in a district zoned by ordinance exclusively for residences, apartments, churches, hospitals, schools, and hotels, is not a deprivation of the owner's property within the meaning of the due process clauses of the Constitution of this state and of U.S. Const., amend. 14, especially when a lot has been improved and used for residential purposes long before the passage of such ordinance. Howden v. Mayor of Savannah, 172 Ga. 833, 159 S.E. 401 (1931).

In a declaratory judgment action brought by a developer against a county seeking to invalidate an ordinance which required denial of the developer's land disturbance permit based on two soil-related ordinance violations existing, the judgment in favor of the developer was upheld on appeal with regard to the developer's claim for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, for alleged violations of the developer's equal protection rights in the county's enforcement of the ordinance. The trial court properly determined that the developer was not required to prove a valid property right with regard to the developer's equal protection challenge; the trial court properly awarded attorney fees to the developer under O.C.G.A. § 13-6-11 as the jury was authorized to award the attorney fees as an element of the damages it awarded on the developer's federal equal protection claim, regardless of whether the developer could prevail on any state law claim for damages; but the trial court erred by failing to address the merits of the developer's petition for a declaratory judgment since the overall enforceability of the ordinance, which was still the law, was not rendered moot by the withdrawal notice. Fulton County v. Legacy Inv. Group, LLC, 296 Ga. App. 822, 676 S.E.2d 388 (2009).

Notice of hearing required on rezoning matter before county governing authority. — A party must have due and legal notice of the hearing on the matter of rezoning before the county governing authority, the body which can rezone land and thereby deprive a party of the party's property rights. F.P. Plaza, Inc. v. Waite, 230 Ga. 161, 196 S.E.2d 141, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 825, 94 S. Ct. 129, 38 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1973).

Notice by publication proper and adequate. — Notice by publication of a rezoning hearing to be held by a governing authority of a county is proper and adequate insofar as the requirements of procedural due process and equal protection are concerned. F.P. Plaza, Inc. v. Waite, 230 Ga. 161, 196 S.E.2d 141, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 825, 94 S. Ct. 129, 38 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1973).

Notice not required for preliminary hearing before planning commission. — Defective notice or lack of notice of the preliminary hearing before the planning commission, which cannot rezone property so as to deprive a party of the party's property rights, is not violative of procedural due process or equal protection. F.P. Plaza, Inc. v. Waite, 230 Ga. 161, 196 S.E.2d 141, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 825, 94 S. Ct. 129, 38 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1973).

The amendment of a zoning ordinance accomplished pursuant to defective notice is without any legal force or effect, and the party requesting the amendment does not acquire any additional rights in its property due to the invalid amendment of the zoning ordinance. Yost v. Fulton County, 256 Ga. 324, 348 S.E.2d 638 (1986).

Rezoning not violative of due process when notice and hearing. — When proper notice is given and an actual hearing is had, the rezoning of property does not violate the due process provision of the Constitution. Atlantic Ref. Co. v. Spears, 214 Ga. 126, 103 S.E.2d 547 (1958).

Actual notice not required. — Landowner's procedural due process rights under the U.S. Constitution and the Georgia Constitution were not violated because, although the landowner did not receive actual notice of a cellular-tower application for the adjacent property, the evidence showed that notice was sent to the landowner's record address by way of certified mail. The county did not have a duty under the zoning ordinance in effect at the time to ensure that the landowner received actual notice. Sanders v. Henry County, No. 11-13717, 2012 U.S. App. LEXIS 14560 (11th Cir. July 17, 2012) (Unpublished).

Basis for review of zoning classifications. — The only basis for judicial review of zoning classifications is when classification is arbitrary and unreasonable. Classification by zoning ordinance does not violate due process when it does not appear that all permitted uses are impossible. Riddle v. Waller, 127 Ga. App. 399, 193 S.E.2d 895 (1972).

Standard for review of constitutionality of state land use regulations. — See Pope v. City of Atlanta, 242 Ga. 331, 249 S.E.2d 16 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 936, 99 S. Ct. 1281, 59 L. Ed. 2d 494 (1979).

Prerequisite requiring hearing before local zoning authority. — When a landowner alleged having a vested right in the manner in which the owner's property had been zoned, which would have allowed the owner to build the owner's proposed project, the owner was obligated to bring that claim before the local zoning authority before a trial court had jurisdiction to consider it. Since the owner had not brought that claim before the zoning authority, the owner's petition for a writ of mandamus to compel that authority to issue the owner the permit desired was properly dismissed. Cooper v. Unified Gov't of Athens-Clarke County, 277 Ga. 360, 589 S.E.2d 105 (2003).

City ordinance sufficiently definite. — Trial court did not err in granting a city summary judgment in a lessee's declaratory judgment action seeking an order declaring that City of Forest Park, Ga., Ordinance § 9-8-45 was unconstitutional because the ordinance was sufficiently definite so that a person of ordinary intelligence need not guess at its meaning; although the lessee contended that the phrase "without limitation of the generality of the foregoing" opened the definition of "public sidewalk" to include any space that the city later wished to assert fell under the ordinance, the specification of parking spaces and other areas intended for public travel did not permit the interpretation the lessee contended. Braley v. City of Forest Park, 286 Ga. 760, 692 S.E.2d 595 (2010).

Standards of intelligence, uprightness, and experience for jurors are not violative of the Constitution. White v. State, 230 Ga. 327, 196 S.E.2d 849, appeal dismissed, 414 U.S. 886, 94 S. Ct. 222, 38 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1973).

Selection of Juries (Cont'd)

Defendant may not complain of exclusion from jury of distinct class to which the defendant does not belong. — Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

Jurors' employment status held as race-neutral strikes. — Appeals court rejected the defendant's challenge to the state's use of peremptory jury strikes against two prospective jurors due to their unemployment, as this raised questions about their community commitment, a valid and accepted concern, and held such strikes to be race-neutral and free of discriminatory intent; further, a second juror was properly stricken on the basis of that juror's unemployment, and not because the juror was a homemaker, and the record showed that the state struck a white juror on the basis of the juror's periodic unemployment. Hodge v. State, 287 Ga. App. 750, 652 S.E.2d 634 (2007).

When jury commissioners remiss as matter of law. — Proportional representation of sufficient groups within the county is not required. However, when the evidence shows that in three major identifiable groups (sex, race, and age), women are 91.2 percent underrepresented in the grand jury pool and 69.7 percent in the traverse or petit jury pool; blacks are 49.5 percent underrepresented in the grand jury pool and 61.7 percent in the traverse or petit jury pools, coupled with the uncontroverted evidence from the jury commissioners that proportionally there are as many upright and intelligent women as men, blacks as whites, and young adults as those over 30 years of age, the conclusion that as a matter of law the jury commissioners were remiss in the execution of their statutory duties in compiling a jury list composed of "a fairly representative cross section of the intelligent and upright citizens of the county" is well-founded. Gould v. State, 131 Ga. App. 811, 207 S.E.2d 519, aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 232 Ga. 844, 209 S.E.2d 312 (1974).

Defendant has initial burden of proving existence of systematic racial exclusion in selection of jurors. Sullivan v. State, 225 Ga. 301, 168 S.E.2d 133 (1969), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 935, 92 S. Ct. 2854, 33 L. Ed. 2d 749 (1972).

No inference arises because no member of defendant's race on jury trying defendant. — The arbitrary, systematic, and purposeful exclusion of members of defendant's race from the defendant's jury cannot be inferred merely from the fact that no one of that race is on such jury. Heard v. State, 210 Ga. 523, 81 S.E.2d 467 (1954).

Nonwhite defendant not entitled to racially mixed jury with members of defendant's race. — A black, or member of any other race, who is on trial is not entitled to a mixed jury composed of members of the defendant's own race and members of the white race; no such right to a mixed jury is guaranteed by the due process and equal protection clauses of either the Constitution of the United States or of this state. Heard v. State, 210 Ga. 523, 81 S.E.2d 467 (1954).

Once prima-facie case of racial exclusion made, burden shifts. — Once a prima-facie case of racial exclusion in the selection of jurors is made, the burden shifts to the prosecution to disprove the existence of racial exclusion. Sullivan v. State, 225 Ga. 301, 168 S.E.2d 133 (1969), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 935, 92 S. Ct. 2854, 33 L. Ed. 2d 749 (1972).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude African-Americans. — The defendant was not denied due process of the law on the ground that the state used all of its peremptory strikes to exclude African-Americans from a petit jury. Avery v. State, 174 Ga. App. 116, 329 S.E.2d 276 (1985).

State proffered race-neutral reasons for exercising its peremptory strikes to strike four African-American women, which included: a possible familiarity with defendant's mother, a camaraderie with a witness in another trial in which both prosecutors participated, a concern that a prospective juror would have difficulty understanding the scientific evidence, inattention during voir dire, a possible preoccupation with a child at home, and sleeping during voir dire. Rakestrau v. State, 278 Ga. 872, 608 S.E.2d 216 (2005).

Appeals court rejected the defendant's claim that the state committed a Batson violation in peremptorily striking two jurors, as: (1) the state's reasons in striking the first juror appeared concrete and race-neutral and any question of doubt was decided in favor of the state, given the great deference to the determination that the state's reason was not so wholly fantastic as to be pretextual; and (2) a second juror was properly stricken based on evidence that the juror worked nights, appeared to be extremely fatigued, and actually slept through portions of the voir dire. Woolfolk v. State, 282 Ga. 139, 644 S.E.2d 828 (2007).

Action of jury invalid when impaneling not in compliance with law. — When the impaneling of a jury is not in compliance with law, the jury as a body is not competent to act, and its action is invalid. Allen v. State, 110 Ga. App. 56, 137 S.E.2d 711 (1964).

Sufficient race-neutral reasons existed for state's peremptory strikes. — While the defendant made out a prima facie case of racial discrimination regarding the state's use of three peremptory strikes, because sufficient race-neutral reasons existed for those strikes, the defendant's rights were not violated. LeMon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 527, 660 S.E.2d 11 (2008).

State cannot deliberately exclude identifiable, distinct groups from jury lists. — A defendant is not constitutionally entitled to a venire or jury roll of any particular composition, but U.S. Const., amend. 14, equal protection and due process clause, and U.S. Const., amend. 6, right to a jury trial, do require that the state not deliberately and systematically exclude identifiable and distinct groups from their jury lists. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

Burden is upon defendant to demonstrate that a particular class was the subject of discrimination in the jury selection procedures. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

Threshold question that must be answered by the defendant is whether the particular class constitutes an identifiable and distinct class for purposes of a jury challenge based on U.S. Const., amend. 14. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

In determining whether particular discrepancy is substantial or significant, some allowance may be made for the imprecision of the jury selection process and the operation of constitutionally inoffensive factors such as exemptions from jury duty based on occupation. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

In order to establish prima-facie case of discrimination, the defendant must demonstrate that there exists a substantial disparity between the proportion of blacks chosen for jury duty and the proportion of blacks in the eligible population and that the selection procedures themselves are not racially neutral. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

To shift burden of proof. — Statistical evidence establishing that blacks are underrepresented, together with evidence that the jury selection procedures are not racially neutral, establishes a prima-facie case of invidious racial discrimination thus shifting the burden of proof to the state. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

Batson challenge properly rejected. — Defendant's Batson challenge was properly rejected as the state gave racially neutral reasons for its strikes, including that a juror's recollection abilities were called into question and that the juror had to care for a dependent aunt, that a juror's son had recently been prosecuted for a driving under the influence charge, and that a juror was a social worker; defendant failed to show purposeful discrimination. Flanders v. State, 279 Ga. 35, 609 S.E.2d 346 (2005).

Complaint of exclusion of blacks from jury requires timely challenge. — In the absence of a timely challenge to the grand jury or the traverse jury, the complaint of exclusion of blacks therefrom is not reviewable. Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967).

Failure to object at trial waives objection. — An objection on the grounds of systematic racial exclusion on grand jury should have been presented in a proper way at the trial, and upon failure to do so it is to be considered as waived and does not present a ground for habeas corpus. Wilcoxon v. Aldredge, 192 Ga. 634, 15 S.E.2d 873 (1941), later appeal, 193 Ga. 661, 19 S.E.2d 499, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 626, 63 S. Ct. 36, 87 L. Ed. 506 (1942).

In order for defendant's motion to quash the indictment and challenge to the array of the grand jurors to be entertained by the trial court, it must be made prior to the return of the indictment or the defendant must show that the defendant had no knowledge, either actual or constructive, of such alleged illegal composition of the grand jury prior to the time the indictment was returned; otherwise, the objection is deemed to be waived. Sanders v. State, 235 Ga. 425, 219 S.E.2d 768 (1975).

Correctional officers. — It is not error to refuse to dismiss for cause correctional officers. Kent v. State, 179 Ga. App. 131, 345 S.E.2d 669 (1986).

Comment by court during voir dire. — When, in ruling on a voir dire question, the trial court stated that "The defendant is the one that's injected race into the case. The state hasn't," and defendant argued that the comment put a chill on the voir dire process, denying the defendant an opportunity to get a racially unbiased jury in denial of the defendant's due process rights, it was held that the record did not show either that the court's comment somehow abridged the scope or effectiveness of the defendant's voir dire questions or that the court's comment prejudiced the minds of the jurors against the defendant. Walker v. State, 258 Ga. 443, 370 S.E.2d 149 (1988).

Juror's statement of impartiality. — Because defendant waived an objection to the trial court's ruling on the scope of defendant's cross-examination of a witness by failing to object, and because a juror stated that the juror could be fair and impartial when hearing the case, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Pinckney v. State, 285 Ga. 458, 678 S.E.2d 480 (2009).

Application1. In General

Service on registered agent of corporation. — The method of service properly authorized under former § 14-2-62(b) (see now O.C.G.A. § 14-2-504) is not subject to constitutional attack because it is in itself reasonably certain to inform those affected and is not substantially less likely to bring home notice than other of the feasible and customary substitutes. Frazier v. HMZ Property Mgt., Inc., 161 Ga. App. 195, 291 S.E.2d 4 (1982).

O.C.G.A. § 40-6-120 was unconstitutionally vague. — In light of the conflict in the language of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-120(a)(2), a person of common intelligence could not determine with reasonable definiteness that the statute prohibits the making of a left turn into the right lane of a multi-lane roadway. Accordingly, § 40-6-120(a)(2) is too vague to be enforced against a driver of a vehicle making a left turn into a multi-lane roadway that lacks official traffic-control devices directing the driver into which lane to turn and is, therefore, unconstitutional under the due process clauses of the Georgia and United States Constitutions. McNair v. State, 285 Ga. 514, 678 S.E.2d 69 (2009).

Patients had no constitutional right to dialysis treatment. — Trial court did not err in granting a clinic's motion under O.C.G.A. § 9-11-12(b)(6) to dismiss for failure to state a claim the patients' action alleging that the closure of the clinic violated the due process clause of the Georgia Constitution, Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, because the patients had no constitutional right to the dialysis treatment; even if the patients depended for their lives upon the free dialysis treatment the patients voluntarily received from the clinic for several years, the patients were not forced by any state-imposed restriction to become dependent, and the patients acquired no constitutional right to continue to receive the treatment. Andrade v. Grady Mem'l Hosp. Corp., 308 Ga. App. 171, 707 S.E.2d 118 (2011).

Process for commitment to state mental institution comports with due process. — Former Code 1933, § 27-1503 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-7-131) afforded a person due process of the laws prior to a final order committing the person to a state mental institution whether or not the person is committed temporarily to a state mental institution for evaluation. Skelton v. Slaton, 243 Ga. 426, 254 S.E.2d 704 (1979).

Release from state mental institution. — The provisions of former Code 1933, § 27-1503 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-7-131) disallowing the filing of another application for release until one year has elapsed from the denial of the last preceding application and allowing release only upon court order did not offend current concepts of due process or equal protection of the laws. Skelton v. Slaton, 243 Ga. 426, 254 S.E.2d 704 (1979).

Inquiry into sanity of person at time of acquittal must be conducted so as to afford person due process of laws. Skelton v. Slaton, 243 Ga. 426, 254 S.E.2d 704 (1979).

Sheriff can be held liable on bond for acts of deputies outside presence and without knowledge. — To hold sheriff liable on the sheriff's bond for the acts of the sheriff's deputies committed outside the sheriff's presence and without the sheriff's knowledge is not a violation of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions, notwithstanding the fact that the sheriff does not have unlimited power in discharging or removing deputies. Standard Sur. & Cas. Co. v. Johnson, 74 Ga. App. 823, 41 S.E.2d 576 (1947).

Statutory liability for failure to report what is not known violates due process. — Section providing that a section foreman shall be liable for double the value of the stock killed by the railroad upon the foreman's failure to post the required notice, not only makes the foreman liable for the failure to report that of which the foreman has knowledge, but goes beyond this to subject the foreman to a liability for failing to report the killing of stock of which the foreman has no knowledge. This is a clear violation of the due process clause regardless of the fact that the penalty shall be recovered in the manner provided by law for the collection of other claims. Buchanan v. Heath, 210 Ga. 410, 80 S.E.2d 393 (1954).

Statute holding automobile owner liable for operator's negligence violates due process. — Georgia Laws 1955, p. 454, clearly violates the due process clause of both the federal and state Constitutions, for the reason that it makes the owner of a motor vehicle liable if the vehicle is being used in the prosecution of the business or for the benefit of the owner, even though operated without notice to the owner or without the owner's knowledge and without the owner's consent, express or implied. To hold this statute constitutional would be to hold a party liable for the negligent conduct of another, even though a trespasser were operating the vehicle against the express orders of the owner, and irrespective of how careful or free from negligence the owner was, the only condition being that it be operated for the benefit of the owner. Frankel v. Cone, 214 Ga. 733, 107 S.E.2d 819 (1959), overruled on other grounds, Lott Inv. Corp. v. Gerbing, 242 Ga. 90, 249 S.E.2d 561 (1978).

County's sanitary landfill and fee schedules were not violative of due process or equal protection clauses of the United States and Georgia Constitutions. City of Covington v. Newton County, 243 Ga. 476, 254 S.E.2d 855 (1979).

"Property" defined. — The term property comprehends not only the thing possessed, but also, in strict legal parlance, means the rights of the owner in relation to land or a thing; the right of a person to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of property, and the corresponding right to exclude others from the use. Therefore, no physical invasion damaging to the property need be shown; only an unlawful interference with the right of the owner to enjoy possession. Thus, increased noise and odors may result in an inverse condemnation of property by interfering with the use and enjoyment of land and endangering health. Duffield v. DeKalb County, 242 Ga. 432, 249 S.E.2d 235 (1978).

Private property safeguarded. — The Constitution of this state, by repeated declarations, leaves no room for doubt but that it intends to place around private property the same safeguards with which it shields life and liberty. Cox v. GE Co., 211 Ga. 286, 85 S.E.2d 514 (1955) adopting the specially concurring opinion in Harris v. Duncan, 208 Ga. 561, 67 S.E.2d 692 (1951).

With property owner's right to sell.

— The unshackled right to sell one's own property for a lawful use is within itself property protected by the state Constitution and is beyond the reach of legislative impairment. The state Constitution forbids destruction, taking, or impairing of private property by any state bureau under any pretended legislative powers. Gray v. Georgia Real Estate Comm'n, 209 Ga. 301, 71 S.E.2d 645 (1952).

Georgia Real Estate Commission is wholly without power to require the owner of land to procure a license before selling the land or to otherwise interfere with the complete freedom of such owner in the sale of the owner's own land. Gray v. Georgia Real Estate Comm'n, 209 Ga. 301, 71 S.E.2d 645 (1952).

Pledging political subdivision's power was not taking of property without due process. — Under Ga. L. 1975, p. 107, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. T. 46, C. 3, Art. 3), the pledging of the full faith and credit and taxing power of the political subdivisions does not constitute a taking of property without due process of law. Thompson v. Municipal Elec. Auth., 238 Ga. 19, 231 S.E.2d 720 (1976).

Public office is public trust or agency and is not property of incumbent thereof, and when the incumbent is suspended from such office, the incumbent is not deprived of any property. Felton v. Huie, 178 Ga. 311, 173 S.E. 660 (1933).

Redistricting attempts for school board members. — While voting rights and the right to run for public office are core constitutional rights, an attempted deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights is not the same as an actual deprivation. Furthermore, incurring legal fees to vindicate rights does not itself establish that those rights were violated. Thus, the plaintiff, a school board member, pursuing attempted violations of the plaintiff's right to run and hold a designated seat in a predefined district, could not succeed as an injunction in another lawsuit and failure of preclearance interfered with the implementation of the efforts of the defendants, the local voting registrars; since the attempt to deprive the plaintiff of the plaintiff's constitutional rights did not succeed, neither can the plaintiff's lawsuit succeed. Cook v. Randolph County, 573 F.3d 1143 (11th Cir. 2009).

Legislative limitation of recoverable damages after tort committed not deprivation of property without due process. — The fact that alleged libelous articles were published before the adoption of an Act limiting the plaintiff's previously existing right to recover punitive damages did not render the law unconstitutional as violating federal and state provisions against the deprivation of property without due process of law. Kelly v. Hall, 191 Ga. 470, 12 S.E.2d 881 (1940).

Limitation on motor vehicle liability insurance benefits held constitutional. — The limitation on income benefits in former O.C.G.A. § 33-34-4(a)(2)(B) and (a)(2)(C), as construed by the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, establishes a constitutionally permissible classification reasonably related to the purposes of the no-fault Act. Leonard v. Preferred Risk Mut. Ins. Co., 247 Ga. 574, 277 S.E.2d 675 (1981).

Hospital authority with standing to attack constitutionality of state law. — A hospital authority or a private corporation has standing by statute to attack state law on the grounds that it violates the due process and equal protection clauses of the Georgia Constitution. Caldwell v. Hospital Auth., 248 Ga. 887, 287 S.E.2d 15 (1982).

County or municipal corporation created by legislature without standing to invoke due process argument against legislature. — A county or municipal corporation, created by the legislature, does not have standing to invoke the equal protection and due process clauses of the state or federal Constitution in opposition to the legislature. City of Atlanta v. Spence, 242 Ga. 194, 249 S.E.2d 554 (1978).

Due process rights granted by university bulletin. — A provision in a private university bulletin to the effect that no student shall be dismissed without “due process” does not contractually obligate an educational institution to provide the full range of constitutional due-process protections enjoyed by students at tax-supported institutions, but only those procedures specifically provided for in the bulletin itself. Life Chiropractic College, Inc. v. Fuchs, 176 Ga. App. 606, 337 S.E.2d 45 (1985).

State’s interest did not outweigh patient’s right to refuse treatment. — Hospital patient who was incapable of spontaneous respiration was entitled to declaratory relief permitting the patient to turn off a ventilator, which would result in the patient’s death, since the state’s interest in preserving life did not outweigh the patient’s right to refuse medical treatment. State v. McAfee, 259 Ga. 579, 385 S.E.2d 651 (1989).

Administering sedative was inseparable from right to refuse medical treatment. — When hospital patient sought to have ventilator turned off, which would cause the patient’s death, the patient’s right to have a sedative administered before the ventilator was disconnected was inseparable from the patient’s right to refuse medical treatment. State v. McAfee, 259 Ga. 579, 385 S.E.2d 651 (1989).

Grant of official immunity to state employee providing medical services. — Grant of official immunity from a malpractice suit to a state-employed doctor based on the patient’s status as a Medicaid patient did not violate the constitutional rights of the patient’s parents, as the due process and equal protection clauses of the U.S. and Georgia Constitutions protected only rights, and a waiver of sovereign immunity under the Georgia Tort Claims Act, O.C.G.A. § 50-21-20 et seq., was merely a privilege. Porter v. Guill, 298 Ga. App. 782, 681 S.E.2d 230 (2009).

Garnishment may reach out-of-state wages. — Allowing garnishment of wages earned wholly outside this state is not an unconstitutional extension of the laws of this state to a debt created outside the geographical limits of this state, thus depriving the garnishee of due process. United Merchants & Mfrs., Inc. v. Citizens & S. Nat’l Bank, 166 Ga. App. 468, 304 S.E.2d 552 (1983).

Charitable immunity doctrine does not constitute a violation of the equal protection or due process clauses of the federal or state constitutions. Ponder v. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth., 256 Ga. 833, 353 S.E.2d 515, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 863, 108 S. Ct. 181, 98 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1987).

Provisions of the Tort Reform Act, O.C.G.A. § 51-12-5.1, relating to punitive damages, violated the due process and equal protection clauses of the federal and state constitutions, violated the excessive fines provisions of both constitutions, and violated the double jeopardy provision of the Fifth Amendment to the federal constitution. McBride v. GMC, 737 F. Supp. 1563 (M.D. Ga. 1990).

When Governor wishes to remove incumbent constitutional officer for abandonment, notice and hearing are required for due process. Partain v. Maddox, 227 Ga. 623, 182 S.E.2d 450 (1971).

Judgment creditor without right to deprive debtor of property without due process. — The mere fact that a creditor has obtained a judgment does not give the creditor a right to enforce that judgment by depriving the alleged judgment debtor of property without due process of law. Apex Supply Co. v. Johnny Long Homes, Inc., 143 Ga. App. 699, 240 S.E.2d 171 (1977).

Trial court deprived garnisher of due process. — The trial court deprived the garnisher of due process in failing to afford a hearing on setting aside default and the propriety of modifying the amount of judgment. Apex Supply Co. v. Johnny Long Homes, Inc., 143 Ga. App. 699, 240 S.E.2d 171 (1977).

Before public utility service cut off, consumer to be given opportunity to be heard. — In Georgia, it is entirely constitutional to provide for cutting off water for failure to pay at stated times the rates therefor, provided only that a consumer cannot be deprived of an opportunity to, in good faith, present any reason why the consumer ought not to be required to pay and have the consumer's claim adjudicated, providing the consumer insures the city or other party furnishing water against loss; this applies equally to charges for sewer services. Liner v. City of Rossville, 213 Ga. 756, 101 S.E.2d 753 (1958).

Postjudgment garnishment law is not unconstitutional for lack of due process. It meets the requirement of judicial supervision and notice. Morgan v. Morgan, 156 Ga. App. 726, 275 S.E.2d 673 (1980).

Abandoned motor vehicle provisions violative of due process. — Due process of law includes notice and hearing as a matter of right when one's property rights are involved; Ga. L. 1977, p. 253 required notice prior to sale of abandoned motor vehicles, but made no provision for a judicial hearing as a matter of right on issues in controversy either prior to or following the sale of the vehicle. Due process does not permit such procedure. The Act dealing with abandoned motor vehicles violated due process under the state and federal Constitutions. Gore v. Davis, 243 Ga. 634, 256 S.E.2d 329 (1979).

Foreclosure on automobile. — Vehicle owner was denied due process when the trial court entered a default judgment against it, as the evidence showed that the wrecker company that was attempting to foreclose on its lien on the vehicle which the wrecker company found abandoned did not provide notice of the foreclosure action to the vehicle owner since the wrecker company sent notice of that action to the wrong address in a state other than that in which the vehicle owner was located. Mitsubishi Motors Credit of Am., Inc. v. Robinson & Stephens, Inc., 263 Ga. App. 168, 587 S.E.2d 146 (2003).

Failure to provide a corporation that was the original owner of a car with notice of a foreclosure proceeding involving the car was a due process violation that was tantamount to a lack of personal jurisdiction; thus, the foreclosure judgment was void under O.C.G.A. § 9-12-16. Mitsubishi Motors Credit of Am., Inc. v. Sheridan, 286 Ga. App. 791, 650 S.E.2d

Charter assessment provision violative of due process because no notice or hearing on property valuation. — The municipal charter of Dublin, Georgia, provides that the value for taxation of all real and personal property in the city subject to taxation shall be determined by three disinterested freeholders of the city, to be elected annually by the mayor and board of aldermen, who shall take an oath to assess all property in the city at a fair market value to the best of their skill and knowledge. In case any property holder or taxpayer is dissatisfied with any assessment so made by the assessors, the taxpayer may appeal to the mayor and board of aldermen, who shall review the assessment and whose decision thereon shall be final. As the charter provision in question failed to provide for notice to the taxpayer and afford as a matter of right a hearing before the assessors on the question as to valuation of the property, and as the hearing provided for by the ordinance was a mere matter of grace, such provision of the charter is repugnant to the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Swinson v. City of Dublin, 178 Ga. 323, 173 S.E. 93 (1934).

Review of Department of Natural Resources decisions. — Georgia Administrative Procedure Act, O.C.G.A. § 50-13-1 et seq., and O.C.G.A. § 12-2-1 govern the procedure for judicial review of final decisions of the Department of Natural Resources; since the party seeking review failed to make a timely request therefor, affirmance of the final decision of the Department violated neither equal protection nor due process. Nix v. Long Mtn. Resources, Inc., 262 Ga. 506, 422 S.E.2d 195 (1992).

A hearing on an application for a certificate of public convenience and necessity, whether granted or denied, is not a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding to which due process rights applicable in such proceedings attach. RTC Transp., Inc. v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 165 Ga. App. 539, 301 S.E.2d 896 (1983).

Summary suspension of driver's license prior to hearing with no provision for automatic stay pending appeal was not violative of due process clauses of the United States Constitution and the Georgia Constitution. Williams v. Cofer, 246 Ga. 344, 271 S.E.2d 486 (1980).

Due process rights applicable to hearing on suspension of driver's license for refusal to submit to breath analysis test, see Hardison v. Fayssoux, 168 Ga. App. 398, 309 S.E.2d 397 (1983).

License revocation order upheld when driver afforded sufficient due process. — Administrative decision disqualifying a driver from driving a commercial motor vehicle for life based on the refusal to submit to state-administered chemical testing and a prior conviction for driving under the influence was upheld, as the arresting officer informed the driver that the driver could lose that driver's license to drive upon refusing to submit to chemical testing, and the requirements of due process did not require the arresting officer to inform the driver of all the consequences of refusing to submit to chemical testing. Moreover, the driver requested and received a hearing under O.C.G.A. § 40-5-67.1(g)(1). Chancellor v. Dozier, 283 Ga. 259, 658 S.E.2d 592 (2008).

Appeal from suspension of driver's license. — Even though the defendant elected to first pursue an administrative appeal of a driver's license suspension to the Department of Public Safety and was unsuccessful in that effort, the defendant was still entitled to file an appeal in the superior court under O.C.G.A. § 40-5-66, at which the defendant could receive a meaningful hearing upon request and, accordingly, the defendant was not denied the right to procedural due process. Miles v. Shaw, 272 Ga. 475, 532 S.E.2d 373 (2000).

Trial judge's inappropriate conduct of injunction hearing required reversal. — Conduct resulting in reversible error was committed by a trial judge during an injunction hearing involving the alleged fraudulent refinancing of church property since the judge was found to have attempted to procure evidence and elicit testimony, conducted ex parte communications, and not afforded the parties the opportunity to offer evidence, give argument, or otherwise present the parties' respective cases. Further, the trial judge erred by determining that one defendant committed criminal contempt without giving that defendant an opportunity to respond to or defend against the trial judge's determination that the defendant's testimony was untruthful. Cousins v. Maced. Baptist Church of Atlanta, 283 Ga. 570, 662 S.E.2d 533 (2008).

In a petition for declaratory judgment and an injunction against the defendants seeking use and control of a church, the trial court erred in entering final judgment in favor of the defendants because the trial court's conduct at the final hearing deprived the plaintiff of the plaintiff's right to due process since the trial court prohibited the plaintiff from presenting witnesses and evidence to support the plaintiff's claims that it owned the church; and, at multiple times during the final hearing, counsel for the plaintiff asked to present witnesses, but the trial court did not permit counsel to do so, instead limiting the hearing to argument from counsel and testimony from a defense witness and an unsworn defendant. Thomas v. Johnson, 329 Ga. App. 601, 765 S.E.2d 748 (2014).

2. Attorneys

Disbarment of attorney. — Attorney who was legally charged and convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude and then disbarred under Standard 66, Rule 4-102, Rules and Regulations of the State Bar of Georgia, was properly afforded due process. Rehberger v. State, 269 Ga. 576, 502 S.E.2d 222 (1998).

Georgia Board of Bar Examiners did not violate due process when it recalculated the scores only of those applicants who initially failed the bar examination by dropping a question; the applicant's allegation, premised on the supposition that those who initially passed the exam would have failed if they were regraded without taking into account the question, was not supported by the record and, even if it were, the applicant could not show harm because the applicant was graded twice and failed both times. In the Matter of Hedge, 279 Ga. 241, 610 S.E.2d 519 (2005).

Attorney's due process rights violated in contempt proceeding. — Attorney's alleged contumacious conduct during the course of a death penalty case constituted an indirect contempt, and the attorney was entitled, among other things, to reasonable notice of the charges, to counsel of the attorney's own choosing, and to the opportunity to call witnesses; since the attorney was not given these opportunities when the contempt hearing was held at the end of the day of the death penalty trial, the attorney's contempt hearing did not comply with due process and furthermore, the trial judge could preside over the contempt hearing as the conduct was not directed toward the judge and the judge did not react to the conduct in such manner as to become involved in the controversy. Ramirez v. State, 279 Ga. 13, 608 S.E.2d 645 (2005).

Although a judge informed an attorney of the conduct found to be criminally contemptuous, because the judge not only refused to afford that attorney an opportunity to be heard, but also became involved in the controversy, the criminal contempt finding entered against the attorney had to be reversed. In re Hatfield, 290 Ga. App. 134, 658 S.E.2d 871 (2008).

3. Employment Relationships and Employees

Application of Workers' Compensation Law to public employees compports with due process. — Former Code 1933, § 114-109 (see now O.C.G.A. § 34-9-3) was not invalid as being in violation of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions, nor did the law deny to the defendant the equal protection of the laws. City of Macon v. Benson, 175 Ga. 502, 166 S.E. 26 (1932).

Constitutionality of employment security provisions. — The fact that an employee is entitled to benefits based on employment by the hospital bears a substantial relationship to the purpose of the Employment Security Law. Compulsory contributions for employment security, like many other taxes, are payable without regard to fault; and it follows that employee's eligibility for benefits and the hospital authority's resulting liability do not offend the due process clause of Georgia's Constitution. Caldwell v. Hospital Auth., 248 Ga. 887, 287 S.E.2d 15 (1982).

Effect of state remedies redressing deprivation of procedural due process. — School employee who was improperly dismissed did not have a claim for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 when the employee was reinstated in the employee's job with back pay as the result of state remedies that redressed any procedural due process deprivation that the employee suffered. Atlanta City Sch. Dist. v. Dowling, 266 Ga. 217, 466 S.E.2d 588 (1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 812, 117 S. Ct. 59, 136 L. Ed. 2d 21 (1996).

Seniority among railway workers is fundamentally and wholly contractual, does not arise from mere employment, and is not an inherent, natural, or constitutional right. Lamon v. Georgia S. & Fla. Ry., 212 Ga. 63, 90 S.E.2d 658 (1955).

Employee rights under contract do not extend beyond its life. — An employee has no inherent right to seniority in service; and if seniority arises only out of contract, such rights created and arising under the contract do not extend beyond its life when it has been legally terminated. Lamon v. Georgia S. & Fla. Ry., 212 Ga. 63, 90 S.E.2d 658 (1955).

But violation or misapplication of existing bargaining agreement deprives employee of protectible rights.

— Violation or misapplication of an existing bargaining agreement, as by preferring an employee with less seniority over another with greater seniority when the employee is still in service of the employer under the contract, deprives the employee of the employee's seniority rights, and such seniority rights, which are property rights, will be protected in the courts. Lamon v. Georgia S. & Fla. Ry., 212 Ga. 63, 90 S.E.2d 658 (1955).

Right to follow one's profession, business, or occupation, or to labor is valuable property right, protected by the Constitution and laws of the state, subject only to such restrictions as the government may impose for the welfare and safety of society. Horne v. Skelton, 152

Ga. App. 654, 263 S.E.2d 528 (1979).

An evidentiary hearing subsequent to discharge of city employees meets the requirements of due process of law as it regards their property right in continued employment. City of Atlanta v. Mahony, 162 Ga. App. 5, 289 S.E.2d 250 (1982).

Author or inventor has property right in product of mental labors, even though such product is not patentable. The right has been recognized at common law independently of copyright or letters patent. Monumental Properties of Ga., Inc. v. Frontier Disposal, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 35, 282 S.E.2d 660 (1981).

Exclusivity of property right in unpatented product. — A property right in the unpatented product is only exclusive until it becomes the property of the public by being placed on the market. Monumental Properties of Ga., Inc. v. Frontier Disposal, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 35, 282 S.E.2d 660 (1981).

Right to accept private employment. — A person's right to work, namely the right to accept employment from private firms and individuals, is protected by the state due process clause. State v. McMillan, 253 Ga. 154, 319 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

The right of a person retired from state employment to accept employment from private firms and individuals cannot be abridged unless the law which abridges it furthers or protects some governmental interest which outweighs the intrusion upon personal liberty and property rights. State v. McMillan, 253 Ga. 154, 319 S.E.2d 1 (1984).

Specialty training for physicians. — Public hospital bylaw requiring specific postgraduate specialty training or residency in order for physicians to be eligible for admission to the medical staff did not transgress the equal protection or due process rights of osteopathic physicians. Silverstein v. Gwinnett Hosp. Auth., 861 F.2d 1560 (11th Cir. 1988).

Immunity granted employers in the workers' compensation act does not violate the due process and equal protection provisions of the state and federal constitutions. Georgia Dep't of Human Resources v. Joseph Campbell Co., 261 Ga.

822, 411 S.E.2d 871 (1992).

Failure of an employee to appeal discharge within the time required by the employer's personnel policy precluded employee from obtaining mandamus for a violation of due process. Camden County v. Haddock, 271 Ga. 664, 523 S.E.2d 291 (1999).

Due process denied if city employee discharged before notice and hearing prescribed by charter. — When tenure is created by an Act which provides for notice and a hearing before discharge, failure to give the notice and accord the city fire department employee the right to be heard amounts to a denial of due process of law. Mulcay v. Murray, 219 Ga. 747, 136 S.E.2d 129 (1964).

Evidentiary hearing subsequent to discharge of county employee meets requirements of due process of law. Brownlee v. Williams, 233 Ga. 548, 212 S.E.2d 359 (1975).

Delay in holding hearing on public employee's appeal of termination. — As a former police officer failed to show prejudice from a two-year delay in holding a hearing on the officer's appeal of the officer's termination, and the evidence supported the civil service board's decision to uphold the officer's dismissal, the delay of the appeal did not violate the officer's due process rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I. Glass v. City of Atlanta, 293 Ga. App. 11, 666 S.E.2d 406 (2008).

When municipal police officer was not granted hearing prior to initial discharge, but was granted a trial type hearing on the officer's appeal before the personnel review board when the officer was confronted by the witnesses and afforded the opportunity to cross examine the witnesses and to offer evidence in the officer's own behalf, due process was not violated. In re Wiggins, 144 Ga. App. 707, 242 S.E.2d 290 (1978).

Notice required for discharged public employees protected by merit system legislation. — Due process requires that public employees protected by merit system legislation be notified specifically and in detail of the reasons for their discharge prior to their hearing. Sheppard v. DeKalb County Merit Council, 144 Ga.

Application (Cont'd)3. Employment Relationships and Employees (Cont'd)

App. 115, 240 S.E.2d 316 (1977).

No requirement employee be given hearing whenever superior's decision might affect employment. —

There is no requirement under the due process provisions of the state Constitution that an employee be given a hearing on every decision made by a superior which might have an effect on the employee's employment. Brown v. State Merit Sys. of Personnel Admin., 245 Ga. 239, 264 S.E.2d 186 (1980).

Civil employment which allows termination only "for cause" creates expectation of continued employment that is constitutionally protected. Glenn v. Newman, 614 F.2d 467 (5th Cir. 1980).

Parties to employment contract not subject to Georgia law unless contract made or actual work done in state. — Under former Code 1933, § 114-110 (see now O.C.G.A. § 34-9-7), the state acquires jurisdiction only by the act of the parties in coming within the state to execute a contract of employment. In the absence of the making of a contract within the state where no work thereunder in the state is required, the parties thereto could not be subjected to the terms of the Georgia law; for to do so would be to deny to them due process of law, as guaranteed by the state and federal Constitutions. Cramer v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 77 Ga. App. 236, 47 S.E.2d 925 (1948) (decided under former Code 1933, § 114-110 prior to amendment by Ga. L. 1972, p. 929, § 2).

Workers' Compensation Act as voluntary statute. — Former Code 1933, § 114-117 (see now O.C.G.A. § 34-9-106) providing for judgment in superior court based upon a memorandum of agreement approved by, or award of, the Department of Industrial Relations (now the Board of Workers' Compensation) is not violative of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions though it does not provide for notice of, or hearing on, the proceedings in the superior court. The Workers' Compensation Act is a voluntary or elective statute. Generally, an attack on such a statute on the grounds that it denies due process of law is not sustained by the courts because the complaining party voluntarily submitted to the terms of the statute and cannot complain if usual forms of legal process are denied the party under the statute. Taylor v. Woodall, 183 Ga. 122, 187 S.E. 697 (1936).

Suspension or discharge of police officer. — Due process required that police detective receive proper notice of the behavior for which the detective was suspended or discharged. Byrd v. City of Atlanta, 683 F. Supp. 804 (N.D. Ga. 1988).

Discharge of at-will employee. — School district employee's claim that a termination based on race discrimination violated procedural due process rights survived summary judgment; although the employee was an at-will employee with no contract, genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether the employee was entitled to notice and a hearing to answer charges of misconduct. Palmer v. Stewart County Sch. Dist., No. 4:04-CV-21 (CDL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35511 (M.D. Ga. June 17, 2005).

Lawsuits and workers' compensation proceedings. — Every party to a lawsuit (or a workers' compensation proceeding) must be afforded the opportunity to be heard and to present a claim or defense, i.e., to have a day in court. Hart v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 165 Ga. App. 681, 302 S.E.2d 701 (1983).

Adequate notice found. — Employer received adequate notice of a workers' compensation hearing under O.C.G.A. § 34-9-102(a) when the employer's notice of the hearing was returned as undeliverable, the employer's president and part owner was subpoenaed to appear at the hearing, the mailing address of the employer was the same as the address of another business and that business's notice was not returned, the employer did not challenge the notice provided to the other business, and the employer failed to maintain a current notice on file with the Georgia State Board of Workers' Compensation as was required by O.C.G.A. § 34-9-102(i), which satisfied due process and focused on the mailing of the notice, rather than its receipt. High Voltage Vending, LLC v. Odom, 266 Ga. App. 537,

Term “employing unit” within employment security law certain enough for purposes of due process.

— Ga. L. 1937, p. 806 (employing unit) is not so vague and indefinite as not to be enforceable consistently with due process in that it provides no basis for imposing the tax or contribution other than the unbridled discretion of the administrator. Jeffreys-McElrath Mfg. Co. v. Huiet, 196 Ga. 710, 27 S.E.2d 385 (1943).

Even though contractor might have to contribute twice upon each employee’s wages. — Ga. L. 1937, p. 806 is not lacking in due process because its enforcement could result in compelling the contractor, upon whom the burden ultimately falls, to contribute twice upon the wages of each employee, if perchance the contractor should devote a portion of a day to the performance of one contract, and the remainder to the performance of another. Jeffreys-McElrath Mfg. Co. v. Huiet, 196 Ga. 710, 27 S.E.2d 385 (1943).

Employing unit without control of amount of wages and without first-hand knowledge. — The fact that the employing unit has no control over the amount of the wages and may have no first-hand knowledge of the amount does not render the statute invalid as violating the principle of due process as to such party. Jeffreys-McElrath Mfg. Co. v. Huiet, 196 Ga. 710, 27 S.E.2d 385 (1943).

At-will employee not denied due process. — Because a terminated university registrar was an at-will employee, the registrar had no property interest in the registrar’s job and no due process claim. Moreover, by appealing directly to an administrative law judge, the registrar was afforded a full and fair hearing, fulfilling state and federal due process requirements. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. Sys. of Ga. v. Hogan, 298 Ga. App. 454, 680 S.E.2d 518 (2009).

4. Family Issues

Calling father as adverse witness in termination proceedings. — Juvenile court did not err in a parental rights termination proceeding pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-11-94 when it allowed paternal grandparents who petitioned for permanent custody of their grandchildren to call the father as an adverse witness, subject to cross-examination pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-9-81, as there was no due process violation of the father’s rights pursuant to U.S. Const., amend. 14 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I. In the Interest of D.J., 279 Ga. App. 355, 631 S.E.2d 427 (2006).

Termination of custody proceedings. — Parents were not denied due process after evidence of psychosexual evaluations and allegations of sexual abuse, molestation, and sexual abuse by the children against other children were admitted in a termination of parental rights trial, despite the petition’s lack of allegations of sexual misconduct, as: (1) the trial court based the court’s findings of parental inability on the parents’ failure to comply with the case plan, especially their continued failure to obtain stable employment and suitable housing; (2) neither parent was accused of sexually abusing the children; (3) evidence of past sexual abuse was relevant to establish the complex psychological problems of the two older children, to demonstrate the special needs of those children, and to expose the danger that reunification would pose; and (4) as some of the children’s psychological problems were attributable to their victimization, evidence as to that issue could not have surprised the parents. In the Interest of M.E.S., 263 Ga. App. 132, 587 S.E.2d 282 (2003).

Parent’s presence at deprivation hearing. — Parent was not denied due process on the ground that the parent was not present at the deprivation hearings in which the trial court declared the parent’s three children to be deprived because deprivation proceedings and parental rights termination proceedings are separate and distinct, and a termination proceeding is not the proper time to assert error in the deprivation proceedings; further, the parent failed to show that the parent was harmed as a result of any alleged violation of due process since there was overwhelming evidence supporting the termination of the parent’s parental rights. In the Interest of M.S., 279 Ga. App. 254, 630 S.E.2d 856 (2006), overruled on other grounds, In re J.M.B., 296 Ga. App. 786, 676 S.E.2d 9 (2009).

Refusal to consider equal protection argument at hearing in deprivation. — In a deprivation proceeding when the parents were ordered to pay part of the costs for services mandated under their case plan, there was no due process violation in refusing to consider parents' equal protection argument. Due process did not guarantee a litigant the right to have all of the litigants' arguments considered at a particular hearing. In the Interest of P.N., 291 Ga. App. 512, 662 S.E.2d 287 (2008).

Determination of divorcing parties' rights by judge or jury comports with due process. — O.C.G.A. § 19-5-17, providing for determination of rights and disabilities of the parties by the jury or the judge, as the case may be, is not violative of the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. Gary v. Johnson, 210 Ga. 686, 82 S.E.2d 651 (1954) (decided prior to amendment by Ga. L. 1960, p. 1024, § 1 and Ga. L. 1979, p. 466, § 5).

This paragraph does not mandate pretrial discovery in proceedings to terminate parental rights. In re L.L.W., 141 Ga. App. 32, 232 S.E.2d 378 (1977); Ray v. Department of Human Resources, 155 Ga. App. 81, 270 S.E.2d 303 (1980).

Father's protectible interest in having child bear parental surname as customary is not property right within meaning of due process. Fulghum v. Paul, 229 Ga. 463, 192 S.E.2d 376 (1972).

Payment of costs of blood tests in paternity actions. — Trial court's denial of a putative father's request to require the state to make pretrial payment of the costs of blood tests to determine paternity effectively denied the putative father access to blood test evidence and amounted to a violation of due process. Peterson v. Moffitt ex rel. Dep't of Human Resources, 253 Ga. 253, 319 S.E.2d 449 (1984).

Action for termination of parental rights. — Juvenile court did not violate a parent's constitutional rights to due process under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, by denying the parent's motions to secure the parent's presence at the termination hearing and for a continuance; while the parent was in prison, an attorney was appointed to represent the parent at the hearing, and the parent did not specify how the parent suffered harm by not attending the hearing, and therefore, the parent showed no reversible error. In the Interest of B.L.H., 259 Ga. App. 482, 578 S.E.2d 143 (2003).

Due process requires that, prior to the termination of parental rights, a parent receive notice and an opportunity to be heard, but there is no constitutional entitlement mandating a parent's right to appear personally at the termination of parental rights hearing; a trial court did not err in refusing the parent's request to be transported from the prison where the parent was serving a sentence to court for the termination hearing. In the Interest of S.R.B., 270 Ga. App. 466, 606 S.E.2d 655 (2004).

By not raising the issue below, a mother in a termination of parental rights case waived her arguments that the trial court violated equal protection and due process by not determining whether her mental health concerns affected her ability to complete the specific goals in her case plan; moreover, there was uncontradicted evidence that despite her mental health problems, the mother understood the case plan, appreciated its requirements, and could have completed it, but did not do so, and the mother testified that she was able both physically and mentally to care for the child. In the Interest of H.M., 287 Ga. App. 418, 651 S.E.2d 527 (2007).

In a termination of parental rights proceeding, as a parent had numerous opportunities to establish a life independent of that parent's abusive spouse, the parent's due process claim that the abusive spouse was the biggest obstacle preventing reunification lacked merit. In the Interest of D.O.R., 287 Ga. App. 659, 653 S.E.2d 314 (2007).

Foster children have right to counsel in deprivation and termination-of-parental rights (TPR) proceedings under the due process clause of the Georgia Constitution. Kenny A. v. Perdue, 356 F. Supp. 2d 1353 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

Grandparent visitation statute unconstitutional. — O.C.G.A. § 19-7-3, the grandparent visitation statute, is unconstitutional because it does not clearly promote the health or welfare of the child and does not require a showing of harm before state interference is authorized. Brooks v. Parkerson, 265 Ga. 189, 454 S.E.2d 769 (1995).

Parental rights proceedings. — Putative father's due process rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I were not violated by a determination that he had received proper notice of his case plan, as his claim that he was not notified was contradicted by testimony from the caseworker that the father in fact received proper notification, and the issue of credibility was within the trial court's determination. In the Interest of T.A.M., 280 Ga. App. 494, 634 S.E.2d 456 (2006).

Parent unsuccessfully argued that the parent's due process rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I were violated because the parent's parental rights were terminated despite the fact that the parent never received a copy of the case plan; the parent was unable to establish harm, as the parent was incarcerated, and the parent's crimes, including holding the children hostage and threatening to kill them, were so egregious as to justify termination. In the Interest of B.D., 281 Ga. App. 725, 637 S.E.2d 123 (2006).

Delay in issuing order on child visitation/support issue. — Eight-month delay between the trial of a child support and visitation question and entry of the final order did not deny a father his right to procedural due process under the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, in part because the father filed a post-trial, pre-judgment motion requiring the trial court's time and attention. Coppedge v. Coppedge, 298 Ga. 494, 783 S.E.2d 94 (2016).

Spouse whose assets are subject to garnishment under alimony judgment was accorded procedural due process by the fact that the affidavit for garnishment was approved by a judge before the summons of garnishment issued, under former Code 1933, § 46-102 (see now O.C.G.A. § 18-4-61), and by the fact that the spouse received timely notice on the garnishment, under former Code 1933, § 46-105 (see now O.C.G.A. § 18-4-64), as well as an early hearing on the spouse's traverse in accordance with former Code 1933, § 46-401 (see now O.C.G.A. § 18-4-93). Antico v. Antico, 241 Ga. 294, 244 S.E.2d 820 (1978).

Paternity action costs payment. — It is a violation of due process for the state to require a putative father to pay the costs of a blood test for the purpose of determining paternity when no hearing has been conducted on the merits of the case. Boone v. State, Dep't of Human Resources ex rel. Carter, 250 Ga. 379, 297 S.E.2d 727 (1982).

5. Right of Privacy

Right of privacy guaranteed. — The right of privacy within certain limits is a right derived from natural law, recognized by the principles of municipal law, and guaranteed to persons in this state both by the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Georgia, in those provisions which declare that no person shall be deprived of liberty except by due process of law. McDaniel v. Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 60 Ga. App. 92, 2 S.E.2d 810 (1939).

Right of privacy does not embrace right to possess dangerous drugs. Blincoe v. State, 231 Ga. 886, 204 S.E.2d 597 (1974).

Public interest in privacy may be subordinated and clandestine surveillance allowed. — When the police have reasonable cause to believe that public toilet stalls are being used in the commission of crime, and when the police confine their activities to the times when such crimes are most likely to occur, the police are entitled to institute clandestine surveillance, even though the police do not have probable cause to believe that the particular persons whom they may thus catch in flagrante delicto have committed or will commit the crime. The public interest in its privacy must, to that extent, be subordinated to the public interest in law enforcement. Mitchell v. State, 120 Ga. App. 447, 170 S.E.2d 765 (1969).

Right of privacy in sexual activities. — Right of privacy under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, prohibited the state from prosecuting defendant for fornication under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-18 after defendant and defendant's girlfriend, both age 16 and of legal age to consent to sex under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3(a), engaged in private, unforced, non-commercial sex. In re J.M., 276 Ga. 88, 575 S.E.2d 441 (2003).

Defendant's right to privacy not violated when sexual battery victim under age of consent. — Because the 13-year-old victim in a sexual battery case was under the age when the victim could legally consent to sexual conduct, prosecution of the defendant did not violate the defendant's right to privacy for consensual touching within the context of their boyfriend/girlfriend relationship. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008), overruled on other grounds, Watson v. State, 297 Ga. 718, 777 S.E.2d 677 (2015).

Standing to challenge Medicaid reimbursement for medically necessary abortion. — The trial court erroneously dismissed a complaint filed by certain medical providers, alleging violations of the Georgia Constitution on privacy and equal protection grounds, and holding that the medical providers lacked third-party standing to assert a claim on behalf of their Medicaid-eligible patients, as: (1) the medical providers properly asserted an injury in fact insofar as they had a direct financial interest in obtaining state funding to reimburse them for the cost of abortion services provided to Medicaid-eligible women, and have alleged that they performed, and will continue to perform, medically necessary abortions for which they will not be reimbursed under Georgia's Medicaid program; and (2) the relationship between the medical providers and their patients made them uniquely qualified to litigate the constitutionality of the state's action interfering with a woman's decision to terminate a pregnancy. Feminist Women's Health Ctr. v. Burgess, 282 Ga. 433, 651 S.E.2d 36 (2007).

Nonparty medical records. — In a suit alleging medical malpractice and related claims, the trial court properly held that nonparty medical records were subject to discovery. Although personal medical records were protected by Georgia's constitutional right of privacy, the trial court's order afforded the nonparty patients with notice and an opportunity to object to the disclosure and also provided for further review to determine the scope of discovery. Ussery v. Children's Healthcare of Atlanta, Inc., 289 Ga. App. 255, 656 S.E.2d 882 (2008).

State prisoner on hunger strike has right of privacy to be protected from unwarranted intrusions on the prisoner's person even though calculated to preserve the prisoner's life. When the prisoner is not mentally incompetent or has dependents who rely on the prisoner for their livelihood, the prisoner has a right to refuse medical treatment. Zant v. Prevatte, 248 Ga. 832, 286 S.E.2d 715 (1982).

Prisoners' right of privacy not violated by extraction of saliva for DNA profiling. — Although prisoners retain a right to bodily privacy under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, the extraction of saliva required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-60 (see now O.C.G.A. § 35-3-160) did not violate that right because the statute promotes law enforcement, and is narrowly tailored to promote that purpose by requiring DNA profiling on a limited population of incarcerated felons and forbidding release of DNA profiles except for law enforcement purposes. Padgett v. Donald, 401 F.3d 1273 (11th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 820, 126 S. Ct. 352, 163 L. Ed. 2d 61 (2005).

Injured party's invasion of privacy claim failed as the injured party signed an agreement authorizing a nurse and other home health care agency nurses to care for the party in the party's home and to communicate with the injured party's insurance company if necessary in order to receive proper payment; the injured party could not maintain an action for invasion of privacy based on the very actions that the injured party authorized the agency and its nurses to take. Canziani v. Visiting Nurse Health Sys., 271 Ga. App. 677, 610 S.E.2d 660 (2005).

Tax law need not provide for re-hearing. Vestel v. Edwards, 143 Ga. 368, 85 S.E. 187 (1915); Martin v. Pollock, 144 Ga. 605, 87 S.E. 793 (1916).

During tax assessment process taxpayer must have opportunity to be heard. — The assessment of a tax is action judicial in its nature, requiring for the legal exertion of the power such opportunity to appear and be heard as the circumstances of the case require. Somewhere during the process of the assessment the taxpayer must have an opportunity to be heard, and this notice must be provided as an essential part of the statutory provisions, and not awarded as a mere matter of favor or grace. A denial of this right is a failure to afford due process of law within the intention of the federal and state Constitutions. Pullman Co. v. Suttles, 187 Ga. 217, 199 S.E. 821 (1938).

Notice and opportunity to be heard before property tax assessment final comported with due process. — Georgia Law 1918, p. 232, providing for assessment for taxation of unreturned or grossly undervalued property, or property assessed at a figure grossly below its true value, is not unconstitutional as violating the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions for the reason that it fails to provide for a hearing before assessment by the tax receiver, since it does provide for notice to the claimed delinquent, with opportunity to be heard by a suit in equity both as to excessiveness and taxability, before the assessment shall become final. Hardin v. Reynolds, 189 Ga. 534, 6 S.E.2d 328 (1939).

Taxpayer must have notice in time to contest proceeding before tax becomes absolute lien or liability. — It has been shown that there are differences between proceedings for the levy and collection of taxes and judicial proceedings. As to what constitutes notice and opportunity to be heard, in compliance with this requirement of due process, no general rule can be laid down which will cover all cases. The general rule which may be laid down as applicable to all cases is that the taxpayer must have the notice in time to contest the proceeding before the tax becomes an absolute lien on the taxpayer's property or before it becomes the taxpayer's absolute personal liability. Simmons v. Newton, 178 Ga. 806, 174 S.E. 703 (1934).

Taxpayer must have notice and opportunity to contest validity and amount of tax. — Due process of law requires that after such notice as may be appropriate the taxpayer have opportunity to be heard as to the validity of a tax and the amount thereof, by giving the taxpayer the right to appear for that purpose at some stage of the proceedings. City of Macon v. Ries, 179 Ga. 320, 176 S.E. 21 (1934), overruled on other grounds, Derrick v. Campbell, 219 Ga. 795, 136 S.E.2d 381 (1964).

Criminal Cases

1. In General

Guarantees to person charged with crime. — This paragraph guarantees to a person charged with crime, before the person can be called upon to answer, the right to be informed so plainly that the nature of the offense charged may be easily understood by the jury and that the accused will be enabled to prepare a defense. The legislature cannot authorize an accusation to be amended during the trial in a matter of substance, any more than it could authorize such an amendment of an indictment when the defendant is prejudiced by the amendment. Sutton v. State, 54 Ga. App. 349, 188 S.E. 60 (1936).

Registration requirements for homeless sex offenders unconstitutional vague. — Address registration requirement of O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 is unconstitutional under the due process clause of the United States and Georgia constitutions on vagueness grounds as applied to homeless sex offenders who possess no street or route address for their residence. Santos v. State, 284 Ga. 514, 668 S.E.2d 676 (2008).

Vicarious criminal liability unconstitutional. — Vicarious criminal liability in misdemeanor cases which involves as punishment a fine and not imprisonment violates due process. Davis v. City of Peachtree City, 251 Ga. 219, 304 S.E.2d 701 (1983).

Criminal Cases (Cont'd)1. In General (Cont'd)

When person indicted has been afforded due process. — When one indicted has had full opportunity, under the Constitution and laws of the state, to defend one's case in the courts of the state having jurisdiction thereof, in person, by attorney, or both, according to established constitutional rules of procedure one has been afforded due process of law. Shoemaker v. Whitlock, 226 Ga. 771, 177 S.E.2d 677 (1970).

Despite the defendant's claim that reversible error was premised on the state's failure to comply with the required notice upon filing two charges of felony theft by taking, as the indictment failed to specifically allege either that the value of the items stolen exceeded $500, or that the items were motor vehicles, Georgia law did not establish two classifications for theft by taking crimes, but a determination as to the felony or misdemeanor status of a charge was based on the value of the property taken; moreover, because the defendant failed to furnish the appellate court with a transcript, it was left with no other alternative but to presume the trial judge properly considered the evidence in imposing sentence. Conley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 841, 637 S.E.2d 438 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0315, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 67 (Ga. 2007).

Due process requires that criminal defendant have right to counsel at critical stages. — The mandate of U.S. Const., amend. 6, that every accused in a criminal prosecution has the right to the assistance of counsel for a defense at every critical stage of the case as an essential component of due process in a trial in a state court compels every agency of government concerned with the operation of the courts to acknowledge the necessity for and implement the means by which this necessary public purpose must be accomplished. The provisions of Georgia's Constitution make the same demand. Weiner v. Fulton County, 113 Ga. App. 343, 148 S.E.2d 143, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 958, 87 S. Ct. 393, 17 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1966).

Justice involves delicate judgment based on circumstances of each case. — To accommodate the sound administration of justice to the rights of the defendant to a fair trial will necessarily involve a delicate judgment based on the circumstances of each case. State v. Madden, 242 Ga. 637, 250 S.E.2d 484 (1978).

Failure to deny charges does not raise presumption of acknowledgment of guilt. — An accused who is taken into custody cannot be presumed to acknowledge guilt just because the accused does not deny the charges. Emmett v. State, 243 Ga. 550, 255 S.E.2d 23 (1979).

Right to testify as witness is personal right and is an adjunct or portion of the fundamental concept of freedom and liberty protected by Ga. Const. 1945, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. III (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I) and Ga. Const. 1945, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. IV (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII). Carter v. Seaboard Coast Line R.R., 392 F. Supp. 494 (S.D. Ga. 1974).

When court under no obligation to appoint counsel for accused. — If the accused has means to employ counsel, and is out upon bond, and has opportunity to secure counsel, and neglects or refuses to do so, the court is under no obligation or duty to appoint counsel to represent the accused. Clarke v. Cobb, 195 Ga. 633, 24 S.E.2d 782 (1943).

Defendant cannot neglect procuring counsel. — A defendant must be afforded the benefit of counsel, and this includes time sufficient for counsel to prepare for trial, but when the defendant was apprised of the charge against the defendant at a previous term of court and personally fails or neglects to procure counsel or ask the court to do so for the defendant there is no error in refusing a request for additional time on the ground that counsel has personally had insufficient time to prepare the defense. Bradshaw v. State, 132 Ga. App. 363, 208 S.E.2d 173 (1974).

When representation by counsel comports with due process. — When counsel, representing a defendant in a criminal case, is a member of the bar in good standing and, in representing a client in the trial of a case, gives the counsel's complete loyalty to the client, serves the client in good faith to the best of the counsel's ability, and counsel's service is of such a character as to preserve the essential integrity of the proceedings in a court of justice, the requirements of due process within U.S. Const., amend. 14 and this paragraph are met. Hill v. Balkcom, 213 Ga. 58, 96 S.E.2d 589 (1957); Bolick v. State, 127 Ga. App. 542, 194 S.E.2d 302 (1972).

Right to counsel is right to effective counsel, not errorless counsel, and not counsel charged ineffective by hindsight. The defendant is entitled to counsel reasonably likely to render and the rendering of reasonably effective assistance. Rosser v. State, 156 Ga. App. 463, 274 S.E.2d 812 (1980).

Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to file a motion to suppress because the fact that defendants were in a police car during the show-ups did not taint the identifications obtained and there was no evidence that the victims knew that defendants were in handcuffs; further, there was nothing unfair in the officer's statements to the victims. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Mere passage of time in criminal trial is not enough, without more, to constitute denial of due process. Dansby v. State, 140 Ga. App. 104, 230 S.E.2d 64 (1976).

Constitutional right to a speedy trial did not require granting of defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal since, inter alia, all but a couple of months of the time defendant was incarcerated before trial was attributable to service of other sentences, there was no evidence of the defendant's anxiety and concern, and there was no evidence that the defendant's defense was impaired as none of the witnesses who testified at the first trial were allegedly unavailable. Weldon v. State, 262 Ga. App. 782, 586 S.E.2d 452 (2003).

Defendant failed to establish a due process violation for a 20 year delay in the prosecution of a murder case against the defendant because the defendant failed to show either that the delay actually prejudiced the defense or that the prosecution deliberately delayed the case to gain a tactical advantage, both of which showings were needed to prevail on that claim; while several witnesses died in the intervening years and some evidence was missing, this hindered the prosecution as much as the defendant. Holton v. State, 280 Ga. 843, 632 S.E.2d 90 (2006).

While the length of the delay in bringing the appeal, 15 years, was excessive, the delay did not violate the defendant's due process rights since the delay was largely attributable to the defendant, the defendant failed to show that the defendant asserted the defendant's appellate rights for much of the 15-year period at issue, and the defendant failed to show actual prejudice to the defendant's ability to assert arguments on appeal. Payne v. State, 289 Ga. 691, 715 S.E.2d 104 (2011).

When confessions can be introduced in evidence against defendant.

— When evidence shows that confessions were voluntarily made and were not induced by another by hope of award or fear of punishment, or when it is an issue of fact as to whether the confessions were properly obtained, the defendant is not denied due process of law, as guaranteed by the state and federal Constitutions, by their introduction in evidence against the defendant. Claybourn v. State, 190 Ga. 861, 11 S.E.2d 23 (1940).

Four factors relevant for consideration of whether speedy trial has been had: length of delay, reason for delay, prejudice to the defendant, and waiver by the defendant. Mays v. State, 229 Ga. 609, 193 S.E.2d 825 (1972).

When substantially all delay attributable to defendant's conduct. —

There is no violation of due process in respect to a speedy trial when substantially all of the delay in bringing the defendant to trial appears to be directly or indirectly attributable to the conduct of the defendant. Mays v. State, 229 Ga. 609, 193 S.E.2d 825 (1972).

Since the issue of a seven-year trial delay was addressed previously, denial of a motion to dismiss was proper as the court properly found defendant was not prejudiced by a nine-month trial delay and lacked diligence finding witnesses. Brannen v. State, 262 Ga. App. 719, 586 S.E.2d 383 (2003).

Criminal Cases (Cont'd)1. In General (Cont'd)

Conviction upon a charge not made would be sheer denial of due process. — Rowe v. State, 166 Ga. App. 836, 305 S.E.2d 624 (1983).

2. Pre-Trial

No due process violation with delay in indictment and arrest. — Superior court did not err in failing to dismiss the indictment on the ground that the delay in the defendant's arrest and indictment violated the defendant's rights to due process under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, because neither actual prejudice nor deliberate adverse action on the part of the state had been shown; the defendant was not in custody during the period in question. Higgenbottom v. State, 290 Ga. 198, 719 S.E.2d 482 (2011).

Delay in arrest did not warrant dismissal. — When error was asserted because the trial court refused to grant the defendant's motion to dismiss the defendant's indictment made on the grounds of a violation of due process because there was a 55-day delay between the commission of the offense and the defendant's arrest and it was argued that because of the delay the defendant could not remember the date of the alleged offense for which the defendant might have been able to provide an alibi defense, this was held not enough in itself to justify dismissing the indictment. Croom v. State, 165 Ga. App. 676, 302 S.E.2d 598 (1983).

Charge must allege all necessary elements of crime. — Juvenile court erred in adjudicating the juvenile delinquent on the ground that the juvenile violated the Georgia Street Gang Terrorism and Prevention Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-15-1, as the state's delinquency petition did not allege an essential element of the offense, namely, the predicate acts upon which the "pattern of criminal gang activity" was based; accordingly, the juvenile's procedural due process rights were violated when the juvenile court adjudicated delinquency based on that offense, as the insufficiency in the state's petition meant the juvenile was denied the juvenile's due process rights because of an inability to prepare an adequate defense. In the Interest of E.S., 262 Ga. App. 768, 586 S.E.2d 691 (2003).

Provision for substitute counsel may be justified at lineup. — Although the right to counsel at a lineup usually means a right to the suspect's own counsel, provision for substitute counsel may be justified on the ground that the substitute counsel's presence may eliminate the hazards which render the lineup a critical stage for the presence of the suspect's own counsel. Summerville v. State, 226 Ga. 854, 178 S.E.2d 162 (1970).

Indictment must identify victim, if known. — When the defendant was charged by indictment with crimes against a minor victim who was identified by initials only, the court found that such was insufficient because the defendant was entitled to be charged by an indictment in perfect form; failure to identify the victim with a full name, if known, violated the defendant's constitutional rights to due process under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I and U.S. Const., amend. 5, as well as the defendant's double jeopardy rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XVIII and U.S. Const., amend. 5. Sellers v. State, 263 Ga. App. 144, 587 S.E.2d 276 (2003).

No fatal variance between indictment and proof. — Fact that an indictment charged the defendant with aggravated assault and battery by slicing the victim's neck with a knife, but the evidence showed the defendant used a box cutter, did not constitute a fatal variance between the indictment and the proof, because the defendant was sufficiently informed of the charges and faced no danger of further prosecution arising out of the incident. Lawson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 852, 630 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

Due process requires dismissal of indictment when preindictment delay causes substantial prejudice to defendant. — Although there is no constitutional right to a speedy indictment or arrest, the due process clause requires dismissal of an indictment if it is shown at trial that preindictment delay caused substantial prejudice to defendant's rights with respect to the events occurring prior to indictment. State v. Madden, 242 Ga. 637, 250 S.E.2d 484 (1978).

Due process not denied by district attorney's role as calendar clerk for arraignments. —

Internal Operating Procedure 2000-3 of the Appalachian Judicial Circuit, under which a district attorney set the time for a defendant's arraignment for aggravated assault and related charges in a road rage incident, did not violate the defendant's right to due process by precluding a challenge to the validity of the notice of arraignment; the defendant filed pre-trial motions related to that very issue and presented arguments during a hearing on the matter. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Subpoena of personal medical records in criminal case. —

In the absence of waiver and without notice to the accused or an opportunity to object, it is not "appropriate" under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-40 for the state in a criminal case to subpoena a defendant's own personal medical records which are then in the possession of a physician, hospital, or health care facility. King v. State, 272 Ga. 788, 535 S.E.2d 492 (2000).

Right to preservation of evidence.

— Defendant's due process rights were not violated by the failure of the investigating officer to preserve the physical evidence of a child molestation as defendant failed to show that the officer's failure to preserve the evidence was in bad faith. Ingram v. State, 262 Ga. App. 304, 585 S.E.2d 211 (2003).

In light of the fact that the defendant was afforded the opportunity to cross-examine the victim at the rape trial, there was no error in the trial court's refusal to dismiss the case based on the ground that police had lost or destroyed a videotape containing the victim's initial statement to the police. Robbins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 843, 627 S.E.2d 810 (2006).

Absent evidence that the state acted in bad faith in failing to preserve potentially exculpatory evidence, and because blood evidence found on a flashlight used by the victim to hit the defendant in the head after being stabbed was not material, but was cumulative of other evidence showing the undisputed fact that the state never denied that the victim hit the defendant in the head with the flashlight, and indeed offered testimony that the victim struck the defendant with enough force to knock the defendant to one knee, the defendant's due process rights were not violated; hence, the trial court did not err in denying a mistrial based on the defendant's allegation that the state failed to preserve potentially exculpatory evidence. Lonergan v. State, 281 Ga. 637, 641 S.E.2d 792 (2007).

The trial court's order dismissing an indictment charging the defendant with rape, incest, aggravated child molestation, and child molestation on grounds that the state improperly failed to preserve lab samples taken from the victim was reversed because the defendant failed to show that the failure was the result of bad faith on the part of the state or the police, and the value of the sample to the defendant was only potentially exculpatory. State v. Brady, 287 Ga. App. 626, 653 S.E.2d 72 (2007).

There was no merit to a defendant's claim that due process had been violated because the state allowed a car in which a shooting took place to be sold from an impound lot before the car could be tested for fingerprints and other evidence. The defendant did not argue that the state had acted in bad faith, and the record did not show bad faith. Lockheart v. State, 284 Ga. 78, 663 S.E.2d 213 (2008).

As there was no showing that a videotape of a criminal incident and crime scene had "apparent exculpatory value" because the images were small, distorted, and non-identifiable, and the state did not act in bad faith when the state failed to preserve the tape, dismissal of an indictment against the defendant due to the state's failure to preserve the videotape was error. State v. Brawner, 297 Ga. App. 817, 678 S.E.2d 503 (2009).

Trial court erred by dismissing criminal charges against the defendant because the master DVD recording of the traffic stop that led to the defendant's arrest was destroyed when an investigator reformatting the DVD while attempting to get the DVD to play. The destruction of the master DVD was not a due process violation because the lost evidence was at best potentially exculpatory and there was no showing of bad faith on the part of the state. State v. McNeil, 308 Ga. App. 633, 708 S.E.2d 590 (2011).

Trial court is not obligated to appoint state-paid psychiatrist to evaluate a defendant even though a special plea of insanity has been filed. Blankenship v. State, 247 Ga. 590, 277 S.E.2d 505 (1981), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 871, 109 S. Ct. 183, 102 L. Ed. 2d 152 (1988), overruled on other grounds, Thompson v. State, 263 Ga. 23, 426 S.E.2d 895 (1993) and, overruled on other grounds, McClellan v. State, 274 Ga. 819, 561 S.E.2d 82 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's request as an indigent for funds to engage a psychologist to assist in the defense when the defendant had not shown that the defendant's sanity at the time of the offense would likely be a significant factor at trial. Nelson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 326, 657 S.E.2d 263 (2008).

When denial of continuance or postponement unconstitutional abuse of discretion. — When facts show that court-appointed attorney was wholly unprepared for trial, after retained counsel withdrew on the date of trial from case, and the court denied the motion for continuance or postponement, this was an unconstitutional abuse of discretion. Smith v. State, 215 Ga. 362, 110 S.E.2d 635 (1959).

Denial of continuance not error when co-counsel present and defendant uninjured. — When none of the statutory requirements necessary for the granting of a continuance were put forth by co-counsel when the case was called, and there was no showing that the defendant was injured by the absence of lead counsel, there was no merit in the complaint that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for continuance because of the absence of counsel and that the defendant had been denied a Sixth Amendment right to counsel and a Fifth Amendment right to due process as guaranteed by the state and federal Constitutions. Blair v. State, 166 Ga. App. 434, 304 S.E.2d 535 (1983).

Procedures used by county in appointing attorneys for indigent defendants did not violate due process when, in the event the public defender's office was unavailable, attorneys were appointed from an alphabetical list in an equitable manner and special considerations were given in death penalty cases. Lewis v. State, 255 Ga. 101, 335 S.E.2d 560 (1985).

Burden of persuasion as to venue. — Although the jury charge was taken from poorly drafted legislation, it did not violate the defendants' right to due process of law by improperly shifting the burden of persuasion regarding venue to the defendants. Napier v. State, 276 Ga. 769, 583 S.E.2d 825 (2003).

Because a police officer testified that the defendant sold methamphetamine from the defendant's residence, the state met the state's burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that venue of the crimes charged was properly in the county in which the defendant was tried; therefore, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial. Borders v. State, 299 Ga. App. 100, 682 S.E.2d 148 (2009).

Court required to make findings on Mandarin Chinese speaker's competency to stand trial without interpreter. — Trial court erred in denying a defendant's motion for new trial based on the defendant's contention that the defendant did not understand the proceedings because an interpreter was not provided to the defendant without making findings; there was sufficient evidence to raise a question as to whether the defendant, whose native language was Mandarin Chinese, was competent to be tried without an interpreter, and the trial court was required to make findings as to the defendant's competency on the record. Ling v. State, 288 Ga. 299, 702 S.E.2d 881 (2010).

Criminal Procedure Discovery Act constitutional. — Because the Criminal Procedure Discovery Act (O.C.G.A. § 17-16-1 et seq.) provides for reciprocal discovery in criminal felony cases with any imbalance favoring the defendant, it does not violate the due process clause of the United States or Georgia Constitutions. State v. Lucious, 271 Ga. 361, 518 S.E.2d 677 (1999).

Prosecutor may not suppress material evidence favorable to the accused, whether or not a request for such information is made or an in-camera inspection conducted. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984).

Defendant was entitled to be informed of the identity of a confidential informant under Brady, only if the informant was the individual seen accessing defendant's car and was not a mere tipster. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 282, 617 S.E.2d 252 (2005), rev'd on other grounds, 280 Ga. 511, 630 S.E.2d 377 (2006); vacated, in part, 283 Ga. App. 630, 642 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

Not every nondisclosure of exculpatory information is error; rather, when the omitted evidence was not specifically requested, nondisclosure is error only if the omitted evidence creates a reasonable doubt that did not otherwise exist. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984).

Defendant was not denied a fair trial because the state improperly withheld a post-arrest videotaped interview of a co-defendant; after review of both the co-defendant's trial testimony and the co-defendant's testimony from the videotaped interview, there was no evidence which would have likely resulted in a different outcome at trial, as at all times, contrary to defendant's contentions, the co-defendant denied ownership of the marijuana. Morgan v. State, 263 Ga. App. 32, 587 S.E.2d 177 (2003).

To establish constitutional violation for denial of motion for discovery of exculpatory material the defendant has the burden of showing that any of the information allegedly withheld improperly was favorable to the defendant, and that the withholding in any way denied the defendant a fair trial. Lewis v. State, 166 Ga. App. 428, 304 S.E.2d 531 (1983).

Defendant's right to exculpatory evidence. — Violations of defendant's due process right to a fair trial arise with the discovery, after trial, of information which had been known to the prosecution but unknown to the defense, or the trial court's failure to order disclosure of materially exculpatory evidence; but the state is under no constitutional or procedural obligation to allow unrestricted discovery and, despite the defendant's ignorance of what is in the state's file, the defendant's right to exculpatory evidence is met by the duty on the state, with or without request, to produce it. Barnes v. State, 157 Ga. App. 582, 277 S.E.2d 916 (1981).

Defendant was not denied defendant's constitutional right to due process by the state's failure to secure exculpatory evidence since the defendant failed to identify any potential evidence that was not investigated or developed by the state; mere speculation that there may be exculpatory evidence was insufficient to show a due process violation. Cameron v. State, 262 Ga. App. 296, 585 S.E.2d 209 (2003).

There was no Brady violation when the information the defendant sought became available at trial; moreover, the defendant had not shown a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different had the evidence been disclosed. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 619, 644 S.E.2d 491 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1169, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 521 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant did not establish Brady violation. — A Brady violation was not established since the defendant knew the identity of a confidential informant (CI) before trial and that the CI had made a deal with the prosecution, had included the CI on the defense's witness list, and introduced evidence of the CI's indictment for drug trafficking. Even assuming, arguendo, that the defendant was not aware of all the circumstances surrounding the deal before trial, the defendant did not show that earlier disclosure would have benefitted the defendant and that any delay deprived the defendant of a fair trial. Therefore, the defendant was not entitled to a mistrial based on a Brady violation. Alford v. State, 293 Ga. App. 512, 667 S.E.2d 680 (2008).

Under Brady, a defendant did not show that the state agreed to any sort of deal with an accomplice witness in exchange for the witness's testimony. To the extent that the witness or the witness's counsel hoped that the witness's testimony would later benefit the witness, their subjective hopes were not evidence that a deal existed; there was no evidence that the prosecutor encouraged the witness or the witness's lawyer to believe that the witness would benefit from testifying against the defendant; and the fact that the state ultimately cooperated with counsel's efforts to reduce the witness's sentence did not prove that the state and the witness had a deal prior to the defendant's trial. Varnier v. State, 297 Ga. App. 799, 678 S.E.2d 515 (2009).

Rights not violated when evidence given to insurance company. — Defendant's due process rights were not violated by the state's turning over of a vehicle to co-defendant's insurance company since the state did not destroy or fail to preserve the alleged exculpatory evidence. King v. State, 262 Ga. App. 37, 584 S.E.2d 652 (2003).

Suppression of material evidence favorable to accused violative of due process. — The suppression by the prosecution of evidence favorable to an accused upon request violates due process when the evidence is material either to guilt or to punishment, irrespective of the good faith or bad faith of the prosecution. Wallin v. State, 248 Ga. 29, 279 S.E.2d 687 (1981).

Forcing prisoner into lineup with other prisoners not violation of due process. — Even though the constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled to give testimony, or do acts, tending to incriminate that person, is to be liberally construed in favor of the accused, forcibly causing a prisoner to take a position in prison in line with other prisoners, there passively to remain while the prisoner is being inspected by the alleged victims for identification as the perpetrator of the crimes, is not in contravention of the rights secured to the prisoner under such provision of the Constitution, nor would the fact that the prisoner had been illegally arrested and imprisoned alter this ruling. Meriwether v. State, 63 Ga. App. 667, 11 S.E.2d 816 (1940).

Identification procedure not overly suggestive. — Identification procedure was not impermissibly suggestive since it was only after the officer had already been given the name of the individual from whom the officer had purchased cocaine that the officer viewed a photograph of the defendant to confirm that the defendant was in fact that individual. Thus, the photograph did not result in the officer's identification of the defendant as the suspect, but merely corroborated that the suspect had been properly identified to the officer as the defendant. Hunter v. State, 202 Ga. App. 195, 413 S.E.2d 526 (1991).

A photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive when all six photographs depicted people of the same race, gender, and general age range as the defendant, with similar hairstyles and facial hair; the defendant's orientation to the camera was the same as that of several other photographs; the head shots in several of the pictures were similar to that of the defendant; and all of the pictures had slightly different backgrounds. It could not be assumed that the fact that the defendant's picture was in the center of the top row gave it greater prominence. Russell v. State, 288 Ga. App. 372, 654 S.E.2d 185 (2007).

Photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive even though defendant was the only suspect who was thin and had red hair as three of the six photographs were of men with red hair, the officer did not suggest to the witnesses that defendant was the perpetrator, but simply read the standard form to them and asked them to look at the pictures, all of the men pictured were approximately the same age, the witnesses identified defendant immediately when shown the lineup, and the witnesses both identified defendant at trial. Standfill v. State, 267 Ga. App. 612, 600 S.E.2d 695 (2004).

Trial court did not err by failing to suppress an out-of-court identification of defendant by a witness, even though the witness was told that defendant was in the photo line-up; the witness had already identified defendant by name and the photo identification was intended as confirmation that defendant was the person identified by name, not as an independent identification. Jackson v. State, 279 Ga. 449, 614 S.E.2d 781 (2005).

Victim's in-court identification of defendant was not tainted by an impermissibly suggestive photo identification as the victim got a good look at defendant during the crime from seven or eight feet away in good lighting, recognized defendant the next day, and picked defendant out of a photo array before hearing any improper comments; further, at trial, the victim was “100 percent, absolutely sure” of the in-court identification. Graham v. State, 273 Ga. App. 187, 614 S.E.2d 815 (2005).

Identification of defendant was not impermissibly suggestive as the procedure used did not lead the identifier to the identification of defendant; the identifier immediately and with certainty identified defendant from a photo lineup and was not told the name of defendant until after the photo was chosen. Graham v. State, 273 Ga. App. 187, 614 S.E.2d 815 (2005).

In-court identification procedure was not impermissibly suggestive since a detective did not tell the victim that the suspect was going to be in the courtroom on the day in question, and since, before allowing the victim to look into the courtroom, the detective made sure that defendant did not stand out among the other people in the courtroom. Doublette v. State, 278 Ga. App. 746, 629 S.E.2d 602 (2006).

Trial court erred in granting a defendant’s motion to suppress a photographic identification as the two steps of the test for determining whether a photographic identification was admissible were erroneously conflated since, without ruling on whether the lineup procedure was impermissibly suggestive, the trial court applied the totality of the circumstances factors and ruled that the victim’s identification was without any substantial factual basis; thereafter, the trial court again applied the totality of the circumstances factors and found that there was a substantial likelihood of misidentification of the defendant as the intruder. State v. Norton, 280 Ga. App. 657, 634 S.E.2d 810 (2006).

Defendant’s identification in a line-up was not unduly suggestive in violation of due process under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, and defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to file a motion to suppress the line-up identification; the testimony regarding the line-up established that the defendant was not showing gold teeth, that all of the participants held their numbers in the same place while the victims separately identified the defendant, and that the officers used no suggestive techniques during the line-up. Robinson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 76, 635 S.E.2d 380 (2006).

Defendant’s motion to suppress two photographic identifications was properly denied as the defendant did not make a sufficient showing as to how the differences in the defendant’s photos would have rendered the lineups or procedures suggestive. Waters v. State, 281 Ga. 119, 636 S.E.2d 538 (2006).

A photographic lineup where the defendant was the only person wearing a hooded sweatshirt was not impermissibly suggestive because there was no evidence that the perpetrator had been wearing a hooded sweatshirt. Cooper v. State, 281 Ga. 760, 642 S.E.2d 817 (2007).

Because: (1) victim’s identification of defendant was based upon independent memory which victim fairly accurately recalled in developing the composite sketch; (2) there was independent basis for victim’s identifications; and (3) there was no substantial likelihood of misidentification under these circumstances, the trial court did not err in admitting the identification evidence and the trial court’s finding that there was no likelihood of misidentification was supported by the record. Price v. State, 289 Ga. App. 763, 658 S.E.2d 382 (2008).

Trial court did not err in concluding that one-on-one show-up identification was reliable despite any possible suggestion implied by officers when they told the victim that they had found the person that robbed the victim and were seeking a warrant; victim had adequate opportunity to view the robber at the scene in adequate lighting, the robber even demanded that the victim stop looking at the robber, clothing matching that of the robber matched clothing found in the defendant’s apartment, and length of time between the crime and confrontation was less than two hours. Ford v. State, 289 Ga. App. 865, 658 S.E.2d 428 (2008).

Criminal Cases (Cont'd)2. Pre-Trial (Cont'd)

Photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive because the defendant was the only one pictured with an open mouth, revealing gold teeth, and the victim had identified the perpetrator as having bottom gold teeth. It was not readily apparent that the defendant's top teeth, the only ones visible, were gold, and apart from the defendant's mouth being open slightly, the lineup depicted people with similar skin color, hair, and overall appearance. Varner v. State, 297 Ga. App. 799, 678 S.E.2d 515 (2009).

Photograph array was not impermissibly suggestive. The people in the lineup had facial features similar to the defendant's, and at least three had slanted eyes; the fact that the defendant's picture was smaller, lighter in color, grainier, and less focused and the fact the defendant's head was more tilted did not make the array impermissibly suggestive; and the defendant failed to explain how the "full-face" lineup conducted here (as opposed to a lineup obscuring all facial features other than the eyes) was impermissibly suggestive. Pinkins v. State, 300 Ga. App. 17, 684 S.E.2d 275 (2009).

Photograph array and physical lineup not overly suggestive. — Since the victim had ample opportunity to observe the defendant at the time of an armed robbery and kidnapping and the identification procedure used was to present the victim with certain photographs from which the victim tentatively identified the defendant, and subsequently, upon the arrest of the defendant, the victim identified the defendant from a physical lineup, the lineup was not unnecessarily suggestive, and even if it was suggestive, did not create a substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. Thus, considering the totality of the circumstances, there was no likelihood of misidentification so as to offend due process. Lee v. State, 165 Ga. App. 549, 301 S.E.2d 906 (1983).

Claimed violation of due process in conduct of pretrial confrontation depends on totality of circumstances. — A one-on-one showup, without more, does not necessarily violate due process. The primary evil to be avoided is the substantial likelihood of irreparable misidentification. Daniel v. State, 150 Ga. App. 798, 258 S.E.2d 604 (1979).

For purposes of identification, accused may not be taken and placed within framework of scene of crime, for identification within the coordinating, incriminating circumstances of the scene. Meriwether v. State, 63 Ga. App. 667, 11 S.E.2d 816 (1940).

Showup found reliable. — Although one-on-one showups are inherently suggestive, the identification need not be excluded as long as the identification was reliable notwithstanding any suggestive procedure under all the circumstances, including consideration of the opportunity of the witness to view the criminal at the time of the crime, the witness's degree of attention, the accuracy of the witness's prior description of the criminal, the level of certainty demonstrated by the witness at the confrontation, and the length of time between the crime and the confrontation. Thus, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress an out-of-court showup identification by the manager of a store who identified defendant as the shoplifter of several store items given that: (1) the manager had a good opportunity to view defendant in the store parking lot as defendant was leaving with the items; (2) the manager quickly gave a physical identification to another store and defendant was soon observed in an apparent attempt to shoplift at the other store; and (3) the manager from the first store then positively identified defendant for the police at the scene within 30 minutes of the original shoplifting incident, all of which indicated that the identification was reliable. Horne v. State, 260 Ga. App. 640, 580 S.E.2d 644 (2003).

Showup identification was reliable when the identifying victim clearly saw the attacker, as the lights were on and they were 25 inches apart when they struggled, the victim correctly identified defendant, the showup occurred shortly after the crime, and the victim was certain of defendant's identification both in and out of court. Patterson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 341, 618 S.E.2d 81 (2005).

Eyewitness identifications were not impermissibly suggestive as the police did not instruct armed robbery victims to identify a defendant at the showup but advised the victims that they would be asked if they could identify two individuals arrested in connection with another incident; the identifications, even if they had been suggestive, were reliable as the parking lot where the incident occurred was well-lit and the showup procedure occurred shortly after the robberies. Billingsley v. State, 294 Ga. App. 661, 669 S.E.2d 699 (2008).

Motion to suppress out-of-court identification erroneously granted. — Defendants' motion to suppress an out-of-court identification of each of them pursuant to a single photograph showup was improperly granted because, in denying defendants' motion to suppress an in-court identification by the same person, the trial court effectively ruled that, based on further evidence of the identifying individual's knowledge of defendants, the trial court might determine that any suggestive out-of-court identification procedures would not render the in-court identification unreliable or subject to a substantial likelihood of misidentification; since the standard for permitting the identifying individual to make an in-court identification of defendants was the same as the standard for permitting the state to offer evidence of the identifying individual's out-of-court identification, the trial court erred by suppressing evidence of the out-of-court identification. State v. Hattney, 279 Ga. 88, 610 S.E.2d 44 (2005).

In-court identification. — Even assuming that the pre-trial identification procedures were improperly suggestive, a victim's and a witness's in-court identifications were admissible because they were based on their independent recollections of the incident since the victim testified in court that the victim was 100 percent certain the defendant was the robber and that the victim's identification of the defendant was based on recognizing the defendant from the incident and the witness testified that the witness was certain the defendant was the person running with the gun on the day of the incident. Boatwright v. State, 281 Ga.

Booking photographs. — Admission of a booking photograph was not irrelevant or so impermissibly suggestive that there was a substantial likelihood of mistaken identification in violation of the due process clause of U.S. Const., amend. 14 or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I since the witness testified that the witness could not identify defendant in court as defendant had grown a beard, grown a long ponytail, and was heavier than at the time of the incident, but the witness was able to identify the person in the booking photograph; thus, the photograph was relevant to identify defendant, and to show how defendant appeared at the time of the crime. Horner v. State, 257 Ga. App. 12, 570 S.E.2d 94 (2002).

Letter voluntarily written by prisoner not product of "custodial interrogation." — A letter voluntarily written by a prisoner to a stranger to the proceedings which comes to the attention of the state through its power to maintain discipline in its detention facilities and not at the request of or by subterfuge of the state (i.e., not a custodial statement) is not the product of "custodial interrogation" and thus is a part of the work product of the state not subject to compelled discovery, except to the extent that such letter may be exculpatory and subject to disclosure under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963). Franklin v. State, 166 Ga. App. 375, 304 S.E.2d 501 (1983).

Submitting to blood-alcohol tests. — Since, under the Constitution of Georgia, the state may constitutionally take a blood sample from a defendant without the defendant's consent, O.C.G.A. §§ 40-5-55 and 40-6-392 grant, rather than deny, a right to a defendant by providing for refusal to take such a test. Allen v. State, 254 Ga. 433, 330 S.E.2d 588 (1985).

The choice provided to a DUI defendant under Georgia law — submitting to a blood-alcohol test or refusing to submit, with resultant sanctions — is not so painful, dangerous, or severe, or so violative of religious beliefs, that no choice actually exists, and does not amount to compulsion on behalf of the state or a violation of due process. Allen v. State, 254 Ga. 433, 330 S.E.2d 588 (1985).

Preservation of breath sample used in auto-intoximeter test not required.

— Neither the federal nor the state constitutional guarantee of due process requires the state to preserve a sample of the breath used in the administration of the auto-intoximeter test. Hopper v. State, 175 Ga. App. 358, 333 S.E.2d 201 (1985).

Admissibility of breath test results.

— Officers' testimony that blood alcohol breath test machines were functioning properly, had been inspected, that no pieces or components were missing, that the officers performed all required tests, and that they prepared the instruments in accordance with their training showed substantial compliance with the required procedures, and admission of the test results was proper; defendants' arguments that the breath test results should have been inadmissible because the machines registered increasing blood alcohol concentration readings as a person continued to blow into them went to the weight of the evidence, which was for the trial court to determine. Whittaker v. State, 279 Ga. App. 148, 630 S.E.2d 560 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's amended motion for a new trial, holding that the administration of breath tests pursuant to Ga. Comp. R. & Regs. 92-3-.06(12)(b) did not violate the due process clause under both U.S. Const., amend. 5 or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, given that: (1) the claim was raised for the first time in the new trial motion, and was thus untimely; (2) the defendant had an alternative remedy under the Georgia Administrative Procedure Act, O.C.G.A. § 50-13-1 et seq.; (3) the defendant failed to show that the Division of Forensic Sciences (DFS) eliminated meaningful procedures for conducting breath tests when it promulgated the rule; and (4) the techniques and methods approved by DFS were sufficient to ensure fair and accurate testing. Palmaka v. State, 280 Ga. App. 761, 634 S.E.2d 883 (2006).

The trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion in limine to suppress the results of a state-administered breath test, as an officer's implied consent warning was substantively accurate so as to allow the defendant to make an informed decision about whether to consent to the test, and solely referred to the defendant's privilege to drive within the state of Georgia with a Georgia driver's license, and not the defendant's Pennsylvania license; further, the officer's initial statement was nothing more than an attention-grabbing preface, and as such did not constitute a substantive change that altered the meaning of the implied consent notice thereafter recited to the defendant. McHugh v. State, 285 Ga. App. 131, 645 S.E.2d 619 (2007).

Court of appeals did not err in reversing an order granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of the state's breath test results because the procedures followed by the state comported with the fundamental fairness required by due process; the police officer delivered to the defendant the required implied consent notice in an accurate and timely manner, thereby informing the defendant of the right to an independent test under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(3), and thus, the state was under no constitutional duty to immediately inform the defendant of the results of the state-administered breath test. Padidham v. State, 291 Ga. 99, 728 S.E.2d 175 (2012).

No due process violation because hard choices on intoxication testing.

— State's failure to immediately inform a defendant of the results of the state-administered test does not create a situation where the defendant is left with no, or so little information, that he or she is denied any meaningful choice in violation of due process; driving under the influence defendants must determine, often under difficult and stressful circumstances, whether to request an independent test, and that the choice may be difficult does not render it fundamentally unfair and this fact alone does not support a due process claim. Padidham v. State, 291 Ga. 99, 728 S.E.2d 175 (2012).

Results of field sobriety tests. — Suppression of field sobriety tests was probably denied since the defendant: (1) was not in custody for the purposes of Miranda when asked to perform the tests; (2) did not make any statement or take any overt act which would have caused a reasonable person to believe that the encounter was anything more than a temporary detention; and (3) voluntarily submitted to the tests. McDevitt v. State, 286 Ga. App. 120, 648 S.E.2d 481 (2007).

Trial court has discretion to order or allow psychiatric examination. — Trial judge has the inherent power to order a psychiatric examination, but the refusal to do so will not be reversed unless it is shown that the want of an examination would infringe upon the defendant's right to a fair trial as guaranteed by the Georgia Constitution. Williams v. Newsome, 254 Ga. 714, 334 S.E.2d 171 (1985).

Medical expert investigator's notes from homicide scene were not a "written scientific report" within the purview of former O.C.G.A. § 17-7-211 and did not have to be furnished to defendant upon the latter's request. Pierce v. State, 209 Ga. App. 366, 433 S.E.2d 641 (1993).

Applying four-part Barker speedy trial test. — While the trial court was authorized to conclude that the "lead officer" in the prosecution against the defendant was a material and necessary witness who was unavailable for 14 months while the defendant's case was pending, and thus a continuance during that period was proper under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-31, despite the fact that no explanation was given for the remainder of the delay, given that the defendant failed to prove any of the other Barker v. Wingo factors in determining whether a speedy trial violation occurred, the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment on speedy trial grounds was properly denied. Bell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 300, 651 S.E.2d 218 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0031, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 811 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant's speedy trial right under the Sixth Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a) was not violated when the defendant was arrested in 1998, indicted in 1999, and tried in 2004. Part of the delay was caused by the defendant's mistaken release; defense counsel shared responsibility for the delay; the defendant had not asserted the right to a speedy trial until the day before the commencement of the defendant's first trial; there was no oppressive pretrial incarceration because the defendant had been incarcerated for only four or five months; and the death of a witness was not prejudicial because the witness's identification of a person fleeing the crime scene as someone other than the defendant did not preclude the possibility that the defendant was the other person seen running from the scene and because counsel evidently regarded the deceased witness's observations as harmful to the defense. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 17, 663 S.E.2d 142 (2008).

Trial court erred in denying a defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment since there was a four-year delay between the defendant's arrest and the trial court's denial of the defendant's speedy trial motion, and the trial court failed to address the reason for the lengthy delay and failed to make even a bare conclusion about how the Barker factors balanced against each other. Watkins v. State, 315 Ga. App. 708, 727 S.E.2d 539 (2012).

Denial of motion to sever. — Because a second of two defendants failed to show the presence of any confusion engendered by the number of defendants or the law, the defenses were not antagonistic, and accomplice testimony against the first defendant did not involve or incriminate the second defendant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the second defendant's motion to sever the trial from that of the first defendant; hence, the second defendant failed to show that the court's refusal to sever caused prejudice or a due process violation. Williams v. State, 280 Ga. 584, 630 S.E.2d 370 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to sever a joint trial, as: (1) each of the co-defendants was jointly charged with the same offenses, and the offenses were committed simultaneously; (2) there was no danger of confusion as to the law and evidence applicable to each, as virtually all of the evidence tended to show their joint guilt; (3) severance was not required solely because each of the three defendants shared the same last name; and (4) the defenses were complimentary, not antagonistic, in that all argued that the State had charged the wrong men and had failed to prove its case. Hence, the defendant failed in the burden of showing prejudice and a denial of due process. Adkins v. State, 281 Ga. 301, 637 S.E.2d 714 (2006).

The denial of the defendant's motion to sever the defendant's trial from that of a codefendant did not deny the defendant a fair trial; the defendant had not shown harm caused by the failure to sever, and the defendant did not point to any testimony or other evidence introduced at the joint trial that could not have been introduced against the defendant in a separate trial. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 619, 644 S.E.2d 491 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1169, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 521 (Ga. 2007).

3. Trial

Denial of motion for mistrial did not deny defendant fair trial. — Because the trial court issued a prompt curative instruction in response to an alleged improper vouching of the victim by a police lieutenant and took corrective measures to ensure that the jury could follow those corrective measures, the court did not deny the defendant a right to a fair trial by denying a motion for a mistrial based upon that testimony. Cortez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 170, 648 S.E.2d 488 (2007).

While the trial court did not necessarily rebuke the prosecutor, because it did give curative instructions informing the jury that a cell phone used in the state's closing argument was not evidence, the demonstration was not to be considered, and the demonstration was completely irrelevant to the case, the defendant was not entitled to a mistrial as a result; further, the appeals court agreed with the trial judge that the improper demonstration did not prejudice the defendant because enough other evidence existed for the jury to come to its conclusion without relying on the improper demonstration. Cook v. State, 287 Ga. App. 81, 650 S.E.2d 757 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 127 (Ga. 2008).

Single, one-word reference to a previous trial, which reference occurred as a result of confusion as to which pretrial hearing defense counsel was referring, did not make a mistrial essential to the preservation of a defendant's right to a fair trial. Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court denied the mistrial motion. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 17, 663 S.E.2d 142 (2008).

Bifurcated proceedings. — Trial court did not deprive the first and second defendants of due process under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I and U.S. Const., amend. 5 in failing to sever, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-8-4, their trials in a case involving the three defendants, who were allegedly involved in a conspiracy; because each defendant was implicated by each defendant's own statement, the defendants failed to show how they were prejudiced by the joint trial, and there was no showing of antagonistic defenses. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 14, 635 S.E.2d 723 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1215, 127 S. Ct. 1266, 167 L. Ed. 2d 91 (2007).

Defendant's conviction was affirmed as trying the issues of guilt and sentence before the same jury in bifurcated proceedings was not unconstitutional. Walker v. State, 281 Ga. 157, 635 S.E.2d 740 (2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 833, 128 S. Ct. 60, 169 L. Ed. 2d 50 (2007).

Due process not denied when evidence was admissible as prior inconsistent statement. — Defendant was not denied due process when the trial court admitted hearsay testimony of a detective regarding statements made by a co-conspirator after the co-conspirator denied remembering the crime or giving the police any information; the testimony was admissible as substance evidence under the prior inconsistent statement exception to the hearsay rule. Robinson v. State, 278 Ga. 31, 597 S.E.2d 386 (2004).

Criminal defendant cannot be denied opportunity to have expert examine critical evidence. — Fundamental fairness is violated when a criminal defendant on trial for the defendant's liberty is denied the opportunity to have an expert of the defendant's choosing, bound by appropriate safeguards imposed by the United States Supreme Court, examine a piece of critical evidence whose nature is subject to varying expert opinion. United States v. Gaultney, 606 F.2d 540 (5th Cir. 1979), modified, 615 F.2d 642 (5th Cir. 1980), rev'd on other grounds, 451 U.S. 204, 101 S. Ct. 1642, 68 L. Ed. 2d 38 (1981).

Similar crimes evidence. — When a defendant was charged with violating O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60(b), the admission of similar crimes evidence did not violate due process; evidence that following the defendant's arrest on the Georgia charge, the defendant had been arrested in Florida for possession of illegally reproduced recordings was appropriate for showing scheme and course of conduct, and the Florida act was sufficiently similar to the Georgia charges. Hayward-El v. State, 284 Ga. App. 125, 643 S.E.2d 242 (2007).

Defendant not prohibited from challenging state's evidence. — Defendant's claim that the defendant was denied due process because the state used "false evidence" to convict the defendant failed because the defendant was not prevented in any way from challenging the state's evidence that the defendant contended was incorrect, evidence regarding the use of cell phone records to show location, and the defendant chose not to challenge the evidence. Davis v. State, 292 Ga. 90, 734 S.E.2d 401 (2012).

Refusal to disclose informant's identity. — Trial court did not err in refusing the defendant's request to disclose the identity of a confidential informant in order to support an entrapment defense, as the defendant was unable to present an arguably persuasive case regarding the lack of a predisposition to commit the crime, based specifically on: (1) a discussion with a detective about the impending drug sale; (2) the defendant's act of displaying a weapon considered to be protection against a robbery; and (3) the defendant's act of coordinating the movements of the numerous participants in the large-scale transaction the defendant was a part of; hence, no due process violation resulted. Griffiths v. State, 283 Ga. App. 176, 641 S.E.2d 169 (2006).

Right to testify not violated. — Defendant's constitutional right to testify in the defendant's own behalf was not violated. The trial court established that the defendant knew that the defendant had the right to testify if the defendant wanted to but elected not to after consulting with defense counsel. Branford v. State, 299 Ga. App. 890, 685 S.E.2d 731 (2009).

Cross-examination. — Even if the state violated the defendant's due process rights in asking whether the victim's death was accidental on cross-examination, any error was harmless, based on the overwhelming evidence that the victim's injuries were not accidental. Thomas v. State, 281 Ga. 550, 640 S.E.2d 255 (2007).

When the defendant's conviction or acquittal is dependent upon identification of substance as contraband, due process of law requires that analysis of the substance not be left completely within the province of the state; but the defendant does not have an absolute, unqualified right to examine such evidence. Emmett v. State, 243 Ga. 550, 255 S.E.2d 23 (1979).

Trial court's comments on evidence. — Claim that defendant's rights to due process under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I and to effective assistance of counsel under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV were violated by the trial court's comments on the evidence allegedly in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57, failed; three of the comments were permissible because they were merely reflecting grounds for sustaining objections, another comment was not erroneous because the witness was permitted to answer the question over the state's objection, the trial court's questioning of victims was permissible because the questions were attempts to clarify the children's testimony, and any error by the expert in bolstering the testimony of certain witnesses was a self-induced error. Zepp v. State, 276 Ga. App. 466, 623 S.E.2d 569 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

No denial or abridgment of constitutionally secured right. — Since the petitioner was not forced to go to trial without counsel; and the petitioner did not ask for counsel; and the petitioner was not denied the opportunity to procure counsel; and nothing done by the trial court forbade the petitioner from securing counsel or obtaining the benefit thereof, there was no denial, or even an abridgment, of any right secured to the petitioner by the Constitution of Georgia and that of the United States. Clarke v. Cobb, 195 Ga. 633, 24 S.E.2d 782 (1943).

Conviction reversed due to level of certainty of eyewitness identification instruction. — Defendant's armed robbery conviction was reversed as the only evidence implicating the defendant was the testimony of the two victims identifying the defendant as the perpetrator and as it was error to give the jury the pattern instruction stating that the jury could consider the level of certainty of the victims in their identification of defendant as the perpetrator of the crimes in evaluating the reliability of the identifications; one of the victims was unable to pick the defendant's photo in a photo array and the other victim was able to describe to police the weapon used in the crimes but was unable to give any physical characteristics of the perpetrator. Brodes v. State, 279 Ga. 435, 614 S.E.2d 766 (2005) (Unpublished).

It is not necessary for preservation of due process that defendant personally waive right to jury trial. Little v. Stynchcombe, 227 Ga. 311, 180 S.E.2d 541 (1971).

Constitutional right to jury trial may be waived by proceeding to trial without demanding jury. Clarke v. Cobb, 195 Ga. 633, 24 S.E.2d 782 (1943).

Speedy trial. — The trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in granting the defendants' motions to dismiss the charges filed against the defendants because the court was authorized to find that, as the result of the state's negligence, both of the defendants were subjected to an extraordinarily long delay in being brought to trial, that the defendants were not dilatory in asserting their right to a speedy trial, and that, as a result of the delay, their ability to defend against the belated murder charge was prejudiced. State v. White, 282 Ga. 859, 655 S.E.2d 575 (2008).

Trial according to procedures applicable to all similar cases not denial of due process. — When a citizen is accorded a trial in a court of justice according to the modes of procedure applicable to all cases of a similar kind, it cannot be said that the citizen has been denied "due process of law." Hicks v. State, 196 Ga. 671, 27 S.E.2d 307 (1943).

In the trial of accused for rape, the assistant solicitor-general (now district attorney) in the concluding argument made the statement, "anything less than the death penalty would be a mockery," and when counsel for the accused promptly stated, "We object to that, and ask for a mistrial in this case," and when the court denied that motion by stating, "I will strike the word 'mockery' and tell the jury to put it out of their minds," the court did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial. There was no violation of the rights of the accused under the due process clause of the Constitution of this state, or under the provisions that the accused be given a trial "by an impartial jury." Hicks v. State, 196 Ga. 671, 27 S.E.2d 307 (1943).

Due process requires state to prove beyond reasonable doubt every essential element of crime charged. Avery v. State, 138 Ga. App. 65, 225 S.E.2d 454, rev'd on other grounds, 237 Ga. 865, 230 S.E.2d 301 (1976).

Defendant's right to be present not violated. — Delivery of two notes from the jurors in defendant's absence, did not violate the defendant's right to be present, as the allegedly improper communications were not prejudicial to defendant; one response dealt with a jury charge, which was not a critical stage of the trial, and the second was a denial of access to transcripts to the jury and an exhortation to rely upon their recollection of the evidence, which was harmless; a bailiff did not improperly relay information to the jurors, but instead only relayed the information that was expressly authorized by the trial court. Ford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 695, 617 S.E.2d 262 (2005).

Because the trial transcript failed to support the defendant's claim that the trial court erroneously ordered the defendant be excluded from the courtroom during a critical stage of the proceeding, and in front of the jury, and given what transpired during the brief period that the defendant was absent from the courtroom, no due process violation occurred. Arnold v. State, 284 Ga. App. 598, 645 S.E.2d 68 (2007).

Trial court did not violate a defendant's right to be present when the court responded to two jury questions, one asking if the crime was a misdemeanor or a felony, the other asking if there would be leniency considerations. The trial court responded only that these were not matters for the jury's consideration, and the court formulated the court's response in the presence of trial counsel. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008), overruled on other grounds, Watson v. State, 297 Ga. 718, 777 S.E.2d 677(2015).

Adequate accommodation for defendant's hearing loss. — Defendant's claim of a due process violation because the defendant's hearing impairment prevented the defendant from comprehending the witnesses' testimony was properly rejected. The trial court accommodated the defendant by moving the defendant closer to the witness stand and obtaining a hearing device for the defendant to use, and the defendant's conduct during the trial and statements to defense counsel indicated that the defendant was able to understand the testimony. Neugent v. State, 294 Ga. App. 284, 668 S.E.2d 888 (2008).

Appellant's constitutional right of cross-examination and confrontation of witnesses under U.S. Const., amend. 6, Ga. Const. 1945, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV), and this paragraph was not violated when the court allowed as evidence the recorded radio voice transmission of the deceased victim made while proceeding to the scene of the homicide, because it was allowed only for the purpose of explaining conduct to the satisfaction of the jury and not for the purpose of proving any fact. Callahan v. State, 229 Ga. 737, 194 S.E.2d 431 (1972).

Because defendant was provided a full opportunity for confrontation regarding the victim's prior out-of-court statements, the trial court did not err in admitting a police investigator's hearsay evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

Standard of materiality to be used by the trial judge in determining whether material exculpatory evidence has been suppressed (either when deciding whether the judge must perform an in camera inspection or when refusing such evidence after examining it and then analyzing its significance again in the context of the full trial, which is the better method of determining materiality) is the same as that which applies on appeal, since absent a constitutional violation there is no breach of the prosecutor's constitutional duty to disclose. Barnes v. State, 157 Ga. App. 582, 277 S.E.2d 916 (1981).

Admission of child's hearsay. — Child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal, as a videotaped statement from the victim accusing the defendant of requiring the victim to place the defendant's penis in the victim's mouth was corroborated by another witness; hence, the defendant was not denied due process and the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, did not require corroboration of child hearsay. Simpson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 456, 638 S.E.2d 900 (2006).

Confrontation rights were violated, but admission of hearsay evidence was harmless, given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, the fact that the victim's taped account of the argument between the defendant and the defendant's wife was cumulative to, and corroborative of, the defendant's own testimony, and as the erroneously admitted hearsay evidence did not contribute to the verdict. Delgado v. State, 287 Ga. App. 273, 651 S.E.2d 201 (2007).

Identification of victims not a violation of the right to a fair trial. — During a defendant's trial for aggravated assault and other charges arising out of a road rage incident, the defendant's right to a fair trial was not violated when the children who were in a car at which the defendant allegedly pointed a gun were brought into the courtroom so that their parent could identify them; even if the demonstration was irrelevant, it was not so prejudicial as to violate the right to a fair trial, and moreover, any error was rendered harmless when two of the three children testified at trial and were cross-examined by the defendant's counsel. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Right to present evidence in support of defense. — Defendant was properly denied the right to a new trial under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-23, based on defendant's claim that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel, as defendant failed to show that the outcome of the criminal trial would have differed if trial counsel had acted in another manner; moreover, defendant's claims lacked merit, in that defendant's constitutional right, under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, to present evidence of the victim's prior violent acts was contingent upon defendant's showing that the evidence was relevant to defendant's claim of justification, which defendant failed at showing because there was an eyewitness and medical evidence that defendant shot the victim numerous times in the back. Robinson v. State, 277 Ga. 75, 586 S.E.2d 313 (2003).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for an expert witness at the state's expense, and motion for a continuance so that such expert could review the state's DNA evidence, because without such an expert, the defendant was left with no favorable evidence, and the failure to appoint an expert rendered a trial unfair. Dingler v. State, 281 Ga. App. 721, 637 S.E.2d 120 (2006).

When co-defendant presents no defense, no prejudice. — When the defendant, to obtain a new trial for a denial of severance, must show prejudice and a denial of due process, but when the defendant argues the defendant was prejudiced in that the defendant's defense was inconsistent with that of the co-defendant, the co-defendant's defense cannot be inconsistent with the defendant's when the co-defendant presented no evidence. Ramplay v. State, 166 Ga. App. 521, 304 S.E.2d 574 (1983).

Use of electronic device is subject to supervision of trial judge who may take reasonable measures to assure that the use of the device does not interfere with the dignity, order, and decorum of the court. Davey v. City of Atlanta, 130 Ga. App. 687, 204 S.E.2d 322 (1974).

Trial judge's arbitrary denial of use of recording device as work product denies due process. — For the trial judge to arbitrarily deny use by counsel or a party of a microphonic recording device as a work product for their personal use in a possible retrial or appeal of the case is a denial of due process. Davey v. City of Atlanta, 130 Ga. App. 687, 204 S.E.2d 322 (1974).

Presence of the defendant at defendant's trial is a condition of due process to the extent that a fair and just hearing would be thwarted by the defendant's absence; however, when the defendant is involuntarily absent from the court at the time the jury agrees upon a verdict there is no violation of the defendant's rights if there was no interference with the jury's deliberations, since the defendant has no right to be present while the jury is in seclusion or deliberation. Fowler v. Grimes, 198 Ga. 84, 31 S.E.2d 174, cert. denied, 323 U.S. 784, 65 S. Ct. 266, 89 L. Ed. 626 (1944).

No concomitant right of absence. — Criminal defendant's right to be present at the defendant's trial does not include a concomitant right of absence. Lewis v. State, 164 Ga. App. 549, 297 S.E.2d 303 (1982).

Electronic restraint device on defendant during trial was permissible. — Trial court's utilization on defendant of an electronic restraint device as a security measure during trial was not error since the device was shielded from the jury's view and the defendant failed to show that the defendant was harmed by its use. Lovelace v. State, 262 Ga. App. 690, 586 S.E.2d 386 (2003).

No violation of defendant's fair trial rights when shackles were used at trial. — There was no error by a trial court's denial of a defendant's request to have leg shackles removed during the trial as the shackles could not be seen by the jurors, the trial court took additional measures to ensure that the jurors were unaware of the shackles, and consideration was given to appropriate circumstances; the shackles were not shown to interfere with the defendant's ability to have a fair trial. Council v. State, 297 Ga. App. 96, 676 S.E.2d 411 (2009).

Defendant not deprived of due process because involuntarily absent during jury deliberation and reaching of verdict. — The verdict and sentence in a murder case was not void upon the ground that the accused was involuntarily absent from the court during deliberations of the jury, and at the time the jury reached their verdict since the defendant was present in the courtroom at the time the verdict was published. Fowler v. Grimes, 198 Ga. 84, 31 S.E.2d 174, cert. denied, 323 U.S. 784, 65 S. Ct. 266, 89 L. Ed. 626 (1944).

Waiver of right to test constitutionality of statute making wife incompetent witness for husband. — When, in the trial of a criminal case, the defendant offers his wife as a witness in his behalf and, on objection by the state, her testimony is rejected on the ground that she is not competent or compellable to testify for or against her husband; and when thereafter the objection is withdrawn by the state, and the defendant allowed to introduce his wife, and he refuses to do so, he will be considered as having waived the right to test the constitutionality of the statute making the wife an incompetent witness for her husband on the ground that he waived that right by his refusal to use his wife as a witness in his behalf when he was given an opportunity to do so. Williams v. State, 69 Ga. App. 863, 27 S.E.2d 54 (1943).

Failure to object to exclusion of defendant's parents during child victim's testimony. — Because the defendant failed to object to the exclusion of the defendant's parents from the courtroom, and the failure did not amount to plain error, the appeals court rejected the defendant's contentions on appeal that O.C.G.A. § 17-8-54 was violated, as was the defendant's right to public trial; moreover, the appeals court declined to extend the plain error doctrine to the instant facts. Delgado v. State, 287 Ga. App. 273,

Retrial did not violate due process. — Retrial on child molestation charge did not violate due process, given the legislature's clear intention to prosecute sexual intercourse only as statutory rape. Maynard v. State, 290 Ga. App. 403, 659 S.E.2d 831 (2008).

Admission of defendant's taped telephone conversation not improper. — Admission of the defendant's secretly-taped telephone conversation with a coconspirator did not violate due process guarantees; the elicitation of the defendant's unguarded response to a perceived confidante regarding the circumstances of the crimes in which they had both participated was clearly designed to procure an unfiltered, genuine statement from the defendant. Further, absent any evidence that the police investigative techniques were designed to induce the slightest hope of benefit or fear of injury, the resulting statements were not rendered involuntary. Thorpe v. State, 285 Ga. 604, 678 S.E.2d 913 (2009).

4. Jury Issues

Failure to object to jury. — Because the defense counsel only sought to have a juror removed before the second day of a three-day jury trial based on that juror's acquaintance with three state witnesses, did not ask the jury pool questions related to such information during voir dire, and did not move for a mistrial when the issue arose during trial, the defendant waived any claim that a Sixth Amendment right to a jury trial was violated, and the trial court was not required to grant a mistrial, sua sponte; moreover, because the excused juror was not questioned about any familiarity with the witnesses during voir dire, that juror's selection to sit on the panel was not the result of any concealment or misleading statements. Artega v. State, 282 Ga. App. 751, 639 S.E.2d 634 (2006).

Eyewitness identification pattern jury instruction cannot be endorsed. — In light of the scientifically documented lack of correlation between a witness's certainty in the witness's identification of the perpetrator of a crime and the accuracy of that identification and the critical importance of accurate jury instructions, the pattern instruction authorizing jurors to consider the witness's certainty in his or her identification as a factor to be used in deciding the reliability of that identification cannot be endorsed. Brodes v. State, 279 Ga. 435, 614 S.E.2d 766 (2005) (Unpublished).

Replacement of trial judge after jury charged. — A defendant failed to show that due process was violated when because of an emergency, the trial judge who heard the case and charged the jury was replaced by a different judge who accepted the verdict. Cooper v. State, 281 Ga. 760, 642 S.E.2d 817 (2007).

Jury charge on reliability of identification testimony was harmless error. — Jury charge that provided that a witness's level of certainty could be considered in assessing the reliability of identification testimony was harmless error as: (1) the identification witness was not the victim, viewed the crimes in daylight, already knew the defendant, recognized the defendant's gold teeth, and identified the defendant in a photographic lineup by the defendant's street name; (2) there was significant corroborating evidence, including a first witness's testimony that the defendant intended to kill the victim and the testimony of two other witnesses; and (3) the jury was accurately instructed as to the state's burden of proving the defendant's identity and the possibility of mistaken identification. Woodruff v. State, 281 Ga. 235, 637 S.E.2d 391 (2006).

It is not necessary for preservation of due process that defendant personally waive right to jury trial. Little v. Stynchcombe, 227 Ga. 311, 180 S.E.2d 541 (1971).

Constitutional right to jury trial may be waived by proceeding to trial without demanding jury. Clarke v. Cobb, 195 Ga. 633, 24 S.E.2d 782 (1943).

Jury must be informed of agreement between prosecutor and alleged accomplice whose testimony is crucial. — Due process mandates that the jury be informed of any understanding or agreement reached between the prosecutor and an alleged accomplice, on whose testimony the state's case depends. Williams v. State, 151 Ga. App. 683, 261 S.E.2d 430 (1979).

Jury instruction to conform to indictment. — During a defendant's trial for aggravated assault and other charges arising out of a road rage incident, the trial court's failure to give a jury instruction regarding immunity or leniency granted to witnesses did not violate O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 or the defendant's due process rights; although the trial court began to give the instruction and stopped after a few words, the failure to provide the entire charge was not error because there was no evidence that any witness who testified at trial had been granted immunity or leniency. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Jury charge did not deprive defendant of alibi defense or fair trial right. — Given that the exact date the charged child molestation offense was alleged to have been committed was not stated as a material allegation in the indictment, the trial court did not erroneously instruct the jury that the indicted offenses could be proven to have occurred at any time within the statute of limitations, as the defendant failed to show either the deprivation of an alibi defense or a right to a fair trial resulted by issuing the instruction. Brown v. State, 287 Ga. App. 857, 652 S.E.2d 807 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0393, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 154 (Ga. 2008).

Jurors' visit to crime scene. — In a vehicular homicide prosecution, unauthorized visits to the accident scene by some jurors did not mandate a new trial because the jurors' unanimous affidavits stated that the visits had no effect upon their verdict. Hurston v. State, 278 Ga. App. 472, 629 S.E.2d 18 (2006).

Jurors as convicted felons. — Although the state notified the defendant and the trial court soon after trial that two jurors were convicted felons, because there was no evidence establishing the identity of either juror, documenting the convictions, or showing that either had not had their rights restored, the defendant's due process rights were not violated; thus, denial of a motion for new trial on this ground was proper. Jones v.

Jury instruction to conform to indictment. — Giving instruction on an entire Code section that defined a crime in two ways, when the indictment alleged that defendant committed the crime in only one way, was misleading and violated due process without a limiting instruction directing the jury to consider only whether defendant committed the crime as charged in the indictment. Dukes v. State, 265 Ga. 422, 457 S.E.2d 556 (1995).

Allen charge was not fatally defective because, although the Allen charge contained some inaccurate language and the fact that the jury spent less than an hour deliberating after the charge was given did not prove coercion; it was not an abuse of discretion to deny defendant's motion for a new trial as it was just as likely that the jury reached a verdict quickly after the Allen charge due to a fresh perspective after a night away from deliberations. Graham v. State, 273 Ga. App. 187, 614 S.E.2d 815 (2005).

Valid waiver of trial by jury. — Because the state presented sufficient extrinsic evidence showing that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived a jury trial, even though this evidence conflicted with the defendant's later testimony at the hearing on the motion for a new trial, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial. Davis v. State, 287 Ga. App. 783, 653 S.E.2d 107 (2007).

4. Specific Crimes

Offense of defrauding or obtaining property from state, county, or public officer not violative of due process. —

It is an indictable offense in this state for any person to cheat and defraud the state of any of its money or other property by using any deceitful means or artful practice. It is a felony for any officer, servant or other person in any public department, station or office of government of this state to embezzle, steal, secrete, or fraudulently take and carry away any money or other property or effects belonging to the state. Hence, to defraud or obtain property from the state, county, or a public officer is clearly a substantive penal offense in this state, which does not offend the due process clause of the Constitution of the United States or the due process provision of Georgia's Constitution. Rollins v. State, 215 Ga. 437, 111 S.E.2d 63 (1959).

Sexual intercourse between minors. — Charges that the 13-year-old defendant violated the fornication statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-18, by having sexual intercourse with the defendant's 17-year-old step-brother did not violate Georgia's right to privacy since the defendant did not have the legal capacity to decide whether to engage in sexual intercourse. In the Interest of L.A.N., 276 Ga. App. 477, 623 S.E.2d 682 (2005).

O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20 was not unconstitutionally vague under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, as: (1) the statute gave a defendant ample notice of the prohibited conduct; (2) the statute also provided sufficient objective standards to those who were charged with enforcing it; and (3) a defendant's act was made criminal when a false statement was made, without regard to the result of that act, and the fact that application of the statute's standards sometimes required an assessment of the surrounding circumstances to determine if the statute was violated, did not render it unconstitutional. Banta v. State, 281 Ga. 615, 642 S.E.2d 51 (2007).

O.C.G.A. § 20-2-690.1 is not unconstitutionally vague because the statute clearly punished the unjustified failure to send a child for whom one was responsible to school. Pitts v. State, 293 Ga. 511, 748 S.E.2d 426 (2013).

O.C.G.A. § 16-17-1 et seq. not void for vagueness. — The trial court did not err in rejecting both the defendants' equal protection and vagueness challenges to O.C.G.A. § 16-17-1 et seq., after the defendants were charged with violating O.C.G.A. § 16-17-2, as both the defendants as in-state lenders, were not similarly situated with out-of-state banks designated in O.C.G.A. § 16-17-2(a)(3), and hence were subject to state regulation restricting high interest rates on loans, whereas the out-of-state banks were not; the Georgia legislature had a rational basis for creating a class based on those in-state payday lenders who were subject to state regulation, and moreover the prohibition against payday loans in whatever form transacted, was sufficiently definite to satisfy due process standards. Glenn v. State, 282 Ga. 27, 644 S.E.2d 826 (2007).

Marijuana statute did not create mandatory presumption of guilt. — O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(b) did not violate due process by creating a mandatory presumption of guilt. The court interpreted the statute as the court had before to render the statute valid and to carry out the legislative intent of establishing that possession of an ounce or less of marijuana was a misdemeanor. In the Interest of D.H., 285 Ga. 51, 673 S.E.2d 191 (2009).

Exclusionary sperm test not required in rape trial. — In a rape trial, the fact that an exclusionary sperm test (which purportedly classifies sperm into particular blood groupings for identification purposes) was not performed is not grounds for reversal, and due process does not require the performance of the test. Gray v. State, 151 Ga. App. 684, 261 S.E.2d 402 (1979).

Contempt. — Because a property owner was held in criminal contempt for violation of a six-month protective order in favor of a neighbor, but the owner was not given notice of the contempt allegations prior to the hearing on the matter, the owner's due process rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I and U.S. Const., amend. 14 were violated; as there was no evidence that the owner waived the issue, reversal of the contempt order was required. Knapp v. Cross, 279 Ga. App. 632, 632 S.E.2d 157 (2006).

Opportunity to be heard required when act of criminal contempt not in court's presence. — When a criminal contempt act is not in the court's immediate presence, due process requires that the accused be given an opportunity to be heard. Martin v. Waters, 151 Ga. App. 149, 259 S.E.2d 153 (1979); McDaniel v. State, 202 Ga. App. 409, 414 S.E.2d 536 (1992).

Hearing not required if contempt committed in presence of court. — When a direct contempt is committed in the presence of the court, the offender is not entitled as a matter of right to a hearing before the court; the court may act on the court's own knowledge of the facts and proceed to impose punishment for the contempt; or the court may in the court's discretion allow a hearing; the refusal to allow a hearing does not deprive the defendant of the due process of law guaranteed by the state and federal Constitutions. Garland v. State, 99 Ga. App. 826, 110 S.E.2d 143 (1959), later appeal, 101 Ga. App. 395, 114 S.E.2d 176 (1960); Martin v. Waters, 151 Ga. App. 149, 259 S.E.2d 153 (1979).

Proof beyond reasonable doubt required in criminal contempt prosecution. — It is a denial of a defendant's right of due process of law under the federal and state constitutions and O.C.G.A. § 24-4-5 to fail to require proof beyond a reasonable doubt in a criminal contempt prosecution, because the result of such a conviction is to deny the contemner liberty and the levy of a penal fine. In re Crane, 253 Ga. 667, 324 S.E.2d 443 (1985).

5. Sentencing

Penalty under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30.1 upheld. — O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30.1, which subjects a defendant to a greater penalty for the sale of a non-controlled substance than for the sale of some controlled substances, does not violate due process. Thompson v. State, 254 Ga. 393, 330 S.E.2d 348 (1985).

Death penalty for codefendant not proven to have directly committed murderous act. — Since the defendant was not only present but active and participating throughout the commission of kidnapping, rape, murder and aggravated assault of which the defendant was convicted, imposition of the death penalty was not excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed in similar cases even though it was not established whether the defendant or the codefendant fired the gunshots which killed the victim. Johnson v. Zant, 249 Ga. 812, 295 S.E.2d 63 (1982).

When evidence inadmissible under evidentiary rule admissible in capital case in mitigation of punishment. — Constitution requires that evidence which would be inadmissible under an evidentiary rule must not automatically be excluded if tendered in a capital case in mitigation of punishment: the potentially mitigating influence of the testimony must be weighed against the harm resulting from the violation of the evidentiary rule. In close cases, the doubt should be resolved in favor of admissibility. Collier v. State, 244 Ga. 553, 261 S.E.2d 364 (1979), overruled on other grounds, Satterfield v. State, 248 Ga. 538, 285 S.E.2d 3 (1981); Thompson v. State, 263 Ga. 23, 426 S.E.2d 895 (1993), overruled on other grounds, McClellan v. State, 274 Ga. 819, 561 S.E.2d 82 (2002).

New date of execution entered without defendant's presence did not violate due process. — Although it was necessary for the defendant to have been present in court when the original sentence of execution was pronounced, as well as during other proceedings throughout the trial, in the absence of waiver, no violation of due process appears when the attack is not on the original sentence, but merely on an order fixing a new date of execution, entered without the presence of the defendant at that time, which became necessary after the date fixed in the original sentence had passed by reason of a supersedeas pending the determination of a writ of error in this court. Setting a new date of execution is not a new sentence of defendant as to which the judge has no discretion, but merely setting the time. Fowler v. Grimes, 198 Ga. 84, 31 S.E.2d 174, cert. denied, 323 U.S. 784, 65 S. Ct. 266, 89 L. Ed. 626 (1944).

Order of trial judge fixing new date for execution of sentence after original date has passed is not void because the defendant is involuntarily absent and has not waived or authorized anyone else to waive the defendant's right to be present at the time and place of resentencing, and the passage of such order is not violative of the plaintiff's rights under the several provisions of the state and federal Constitutions. McBurnett v. Balkcom, 207 Ga. 452, 62 S.E.2d 180 (1950).

Defendant not denied due process because assigned to formerly appropriate commission, not successor. — Fact that trial court in sentencing the defendant assigned the defendant or ordered the defendant delivered to the Prison Commission, which has been abolished, instead of assigning the defendant or ordering the defendant delivered to the Board of Corrections, which succeeded to the powers and duties of the Commission, while not technically in the proper form, is not such an irregularity as is hurtful to any right of liberty nor is it such a defect as to vitiate the sentence and deprive the defendant of due process of law under either the state or federal Constitutions. Dixon v. State, 83 Ga. App. 227, 63 S.E.2d 278 (1951).

Convicted defendant not denied due process when telephone use prohibited but right to hearing granted.

— There was no denial of due process when a defendant was prohibited from making outgoing phone calls after the defendant's conviction when the defendant was granted the right to a hearing upon the ruling and since the defendant failed to show in what manner the defendant's access to counsel was unduly restricted, or to show any harm flowing from the alleged restriction. Wilson v. State, 151 Ga. App. 501, 260 S.E.2d 527 (1979).

Mandatory life imprisonment for second drug conviction. — O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30, providing mandatory life imprisonment for a second drug conviction, does not violate due process or equal protection based on statistical evidence as to the high percentage of African-Americans serving life sentences for drug offenses, nor because it creates an irrational sentencing scheme. Stephens v. State, 265 Ga. 356, 456 S.E.2d 560, cert. denied, 516 U.S. 849, 116 S. Ct. 144, 133 L. Ed. 2d 90 (1995).

Defendant must have notice and opportunity to be heard regarding possible violation of terms of sentence. — To deprive a defendant of liberty upon the theory that the defendant has violated any of the rules and regulations prescribed in a suspended or probated sentence without giving the defendant a notice and opportunity to be heard upon the question of whether or not the defendant has violated such rules and regulations, would be to violate one of the fundamentals of our system of jurisprudence that a person shall not be deprived of a person's liberty without due process of law, which includes notice and an opportunity to be heard. Lester v. Foster, 207 Ga. 596, 63 S.E.2d 402 (1951).

Increasing time served on remand.

— On remand, it was error for the trial court to increase the amount of time the defendant was to serve and to threaten to increase the time once again if the defendant took another appeal. Due process required that vindictiveness play no part in the sentence a defendant received. Schlanger v. State, 297 Ga. App. 785, 678 S.E.2d 190 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1542, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 127 (Ga. 2010).

Due process in sentencing. — Defendant was not denied due process in sentencing because the record indicated that the trial judge did not rely on the victim's apparently false testimony in imposing the sentence, but relied on the severity of the crime. Stephenson v. State, 261 Ga. App. 402, 582 S.E.2d 492 (2003).

Defendant's sentences on guilty pleas to the state's amended accusation were not illegal and defendant's due process rights were not violated by imposition of sentences as a recidivist; defendant was served with the amended accusation, was present at the guilty plea hearing when the prosecutor announced that the state was proceeding on the amended accusation and then set forth factual bases consistent with the amended accusation, and defendant did not file a demurrer or seek a continuance but confirmed that defendant understood all charges and then entered pleas of guilty. Payne v. State, 276 Ga. App. 577, 623 S.E.2d 668 (2005).

Probation revocation. — The notice given to a defendant that the defendant violated probation by committing robbery was sufficient notice that the defendant violated probation by committing the lesser included offense of theft by taking based on the same facts; under these circumstances, the defendant could not reasonably contend for due process purposes that the defendant was not aware of the grounds on which revocation was sought or that the defendant's ability to prepare a defense was compromised. Franklin v.

Statutory aggravating circumstance. — Defendant's death sentence was affirmed as the defendant's death sentence was based upon at least one valid statutory aggravating circumstance, even though the notice of the statutory aggravating circumstances upon which the state intended to rely was not filed until the first day of voir dire; one of the statutory aggravating circumstances relied upon by the state and found by the jury, that the murder was committed while the defendant was engaged in a kidnapping with bodily injury, was alleged in the indictment, and the defendant was on sufficient actual notice for due process purposes of the kidnapping statutory aggravating circumstance. Walker v. State, 281 Ga. 157, 635 S.E.2d 740 (2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 833, 128 S. Ct. 60, 169 L. Ed. 2d 50 (2007).

Vindictive sentencing not found. — Reinstatement of the defendant's original sentence after the defendant objected to a modification of that sentence was not a vindictive sentencing decision, since the original sentence had never been held constitutionally invalid. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. App. 841, 627 S.E.2d 808 (2006).

When revocation of suspended sentence not denial of due process. — Since it appears that full notice and hearing were afforded and that the defendant was represented by counsel both in the original trials and the subsequent revocation proceedings, the revocation of a suspended sentence is not a denial of due process. Cross v. State, 128 Ga. App. 774, 197 S.E.2d 853 (1973).

Even if the grand jury entered a "No Bill" as to a charge against the defendant for criminal damage to property in the second degree and the trial judge in the hearing concerning revocation of probation found "criminal trespass," there was no violation of the due process guarantee bestowed upon defendant by U.S. Const., amends. 5, 14 and the Constitution of this state. Mingo v. State, 155 Ga. App. 284, 270 S.E.2d 700 (1980).

Revocation of the bond of a person charged with stalking lies within the discretion of the trial judge; however, because a bond revocation involves the deprivation of one's liberty, the decision must comport with at least minimal state and federal due process requirements. Hood v. Carsten, 267 Ga. 579, 481 S.E.2d 525 (1997).

Due process requirements can be satisfied in unified revocation hearing. — The failure of a trial court to afford a probationer a preliminary hearing to establish probable cause to conduct a revocation of probation hearing followed by an evidentiary show cause hearing does not violate due process. A probationer's constitutional rights are fully protected in a single dispositional trial. Wilson v. State, 152 Ga. App. 695, 263 S.E.2d 691 (1979), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 847, 101 S. Ct. 133, 66 L. Ed. 2d 57 (1980).

Application of "slight evidence" rule did not deny defendant due process in probation revocation. — When the defendant received written notice of the claimed violation of probation, the disclosure of the evidence against the defendant, an opportunity to be heard in person and to present witnesses and document evidence, and the right to confront and cross-examine adverse witnesses, heard by a neutral and detached judicial officer with a written statement by the fact finder as to the evidence relied on and reasons for revoking probation, application of the "slight evidence" rule did not deny the defendant due process and equal protection. Mingo v. State, 155 Ga. App. 284, 270 S.E.2d 700 (1980).

Establishment of defendant's guilt beyond reasonable doubt not necessary for revocation of probation. — The benefit and protection afforded under the due process and equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions have not been violated in that the establishment of a defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt is not necessary to justify the revocation of a sentence of probation. Mingo v. State, 155 Ga. App. 284, 270 S.E.2d 700 (1980).

Parole revocation not part of criminal prosecution. — Supreme Court of Georgia in Johnson v. State, 240 Ga. 526, 242 S.E.2d 53 (1978), affirming Johnson v. State, 142 Ga. App. 124, 235 S.E.2d 550 (1977), adopted the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in Morrissey v. Brewer, 408 U.S. 471, 92 S. Ct. 2593, 33 L. Ed. 2d 484 (1972), which is as follows: "The revocation of parole is not part of a criminal prosecution and thus the full panoply of rights due a defendant in such a proceeding does not apply to parole revocations. ... Revocation deprives an individual, not of the absolute liberty to which every citizen is entitled, but only of the conditional liberty properly dependent on observance of special parole restrictions." Mingo v. State, 155 Ga. App. 284, 270 S.E.2d 700 (1980).

Change of a tentative parole date by the state parole board did not constitute the revocation of a grant of parole entitling defendant to minimum requirements of due process. Vargas v. Morris, 266 Ga. 141, 465 S.E.2d 275 (1996), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1108, 116 S. Ct. 1329, 134 L. Ed. 2d 480 (1996).

Presumption of vindictiveness did not apply to sentence. — When the defendant was convicted of aggravated assault, burglary, theft by taking, and carrying a concealed weapon, the trial court properly imposed a 111 year sentence of imprisonment, which was within the statutory limits and which was the maximum possible. The presumption of vindictiveness was absent when a trial court imposed a greater penalty after trial than the court would have after a guilty plea; furthermore, the trial court explained that the court imposed the sentence because the defendant's actions were life-threatening, because the jury convicted the defendant of entering the dwelling with intent to commit murder, because the defendant's actions against one victim, the defendant's parent, had escalated from the defendant's previous misdemeanor crimes against the parent, and because the defendant displayed no remorse. Townes v. State, 298 Ga. App. 185, 679 S.E.2d 772 (2009).

6. Appeals

Ineffectiveness of counsel not shown. — Ineffective assistance of counsel claims regarding the defendant's initial post-trial counsel's performance lacked merit, as counsel was neither professionally deficient nor prejudicial because: (1) the defendant waived any right to be present at the two juror interviews; (2) no deficiency could result from counsel's failure to raise meritless objections; and (3) the trial court specifically found that the defendant adequately understood the nature of the charges, and comprehended the proceedings, despite being under the influence of prescribed anti-depressants, and was capable of aiding the defense. Hampton v. State, 282 Ga. 490, 651 S.E.2d 698 (2007).

Postconviction delay caused no actual prejudice. — Aggravated assault indictment was improperly dismissed because a defendant's due process rights were not violated by a seven-year delay in granting the defendant's motion for a new trial after the defendant was convicted; the delay was presumptively prejudicial, no reasonable explanation was provided, and the defendant asserted the right to a prompt disposition, but the defendant did not show actual prejudice resulting from the delay by demonstrating that the death of a witness, the unavailability of other witnesses, or the fading of memories prejudiced the defense in a new trial. Threatt v. State, 282 Ga. App. 884, 640 S.E.2d 316 (2006).

Defendant was not entitled to relief based on a claim that the twelve year delay caused by appointed counsel's failure to pursue the defendant's post-conviction appeals violated the defendant's due process rights, because the delay was due solely to the actions of the defendant's previous appellate counsel and the defendant failed to show prejudice. Hargrove v. State, 291 Ga. 879, 734 S.E.2d 34 (2012).

Ten year postconviction delay caused no actual prejudice. — While the 10-year delay between the defendant's conviction and the appellate hearing was an inordinate delay and the defendant attempted to assert an appeal during the delay, the delay did not violate the defendant's right to due process because the defendant failed to show prejudice. Brinkley v. State, 320 Ga. App. 275, 739 S.E.2d 703 (2013).

Burden on defendant to show how case materially prejudiced. — Due process requires that there be no suppression by the state of evidence in its files favorable to the accused; this does not mean there is a burden on the state to open its file for general inspection by the defendant; an in camera inspection of the prosecution's file by the judge is sufficient, and the defendant has the burden of showing how the defendant's case has been materially prejudiced. Howell v. State, 157 Ga. App. 451, 278 S.E.2d 43 (1981).

Delay in filing transcript. — Defendant was not deprived of defendant's due process rights by a seven-month delay in the filing of the transcript as defendant did not show that the delay impacted defendant's ability to adequately present defendant's appeal or impaired any defense that defendant might have had. Carter v. State, 267 Ga. App. 520, 600 S.E.2d 637 (2004).

Harm resulting from missing portions of transcript must be shown. — Defendant's general allegation of prejudice resulting from omission of portions of trial transcript due to mechanical malfunction was insufficient absent a specific showing of harm. Kelly v. State, 174 Ga. App. 424, 330 S.E.2d 165 (1985).

Delay in preparing transcript. — Although a four-year delay occurred in preparing the trial transcript in defendant's criminal trial, that mere passage of time was not enough to constitute a denial of due process; indeed, the defendant could not show prejudice as a result of the delay. Glenn v. State, 279 Ga. 277, 612 S.E.2d 478 (2005).

Standard for evaluation of evidence in state criminal trial is of sufficiency of evidence. — The standard by which this court must evaluate the evidence in a state criminal trial to determine whether the petitioner has been accorded constitutional due process was recently reformulated by the Supreme Court of the United States; instead of determining whether or not there is "any evidence" to support the petitioner's conviction, the court must now go further and satisfy itself that the evidence in the record could reasonably support a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt; the question, therefore, is not a question of the presence of evidence in the record but of the sufficiency of that evidence. Holloway v. McElroy, 474 F. Supp. 1363 (M.D. Ga. 1979), aff'd, 632 F.2d 605 (5th Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 1028, 101 S. Ct. 3319, 69 L. Ed. 2d 398 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Baker v. Montgomery, 811 F.2d 55 (11th Cir. 1987).

Remedy of writ of habeas corpus when defendant denied due process in trial. — Writ of habeas corpus is the appropriate remedy only when the court was without jurisdiction in the premises, or when it exceeded its jurisdiction in passing sentence by virtue of which the party is imprisoned, or when the defendant in the defendant's trial was denied due process of law, in violation of U.S. Const., amend. 14 and this paragraph. Balkcom v. Parris, 215 Ga. 122, 109 S.E.2d 48 (1959).

Use of writ of habeas corpus. — A person in custody under a sentence in a misdemeanor case is not entitled to be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that the person was denied the right to be tried by a jury, merely because the trial judge determined the case without a jury when the act governing the procedure of the court in which the person was tried contains a provision that a jury trial be had when demanded by the accused, and no demand therefor was made. Clarke v. Cobb, 195 Ga. 633, 24 S.E.2d 782 (1943).

Since the writ of habeas corpus cannot be used merely as a substitute for a writ of error or other remedial procedure to correct errors of law, of which the defendant had an opportunity to utilize, no question as to guilt or innocence or as to any irregularity can be so raised, unless it was such as to render the judgment wholly void. White v. George, 195 Ga. 465, 24 S.E.2d 787 (1943).

Discharge under writ of habeas corpus, after conviction, cannot be granted unless the judgment is absolutely void; as when the convicting court was without jurisdiction, or when the defendant in the defendant's trial was denied due process of law, in violation of U.S. Const., amend.

14, Sec. 1 and the state Constitution. White v. George, 195 Ga. 465, 24 S.E.2d 787 (1943).

Writ of habeas corpus was properly denied when the contention that the plaintiff in error was denied certain constitutional rights, including due process of law, because of the refusal to continue the case was decided on the motion for new trial adversely to the contentions of the plaintiff in error. Starr v. Balkcom, 209 Ga. 680, 75 S.E.2d 5 (1953).

Preservation for review. — When a due process issue a defendant raised on appeal was not raised in the trial court, the claim presented nothing for appellate review. Franklin v. State, 286 Ga. App. 288, 648 S.E.2d 746 (2007).

When representation by counsel comports with due process. — Ineffective assistance of counsel claims regarding the defendant's initial post-trial counsel's performance lacked merit, as counsel was neither professionally deficient nor prejudicial because: (1) the defendant waived any right to be present at the two juror interviews; (2) no deficiency could result from counsel's failure to raise meritless objections; and (3) the trial court specifically found that the defendant adequately understood the nature of the charges, comprehended the proceedings, despite being under the influence of prescribed anti-depressants, and was capable of aiding the defense. Hampton v. State, 282 Ga. 490, 651 S.E.2d 698 (2007).

Failure to provide a speedy appeal. — Defendant's state and federal due process rights were not violated by the lack of a speedy appeal as: (1) there was no evidence that the eight-year delay in filing the notice of appeal was due to the state or to defendant's counsel; (2) since the post-trial motions for new trial filings were pro se, the inference was that defendant desired to proceed without counsel and without appealing; (3) defendant failed to show prejudice from the delay as the appeal was without merit; and (4) defendant's attempt to show prejudice based on the death of trial counsel was rejected as trial counsel testified at the new trial hearing. Butler v. State, 277 Ga. App. 57, 625 S.E.2d 458 (2005).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Notice and hearing before administrative agency required before action to revoke license. — The due process clauses of U.S. Const., amend. 14, and this paragraph require notice and a hearing before an administrative agency before any action may be taken to revoke a license; this constitutional requirement must be met, even though the act granting the right to revoke the license provides for an appeal to the superior court. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 1.

It is necessary that law under which administrative hearings are conducted prescribe notice and hearing, and it is not sufficient that a notice and hearing are given, even though not required by law. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 1.

Industries' requiring environmental protection division personnel to sign waivers of liability is unreasonable restriction on police power. —

Requiring environmental protection division personnel to sign waivers of liability for industries for injuries to person or property sustained while on premises for the purpose of carrying out their duties of inspection constitutes an unreasonable restriction on the state's police power and any such waiver is not binding on EPD personnel because of a lack of valid consideration. 1976 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 76-121.

Use of inactive railroad right-of-way as trail. — Under the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) procedures, a railroad may enter into an agreement which allows interim trail use of an inactive right-of-way, without triggering reversionary interests under state law; absent such agreement, upon approval of abandonment by the ICC, state law determines the nature, scope and duration of the interest held by the railroad. 1992 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U92-11.

This paragraph is a safeguard against the dangers of arbitrary power. Cutsinger v. City of Atlanta, 142 Ga. 555, 83 S.E. 263, 1915B L.R.A. 1097, 1916C Ann. Cas. 280 (1914).

Pro se litigant sued government and court officials alleging Georgia's alimony provisions, O.C.G.A. § 19-6-1 et seq., violated (1) the right to privacy, protections of the equal protection clause, and prohibitions against involuntary servitude, as contained in the U.S. Constitution; and (2) the right to privacy, due process provisions, equal protection provisions, privileges and immunities clause, prohibitions on involuntary servitude, and prohibitions against legislation based on social status, as guaranteed by the Georgia Constitution. However, the federal court determined that plaintiff must raise these constitutional challenges as part of the litigant's state divorce proceedings, and, furthermore, that Georgia had an important state interest in enforcing these provisions. Cormier v. Green, 2005 U.S. App. LEXIS 14034 (11th Cir. July 12, 2005) (Unpublished).

Behavior prescribed by O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30(b) did not involve fundamental right. — Defendants equal protection challenge under U.S. Const., amend. XIV and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II failed since the defendants were similarly situated to the defendants against whom the state sought the death penalty under one or more of the statutory aggravating circumstances as provided in O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30(b). The trial court did not err in refusing to apply strict scrutiny analysis in considering the defendants' equal protection challenge on the basis that the punishment prescribed by the criminal statute involves an interference with a fundamental right. The proper inquiry was whether the behavior involved a fundamental right, and the obvious answer was that the behavior did not. Fair v. State, 288 Ga. 244, 702 S.E.2d 420 (2010).

O.C.G.A. § 44-13-100(a)(9) is constitutional. — O.C.G.A. § 44-13-100(a)(9) did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, when the legislature rationally balanced the needs of creditors and bankruptcy debtors in requiring the debtors to sacrifice more of the debtor's penumbral property in order to obtain greater relief on property more central to a fresh start. McFarland v. Wallace (In re McFarland), 790 F.3d 1182 (11th Cir. 2015).

Protection of Property

Protection of private property. — The Constitution of this state, by repeated declarations, leaves no room for doubt but that it intends to place around private property the same safeguards with which it shields life and liberty. Cox v. GE Co., 211 Ga. 286, 85 S.E.2d 514 (1955).

The right of the humblest individual in the enjoyment of property must be protected. The power to take private property from the owner for public use often works extreme hardship and savors of oppression. Williams v. City of La Grange, 213 Ga. 241, 98 S.E.2d 617 (1957).

If one is granted the liberty to invade another's private property over the objection of the owner, the result is destruction of property without due process. Clark v. State, 219 Ga. 680, 135 S.E.2d 270 (1964).

Any invasion of the owner's dominion over the use or sale of the owner's private property, regardless of its degree, is interdicted by this paragraph. Clark v. State, 219 Ga. 680, 135 S.E.2d 270 (1964); Durham v. State, 219 Ga. 830, 136 S.E.2d 322 (1964).

Deprivation of property is denial of constitutional protection. — Protection of the citizen and the citizen's property is not afforded when courts deprive the citizen of the possession of the citizen's property when the citizen's right thereto has not been forfeited under some rule of law. Frankel v. Frankel, 212 Ga. 643, 94 S.E.2d 728 (1956).

Right to transact business in a manner not contrary to public health, safety, morals, or public policy is a protected constitutional right and must be preserved to the citizens without discrimination. Hughes v. Reynolds, 223 Ga. 727, 157 S.E.2d 746 (1967).

Right to use property for business purpose. — In the absence of valid zoning regulations or restrictive covenants to the contrary, the right to use one's property for a lawful business purpose is a right inherent in the ownership of the property, and is protected by the law. Sikes v. Pierce, 212 Ga. 567, 94 S.E.2d 427 (1956).

Right to sell property. — The unshackled right to sell one's own property for a lawful use is within itself property protected by the Constitution and is beyond the reach of legislative impairment. Gray v. Georgia Real Estate Comm'n, 209

Ga. 301, 71 S.E.2d 645 (1952).

Billboard restrictions. — Denial of permission to a landowner to raise a billboard following reconstruction of a highway which reduced visibility of the billboard to traffic was not a denial of equal protection since the landowner failed to show that the landowner received treatment dissimilar to others similarly situated. Moreton Rolleston, Jr. Living Trust v. DOT, 242 Ga. App. 835, 531 S.E.2d 719 (2000).

Protection applies to children. — See In re G.L.H., 209 Ga. App. 146, 433 S.E.2d 357 (1993).

This constitutional right of protection extends equally to children as well as adults. In re S.H., 204 Ga. App. 135, 418 S.E.2d 454 (1992).

Public office is not property within the sense of constitutional guaranties. Walton v. Davis, 188 Ga. 56, 2 S.E.2d 603 (1939).

A licensee facing the possibility of the loss of a license/livelihood must be allowed access to information held by the board that is exculpatory in order for the application of O.C.G.A. §§ 43-1-19(h)(2) and 43-34-37(d) to reach a constitutional result. Wills v. Composite State Bd. of Medical Exmrs., 259 Ga. 549, 384 S.E.2d 636 (1989).

Legislative control of statutory remedies. — Whatever legal remedies holders of security deeds have are given by virtue of statutes, and these remedies are subject to legislative control. Once given, they are subject to subsequent change when they do not violate vested rights. Hill v. Perkins, 218 Ga. 354, 127 S.E.2d 909 (1962).

Equal Protection

State and federal provisions are substantially equivalent. — This paragraph guarantees equal protection of the laws. Georgia R.R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 125 Ga. 589, 54 S.E. 52 (1906), rev'd on other grounds, 207 U.S. 127, 28 S. Ct. 47, 52 L. Ed. 134 (1907); Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. State, 135 Ga. 545, 69 S.E. 725, 32 L.R.A. (n.s.) 20 (1910), aff'd, 234 U.S. 280, 34 S. Ct. 829, 58 L. Ed. 1312 (1914), aff'd, 234 U.S. 280, 34 S. Ct. 829, 58 L. Ed. 1312 (1914).

This paragraph is the equivalent of a declaration that no person shall be denied the equal protection of the laws. Hobbs v. New England Ins. Co., 93 Ga. App. 687, 92 S.E.2d 636 (1956); State Hwy. Dep't v. Smith, 219 Ga. 800, 136 S.E.2d 334 (1964); Dansby v. Dansby, 222 Ga. 118, 149 S.E.2d 252 (1966).

"Equal protection" provisions of Georgia Constitution, though employing different phraseology than U.S. Const., amend. 14, are substantially equivalent of equal protection of the laws under the United States Constitution.

The equal protection clause of the Georgia Constitution is "substantially equivalent" to the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal constitution. Thus, a female plaintiff must show that she was intentionally discriminated against on the basis of sex in order to recover on her equal protection claim. Suber v. Bulloch County Bd. of Educ., 722 F. Supp. 736 (S.D. Ga. 1989).

The protection of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II and the equal protection clause of the federal constitution are coextensive. Rucks v. State, 201 Ga. App. 142, 410 S.E.2d 206 (1991).

The protection of the equal protection clause in the 1983 Georgia Constitution and the United States Constitution is coextensive; yet this court may interpret the equal protection clause in the Georgia Constitution to offer greater rights than the federal equal protection clause as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court. Grissom v. Gleason, 262 Ga. 374, 418 S.E.2d 27 (1992).

Intent of equal protection. — The equal protection provisions of the state and federal Constitutions are intended to prevent extraordinary benefits or burdens from flowing to any one group. Bickford v. Nolen, 240 Ga. 255, 240 S.E.2d 24 (1977).

Trial court erred in finding that a county board of commissioners violated a property owner's equal protection rights by refusing to re-zone the owner's property even though the board re-zoned the property of a landowner just five miles away on the same day it refused to re-zone the property owner's property; the landowner and the property owner were not similarly situated property owners, as required for equal protection purposes, because the landowner's property involved the existence of a pre-existing, non-conforming use of property and the property owner's property did not have that same designation. Rockdale County v. Burdette, 278 Ga. 755, 604 S.E.2d 820 (2004).

Protection for rights alone. — The equal protection clauses of the federal and state Constitutions protect rights alone, and have no reference to mere concessions or mere privileges which may be bestowed or withheld by the state or municipality at will. Bunn v. City of Atlanta, 67 Ga. App. 147, 19 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 666, 63 S. Ct. 73, 87 L. Ed. 535 (1942).

Protection not for privileges. — Discrimination in the grant of favors by the state or municipality is not a denial of the equal protection of the law to those not favored when the privileges may be bestowed or withheld at will. Bunn v. City of Atlanta, 67 Ga. App. 147, 19 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 666, 63 S. Ct. 73, 87 L. Ed. 535 (1942).

Equal protection applies to all. — An employer is entitled to the equal and impartial protection of the law just as much as the employer's employee. Ellis v. Parks, 212 Ga. 540, 93 S.E.2d 708 (1956).

Like treatment with no arbitrary governmental power. — This constitutional guaranty requires that all persons shall be treated alike under like circumstances and conditions. Our system of government does not allow the exercise of arbitrary power. Dorsey v. City of Atlanta, 216 Ga. 778, 119 S.E.2d 553 (1961); Reed v. Hopper, 235 Ga. 298, 219 S.E.2d 409 (1975).

So long as the law operates alike on all members of the class, which includes all persons and property similarly situated, it is not subject to any objection that it is special or class legislation. Blackmon v. Monroe, 233 Ga. 656, 212 S.E.2d 827 (1975).

Equal protection requires uniformity upon all those coming within a class. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Mann, 234 Ga. 884, 218 S.E.2d 593 (1975).

This paragraph interdicts discrimination in laws. — It demands uniformity and impartiality and hence, forbids discrimination. Simpson v. State, 218 Ga. 337, 127 S.E.2d 907 (1962).

Party claiming equal protection violation must be similarly situated. — Landowners were not similarly situated to their neighbors, who had sought and received a permit and license to build a dock in a coastal marshland area, and the landowners failed to show that they would not have been able to build a dock had they so chosen. Therefore, the landowners' equal protection claim arising out of the issuance of the license to their neighbors failed. Hitch v. Vasarhelyi, 302 Ga. App. 381, 691 S.E.2d 286 (2010).

Discrimination not shown in composing grand jury array. — Plea in abatement of a defendant's indictment for aggravated assault and other charges arising out of a road rage incident on the ground that the grand jury was not a fair and representative cross-section of the community was properly denied because an alleged disparity between the gender distribution in the county and the gender distribution on the grand jury was not indicative of prima facie discrimination; there was no constitutional guarantee that the grand or petit juries impaneled in a particular case would constitute a representative cross-section of the entire community, and the defendant offered no evidence that gender discrimination occurred with regard to the composition of the grand jury array. Adams v. State, 282 Ga. App. 819, 640 S.E.2d 329 (2006).

Number of peremptory challenges afforded codefendants not violative of equal protection. — O.C.G.A. § 17-8-4(b), which allows defendants tried jointly 14 peremptory challenges (while O.C.G.A. § 15-12-165 allows a defendant tried alone nine such challenges) does not violate equal protection as there are valid reasons for discriminating between the peremptory challenges of single defendants and codefendants: the avoidance of undue delay and a needless burden on the public. Dixon v. State, 285 Ga. 312, 677 S.E.2d 76 (2009), overruled on other grounds, 287 Ga. 242, 695 S.E.2d 255 (2010).

Differing treatment in similar circumstances is denial of equal protection. — It is only when laws are applied differently to different persons under the same or similar circumstances that the equal protection of the law is denied. Franklin v. Mayor of Savannah, 199 Ga. 426, 34 S.E.2d 506 (1945); Hughes v. Reynolds, 223 Ga. 727, 157 S.E.2d 746 (1967); City of Calhoun v. North Ga. Elec. Membership Corp., 233 Ga. 759, 213 S.E.2d 596 (1975).

Exclusion of one witness pursuant to rule of sequestration did not violate equal protection. — Application of the rule of sequestration to exclude a single witness, the defendant's father, from trial, while allowing the victim's mother to attend the proceedings, notwithstanding that the mother was a witness at trial, did not violate the guarantee of equal protection. Nicely v. State, 291 Ga. 788, 733 S.E.2d 715 (2012).

Contract bidding process. — Bidding insurer's summary judgment motion was properly granted as to its equal protection claim against a county as the county did not exercise arbitrary power but acted rationally and reasonably in rejecting all bids across the board after it was discovered that a consultant lacked a counselor's license under O.C.G.A. §§ 33-23-1.1 and 33-23-4; because of the taint to the process, all bids were rejected, no classification was created at all, and all similarly situated persons were treated alike. Benefit Support, Inc. v. Hall County, 281 Ga. App. 825, 637 S.E.2d 763 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0306, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 214 (Ga. 2007).

Traffic consideration was rational basis for denying conditional use permit. — City's rationale for granting a conditional use permit to a school, but disallowing it to build a 1500-seat football stadium, did not violate the school's equal protection rights, as evidence that the school's proposed stadium would exacerbate an already existing traffic problem in the area was a rational basis for the denial of that part of the permit; moreover, even if the school had shown it was similarly situated with other property owners whose applications were granted, it failed to show that the city's decision was not rationally related to a legitimate government interest. City of Roswell v.

Although statute providing special benefits may not deny equal protection. — A statute does not deny equal protection merely because certain persons may derive special benefits when all persons within its purview are subject to like conditions. Hancock v. Board of Tax Assessors, 226 Ga. 570, 176 S.E.2d 102 (1970).

Seduction statute (O.C.G.A. § 51-1-16), giving parents a cause of action for the seduction of their unmarried daughter, violates the equal protection clause because only men may be civilly liable under the statute. Franklin v. Hill, 264 Ga. 302, 444 S.E.2d 778 (1994).

O.C.G.A. § 46-3-204 is constitutional. — One-year statute of limitations under O.C.G.A. § 46-3-204 is constitutional because the statute does not violate the Equal Protection Clause of the Georgia Constitution and is not unconstitutionally vague. Daniel v. Amicalola Elec. Mbrshp. Corp., 289 Ga. 437, 711 S.E.2d 709 (2011).

Use of direct recording electronic equipment does not deny equal protection. — Trial court did not err in granting the Secretary of State, the Governor, and the Georgia State Election Board summary judgment in voters' action challenging the use of direct recording electronic equipment on the ground that it denied the voters equal protection under the equal protection clause of the United States Constitution and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II because all Georgia voters had the option of casting an absentee ballot or using the touch screen electronic voting machines on election day, and in deciding to forego the privilege of voting early on a paper ballot, voters assumed the risk of necessarily different procedures if a recount was required; since every Georgia citizen could vote by absentee ballot or by utilizing the touch screen voting system, the voters' contention that there was some state based classification between voters was false. Favorito v. Handel, 285 Ga. 795, 684 S.E.2d 257 (2009).

Election districts unconstitutional. — Citizen was successful in the citizen's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 equal protection challenge to the sizes of board of education districts in a county in Georgia; using the one person, one vote principle, the court declared the districts unconstitutional given their unacceptable deviations from the ideal district population size, enjoined further elections using the old districts, and implemented an interim new district map based on the 2000 census results taking care to ensure that the new map also satisfied the requirements of §§ 2 and 5 of the Voting Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1973 et seq. Markham v. Fulton County Bd. of Registrations & Elections, 2002 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27505 (N.D. Ga. May 29, 2002).

Redistricting attempts for school board members. — While voting rights and the right to run for public office are core constitutional rights, an attempted deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights is not the same as an actual deprivation. Furthermore, incurring legal fees to vindicate rights does not itself establish that those rights were violated. Thus, plaintiff, a school board member, pursuing attempted violations of plaintiff's right to run and hold a designated seat in a pre-defined district, could not succeed as an injunction in another lawsuit and failure of preclearance interfered with the implementation of the efforts of defendants, the local voting registrars; since the attempt to deprive plaintiff of plaintiff's constitutional rights did not succeed, neither can plaintiff's lawsuit succeed. Cook v. Randolph County, 573 F.3d 1143 (11th Cir. 2009).

Photo identification requirement. — In an action by a political party challenging the 2006 Photo ID Act, amending O.C.G.A. § 21-2-417, the photo ID requirement was not an impermissible qualification on voting in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II because the Act did not deprive any Georgia voter from casting a ballot in any election. Democratic Party of Ga., Inc. v. Perdue, 288 Ga. 720, 707 S.E.2d 67 (2011).

Differing terms of court. — O.C.G.A. §§ 15-6-3(15.1) and 17-7-171 did not combine to deprive a criminal defendant of equal protection of the law by permitting the county of the defendant's adjudication to operate with only two terms of court, while other similar-sized counties operate with more terms of court. Although defendant may have had to wait months longer for the defendant's trial than similarly situated defendants in other counties, the presumptive validity of the statutes stood. Henry v. State, 263 Ga. 417, 434 S.E.2d 469 (1993).

Conflicting rules. — Fact that one rule precludes defendant from commenting on state's failure to produce certain witnesses and another rule permits state to comment on defendant's failure to produce certain witnesses does not violate equal protection, as there is a rational reason for the disparity. Wilson v. Zant, 249 Ga. 373, 290 S.E.2d 442, cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1092, 103 S. Ct. 580, 74 L. Ed. 2d 940 (1982), but see, Morgan v. State, 267 Ga. 203, 476 S.E.2d 747 (1996).

Nonresident aliens. — O.C.G.A. § 34-9-265, regarding the award of workers' compensation death benefits, clearly discriminates between U.S. and Canadian citizens and residents on the one hand and all other nonresident aliens on the other. However, the discrimination is not an unlawful one. Barge-Wagener Constr. Co. v. Morales, 263 Ga. 190, 429 S.E.2d 671 (1993), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1003, 114 S. Ct. 579, 126 L. Ed. 2d 477 (1993).

Hearing impaired suspects. — Defendant failed to meet the defendant's burden to show that the procedure whereby criminal suspects who are hearing impaired are not interrogated for up to one hour except in the presence of a translator was arbitrary or otherwise not rationally related to a legitimate state interest. Sisson v. State, 232 Ga. App. 61, 499 S.E.2d 422 (1998).

Jury pool. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII for failing to properly pursue an equal protection objection under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II based on the exclusion of African-Americans from the jury and from the pool of available jurors; the only evidence showed that the population of available African-American jurors in the trial court's county was very small, and the defendant did not show that the jury list failed to contain a fair cross section of the community or that there was purposeful discrimination in the selection of the panel. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

A defendant's Batson challenge was properly denied. The prosecutor stated that one juror had an incarcerated relative, and although the defendant showed that the juror stated that the relationship was not close, the trial court had to decide the credibility of the race-neutral explanation. Nelson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 326, 657 S.E.2d 263 (2008).

When the prosecutor struck a juror because the prosecutor thought that the juror as an immigrant might apply an improper standard of proof, the trial court properly denied the defendant's Batson challenge. Batson did not extend to national origin; moreover, the prosecutor's other reason for striking the juror, that the juror's child had been charged with a crime, was race-neutral. Nelson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 326, 657 S.E.2d 263 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for not using the word "pretextual" in making Batson challenges. Although counsel did not use the word "pretextual," counsel sought to rebut the prosecutor's explanations by arguing either that the strike was not race-neutral or that, considering the totality of the jury's responses to questions on voir dire examination, there was no factual basis for the strike. Nelson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 326, 657 S.E.2d 263 (2008).

Peremptory striking of all black prospective jurors in a case is not per se a denial of equal protection, but presumption protecting prosecutor may well be overcome by proof of systematic exclusion of black jurors by use of peremptory challenges by district attorney resulting in no Negroes ever serving on petit juries in that circuit. Blackwell v. State, 248 Ga. 138, 281 S.E.2d 599 (1981).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude white males. — Despite defendant's ostensibly race-neutral reason for a single contested peremptory strike, after failing to express any reason why the juror's friendship with a district attorney was case-related, and the record failed to indicate that defendant did not challenge at least one other juror with a friend who worked as a prosecutor in the same judicial circuit, upon a showing by the state of a prima facie case of racial discrimination by virtue of defendant's use of all of defendant's peremptory strikes to remove whites from the jury, the trial court's finding that defendant's reliance on non-racial explanations to defend the strike was implausible and a mere pretext to disguise discrimination against white males was not clearly erroneous. Allen v. State, 280 Ga. 678, 631 S.E.2d 699 (2006).

While the trial court found that the state established a prima facie case of defendant's use of racial discrimination in using peremptory challenges, asked defense counsel to explain the basis for each of the strikes, and listened to rebuttal by the prosecuting attorney, based on the assumption that defense counsel had used the peremptory strikes to remove all white males from the venire, the court erred by not applying the three-step Batson/McCollum process in disallowing defendant's exercise of peremptory strikes against jurors 5, 7, and 10 and by ordering those panel members reseated. Moon v. State, 280 Ga. App. 84, 633 S.E.2d 418 (2006).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude minorities. — Trial court did not err in denying the Batson claim raised by defendant in a rape case after the state used two peremptory strikes to strike two African-American jurors; defendant did not carry the burden of proving that the state engaged in purposeful discrimination and, thus, did not show that the jury selection in defendant's case violated defendant's equal protection rights. Walker v. State, 270 Ga. App. 733, 607 S.E.2d 912 (2004).

Trial court erred in ruling that defendants had not shown discriminatory intent and in overruling their Batson challenge because the prosecutor's own explanation established that a discriminatory purpose was involved in the decision; the prosecutor stated that the juror was struck because the juror was black and had a black son in an interracial marriage. McCastle v. State, 276 Ga. App. 218, 622 S.E.2d 896 (2005).

Reasons given by a prosecutor for striking three jurors were sufficiently race neutral to withstand the defendant's Batson challenge, and the trial court did not clearly err in denying the Batson challenge, since the prosecutor explained that the prosecutor struck the first juror because that juror was quite young, had no world experience, the prosecutor had no rapport with the juror, and the juror worked as a police cadet, that the prosecutor struck the second juror because the juror was an extremely young, recent high school graduate, with no job, that the prosecutor could not establish a rapport with this juror, and that the juror had no life experience to give the juror a framework in which to fit the alleged crime, and that the prosecutor struck the third juror because, based on the juror's statements, the prosecutor was concerned that this juror would rely on "karmic justice," instead of making a decision based on the evidence. Mayes v. State, 279 Ga. App. 499, 631 S.E.2d 724 (2006).

Upon appellate review of an order denying defendant's Batson challenge, the appeals court found that after considering that the ratio of African-American jurors to white jurors exceeded the ratio of potential African-American jurors to potential white jurors, defendant failed to make out a prima facie showing of racial discrimination in jury selection. Goldberg v. State, 280 Ga. App. 600, 634 S.E.2d 419 (2006), aff'd, 282 Ga. 542, 651 S.E.2d 667 (2007).

While the defendant made out a prima facie case of racial discrimination regarding the state's use of three peremptory strikes, because sufficient race-neutral reasons existed for those strikes, the defendant's rights were not violated. LeMon v. State, 290 Ga. App. 527, 660 S.E.2d 11 (2008).

State provided sufficient race-neutral reasons for using nine of the state's 10 peremptory strikes against non-white prospective jurors, including that one stricken prospective juror worked for a group home with boys about the defendant's age, one had multiple conflicts with the criminal justice system, and one had been falsely accused of a crime but acted in self-defense, the same legal theory advanced by the defendant. Stacey v. State, 292 Ga. 838, 741 S.E.2d 881 (2013).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude unmarried jurors. — Defendant made a prima facie showing of race and gender discrimination in use of peremptory challenges; the prosecutor presented a race and gender neutral explanation, in accordance with Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, by stating that defendant struck every unmarried juror in the jury pool because the prosecutor thought that family-oriented jurors might have been more likely to convict defendant of domestic violence related offenses. Floyd v. State, 281 Ga. App. 72, 635 S.E.2d 366 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 86 (Ga. 2007), 552 U.S. 840, 128 S. Ct. 80, 169 L.Ed.2d 62 (2007).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude minorities and females. — Claim by a defendant, an African-American woman, that the prosecutor violated Batson by striking potential jurors based on race and gender, failed. The prosecutor's explanations for the strikes were race and gender neutral because the strikes were not based on a characteristic that was peculiar to any race or on a stereotypical belief, the reasons proffered were specific and related to the case, and three African-Americans and seven women were chosen to serve on the jury. McKenzie v. State, 294 Ga. App. 376, 670 S.E.2d 158 (2008).

Death penalty statutes not racially discriminatory. — Petitioner, a death row inmate, challenged the imposition of the death penalty in a federal habeas petition, arguing that the death penalty was being administered in a racially discriminatory manner; however, the argument failed because the statistical evidence was not so strong as to permit no inference other than that the results were the product of a racially discriminatory intent or purpose in that the death penalty was sought in 58 percent of the possible death penalty cases when the defendant was black but in only 40 percent of the cases when the defendant was white, and sought in only 25 percent of the cases when the victim was black and 54 percent of the cases when the victim was white. Jefferson v. Terry, 490 F. Supp. 2d 1261

(N.D. Ga. 2007), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 570 F.3d 1283 (11th Cir. Ga. 2009).

O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30(b)(8) bears a rational relationship to the legitimate state purposes of providing deterrence of possible harm to peace officers and, thus, of protecting officers. Accordingly, the statutory aggravating circumstance does not violate equal protection under U.S. Const., amend. XIV or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II. Fair v. State, 288 Ga. 244, 702 S.E.2d 420 (2010).

Court not required to appoint state-paid psychiatrist for defendant filing special plea of insanity. — Trial court is under no constitutional or statutory duty to appoint a state-paid psychiatrist to evaluate a defendant even though a special plea of insanity has been filed. Blankenship v. State, 247 Ga. 590, 277 S.E.2d 505 (1981), overruled on other grounds, Thompson v. State, 263 Ga. 23, 426 S.E.2d 895 (1993) and, overruled on other grounds, McClellan v. State, 274 Ga. 819, 561 S.E.2d 82 (2002).

Private corporation may attack state statute on due process and equal protection grounds. Caldwell v. Hospital Auth., 248 Ga. 887, 287 S.E.2d 15 (1982).

A hospital authority has standing by statute to attack state law on grounds that it violates due process and equal protection clauses of Georgia Constitution. Caldwell v. Hospital Auth., 248 Ga. 887, 287 S.E.2d 15 (1982).

Separate classification and treatment of architects, engineers, and contractors by O.C.G.A. § 9-3-51 from owners, tenants, and manufacturers is reasonable and not arbitrary. Mullis v. Southern Co. Servs., 250 Ga. 90, 296 S.E.2d 579 (1982).

Specialty training for physicians. — Public hospital bylaw requiring specific postgraduate specialty training or residency in order for physicians to be eligible for admission to the medical staff did not transgress the equal protection or due process rights of osteopathic physicians. Silverstein v. Gwinnett Hosp. Auth., 861 F.2d 1560 (11th Cir. 1988).

Public hospital bylaws excluding osteopathic physicians, who have not completed allopathic postgraduate training, from the medical staff do not violate the equal protection clause if the bylaws are rationally related to differences in osteopathic and allopathic training and promote a legitimate state interest in promoting quality health care. Silverstein v. Gwinnett Hosp. Auth., 672 F. Supp. 1444 (N.D. Ga. 1987), aff'd, 861 F.2d 1560 (11th Cir. 1988).

Grant of official immunity to state employee providing medical services.

— Grant of official immunity from a malpractice suit to a state-employed doctor based on the patient's status as a Medicaid patient did not violate the constitutional rights of the patient's parents, as the due process and equal protection clauses of the U.S. and Georgia Constitutions protected only rights, and a waiver of sovereign immunity under the Georgia Tort Claims Act, O.C.G.A. § 50-21-20 et seq., was merely a privilege. Porter v. Guill, 298 Ga. App. 782, 681 S.E.2d 230 (2009).

Plumbers. — O.C.G.A. § 43-14-8 is unconstitutional insofar as it denies to formerly locally licensed plumbers the rights extended to formerly state-licensed plumbers by § 43-14-8. Waller v. State Constr. Indus. Licensing Bd., 250 Ga. 529, 299 S.E.2d 554 (1983) (decided prior to 1983 amendment of O.C.G.A. § 43-14-8).

Arbitration of attorney fee disputes. — Neither State Bar Rule 6-303(a) nor Rule 6-502 violate the state and federal constitutional rights to equal protection as the interest of a state in regulating the legal profession and attorney-client relationship is a "compelling" one. Nodvin v. State Bar, 273 Ga. 559, 544 S.E.2d 142 (2001).

Punitive damages law. — Paragraph (e)(2) of O.C.G.A. § 51-12-5.1, requiring that 75 percent of punitive damages awarded in a product liability action be paid into the state treasury, does not violate the equal protection clauses of the United States and Georgia Constitutions. Mack Trucks, Inc. v. Conkle, 263 Ga. 539, 436 S.E.2d 635 (1993); State v. Moseley, 263 Ga. 680, 436 S.E.2d 632 (1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1107, 114 S. Ct. 2101, 128

Allocation of a portion of the fines and forfeitures collected in this state to the Peace Officers' Annuity and Benefit Fund is not a violation of this paragraph because of the possibility that peace officers will institute prosecutions for the sole purpose of building the fund, as public officers are presumed to do their duty. Cole v. Foster, 207 Ga. 416, 61 S.E.2d 814 (1950).

Employees' equal protection challenge to the reduction in their retirement benefits was belied by evidence that an age reduction factor was applied to employees retiring both before and after July 1, 1998. Alverson v. Employees' Ret. Sys., 272 Ga. App. 389, 613 S.E.2d 119 (2005).

Unconstitutionality of wrongful death provisions.

— Because the rights of children whose mothers had been wrongfully killed were protected by former O.C.G.A. § 51-4-3 in ways in which the rights of children whose fathers had been wrongfully killed were not protected, O.C.G.A. § 51-4-2 deprived children of deceased fathers who left widows equal protection of the law in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II. Henceforth, children of deceased fathers who left widows were to be afforded rights afforded children under former O.C.G.A. § 51-4-3. Tolbert v. Murrell, 253 Ga. 566, 322 S.E.2d 487 (1984).

Classification of minors in statute of limitations.

— The 1987 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 9-3-73 which altered tolling provisions otherwise applicable to tort claims by injured minors in cases in which tort claims arose from health care professionals' malpractice, did not violate a brain-damaged child's right to equal protection or right of access to the courts. Smith v. Cobb County-Kennestone Hosp. Auth., 262 Ga. 566, 423 S.E.2d 235 (1992).

Disparate treatment of individual and corporate insureds under paragraphs (b)(2) and (e) of O.C.G.A. § 33-24-45 is not a violation of equal protection in that it bears a real relation to the object of the legislation, which is to protect unsophisticated and, more likely, unwary insureds by assuring that insurance remains in effect pending written notice of intention not to renew. Home

Materials, Inc. v. Auto Owners Ins. Co., 250 Ga. 599, 300 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Denial of insurance coverage to resident operating vehicle registered out of state constitutional. — This provision is not violated by the denial of the $45,000 optional no-fault coverage, otherwise available under Flewellen v. Atlantic Cas. Co., 250 Ga. 709, 300 S.E.2d 673 (1983), to a Georgia resident who was injured in the course of employment in Georgia while operating a vehicle licensed outside of the state and insured under a policy issued outside of the state to an out-of-state resident, but that the parties understood would be used and garaged in Georgia. Doran v. Travelers Indem. Co., 254 Ga. 63, 326 S.E.2d 221 (1985).

Statutory scheme providing different procedures for handling service upon foreign and domestic corporations does not deny domestic corporations equal protection under the state and federal Constitutions. Ticor Constr. Co. v. Brown, 255 Ga. 547, 340 S.E.2d 923 (1986).

O.C.G.A. § 34-9-285, in authorizing disparate treatment of occupational diseases and other injuries compensable under the Workers' Compensation Act, does not violate constitutional guarantees of equal protection. Price v. Lithonia Lighting Co., 256 Ga. 49, 343 S.E.2d 688 (1986).

Ability to pay court costs. — When the defendant did not claim that the defendant was being treated differently from other individuals similarly situated in regard to O.C.G.A. § 9-15-2, which provides that findings of the court concerning the ability of a party to pay costs shall be final, there was no merit to the defendant's claim that the defendant was suffering discrimination because the defendant was indigent. Penland v. State, 256 Ga. 641, 352 S.E.2d 385 (1987).

Charitable immunity doctrine does not constitute a violation of the equal protection or due process clauses of the federal or state constitutions. Ponder v. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth., 256 Ga. 833, 353 S.E.2d 515, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 863, 108 S. Ct. 181, 98 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1987); Patterson v. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth., 192 Ga. App. 167, 384 S.E.2d 205 (1989).

Child testimony statute not void. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is not unconstitutional by allowing the state to bolster the testimony of the victim while denying the same opportunity to the defendant. Weathersby v. State, 262 Ga. 126, 414 S.E.2d 200 (1992).

The 1995 amendment of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, allowing the admission into evidence of hearsay statements made by a child under the age of 14 years who witnessed an act of physical or sexual abuse inflicted upon another, violates constitutional principles of equal protection. Woodard v. State, 269 Ga. 317, 496 S.E.2d 896 (1998).

Juvenile court jurisdiction statute does not violate the separation of powers doctrine of the state constitution, nor does it violate the due process and equal protection provisions of the federal and state constitutions. Bishop v. State, 265 Ga. 821, 462 S.E.2d 716 (1995); Murphy v. State, 267 Ga. 100, 475 S.E.2d 590 (1996).

Sentencing juvenile as adult. — Juvenile defendant was tried in superior court for murder and conspiracy to commit armed robbery, but was convicted only of the latter charge. The superior court's decision to sentence the defendant as an adult under O.C.G.A. § 15-11-28(b)(2)(A)(i) did not violate the defendant's due process or equal protection rights as the defendant had no constitutional right to be treated as a juvenile. Pascarella v. State, 294 Ga. App. 414, 669 S.E.2d 216 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0426, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 188 (Ga. 2009).

Reckless conduct statute vague regarding child care. — Because the reckless conduct statute failed to provide defendant with fair notice that the defendant could be held criminally responsible for leaving children in the care of the defendant's older son, it failed to clearly define its prohibitions, rendering it unconstitutionally vague as applied. Hall v. State, 268 Ga. 89, 485 S.E.2d 755 (1997).

Immunity granted employers in the Workers' Compensation Act, O.C.G.A. § 34-9-1 et seq., does not violate the due process and equal protection provisions of the state and federal Constitutions. Geor- gia Dep't of Human Resources v. Joseph Campbell Co., 261 Ga. 822, 411 S.E.2d 871 (1992).

Provisions of the Tort Reform Act (O.C.G.A. § 51-12-5.1), relating to punitive damages, violated the due process and equal protection clauses of the federal and state constitutions, violated the excessive fines provisions of both constitutions, and violated the double jeopardy provision of the Fifth Amendment to the federal constitution. McBride v. GMC, 737 F. Supp. 1563 (M.D. Ga. 1990).

Georgia witness competency statutes present a reasonable requirement regarding the minimal level of understanding for people participating in one of the most important functions of government and do not violate the equal protection clause. Ambles v. State, 259 Ga. 406, 383 S.E.2d 555 (1989).

State had standing to challenge Georgia witness competency statutes. Ambles v. State, 259 Ga. 406, 383 S.E.2d 555 (1989).

Public officers' malpractice statute not unconstitutional. — O.C.G.A. § 45-11-4, by affording only certain enumerated officials the privilege of appearing before the grand jury prior to indictment for malpractice, does not violate the equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions. State v. Deason, 259 Ga. 183, 378 S.E.2d 120 (1989).

Implied consent statute does not violate the dictates of equal protection set forth in the Georgia and federal Constitutions. Lutz v. State, 274 Ga. 71, 548 S.E.2d 323 (2001).

Municipal affirmative action program providing favored treatment for minority and female-owned business enterprises in the award of city contracts violated the equal protection clause since the city failed to identify the need for a race-conscious program in the awarding of the city's public contracts and the program was not "narrowly tailored" to remedy prior discrimination. American Subcontractors Ass'n v. City of Atlanta, 259 Ga. 14, 376 S.E.2d 662 (1989).

Affirmative action programs. — Because genuine issues of fact existed as to whether the defendants violated the equal protection clause in connection with the operation of a county's minority and female business enterprise program, they were not entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law as to plaintiff's state equal protection claim. Webster v. Fulton County, 44 F. Supp. 2d 1359 (N.D. Ga. 1999).

Standing to challenge administration of municipal programs. — City employees did not have standing to make equal protection challenges against the administration of retirement incentive programs when the employees retired prior to adoption of the programs or at a time when the administration of a particular program did not affect their rights. Smith v. City of LaGrange, 218 Ga. App. 394, 461 S.E.2d 550 (1995).

Standing to challenge Medicaid reimbursement for medically necessary abortion. — The trial court erroneously dismissed a complaint filed by certain medical providers, alleging violations of the Georgia Constitution on privacy and equal protection grounds, and holding that the medical providers lacked third-party standing to assert a claim on behalf of their Medicaid-eligible patients as: (1) the medical providers properly asserted an injury in fact insofar as they had a direct financial interest in obtaining state funding to reimburse them for the cost of abortion services provided to Medicaid-eligible women, and have alleged that they performed, and will continue to perform, medically necessary abortions for which they will not be reimbursed under Georgia's Medicaid program; and (2) the relationship between the medical providers and their patients made them uniquely qualified to litigate the constitutionality of the state's action interfering with a woman's decision to terminate a pregnancy. Feminist Women's Health Ctr. v. Burgess, 282 Ga. 433, 651 S.E.2d 36 (2007).

Tractor-trailer length limits. — Enforcement of total length limits, i.e., combination of vehicle and load, for general freight transport that are different from those total length limits enforced as to live poultry transport violates the equal protection clause. State v. Moore, 259 Ga. 139, 376 S.E.2d 877 (1989).

Pay for public officials. — The payment plan for police officers in Columbus, Georgia did not deny the officers equal protection under either U.S. Const., amend. 14 or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, as there were legitimate government purposes, which satisfied rational basis review, and the pay plan at issue enjoyed a strong presumption of constitutionality; improving the educational quality of the police force was a legitimate government purpose, as was increasing pay for new officers, which was rationally related to the legitimate purpose of recruiting and retaining the best qualified new officers. Ackerman v. Columbus, Ga., 269 F. Supp. 2d 1354 (M.D. Ga. 2003).

Pension funds for county employees. — Court fines and forfeitures were county funds and, thus, the payment of those monies into a court clerk's state retirement plan were contributions made with county funds; the county's determination to exclude the clerk from the county's pension plan, based on the county's decision that it should contribute to each constitutional officer's retirement plan only once, did not violate equal protection, since it was based on a rational distinction between the various constitutional officers, and furthered the legitimate governmental purpose of equalizing the county's pension contributions and fostering financial responsibility in the funding of its retirement plans. Morgan County Bd. of Comm'rs v. Mealor, 280 Ga. 241, 626 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

Prior service credit for retirement. — Employee Retirement System classification system, providing differing methods of credit for military service based upon the dates and conditions of service, does not violate equal protection rights. Horton v. State Employee Retirement Sys., 262 Ga. 458, 421 S.E.2d 703 (1992).

Review of Department of Natural Resources decisions. — The Georgia Administrative Procedure Act, O.C.G.A. § 50-13-1 et seq., and O.C.G.A. § 12-2-1 govern the procedure for judicial review of final decisions of the Department of Natural Resources; since the party seeking review failed to make a timely request therefor, affirmance of the final decision of the Department violated neither equal protection nor due process. Nix v. Long Mtn. Resources, Inc., 262 Ga. 506, 422 S.E.2d 195 (1992).

Statute of repose for medical malpractice claims is rationally related to a legitimate legislative attempt to reduce the uncertainties and costs related to malpractice litigation long after the medical services have been rendered and does not violate equal protection guarantees. Hanflik v. Ratchford, 848 F. Supp. 1539 (N.D. Ga. 1994), aff'd, 56 F.3d 1391 (11th Cir. 1995).

Statute of repose for medical malpractice suits under O.C.G.A. § 9-3-71(b) did not violate the equal protection clauses of the federal or Georgia Constitutions. There was a rational basis for treating medical malpractice differently from other forms of professional malpractice and for the five-year repose period itself, based on the considerations that uncertainty over the causes of illness and injury made it difficult for insurers to adequately assess premiums and that the passage of time made it more difficult to determine the cause of injury. Nichols v. Gross, 282 Ga. 811, 653 S.E.2d 747 (2007).

1994 Sign Ordinance. — The 1994 Sign Ordinance, a comprehensive regulatory framework for the posting of all signs within the City of Atlanta, does not violate equal protection or free speech. Outdoor Sys. v. City of Atlanta, 885 F. Supp. 1572 (N.D. Ga. 1995).

Classification of property as part of Airport Noise Abatement Program. — Classifications drawn by a city between single-family and multi-family residences as part of its Airport Noise Abatement Program did not violate constitutional guarantees of equal protection. City of Atlanta v. Watson, 267 Ga. 185, 475 S.E.2d 896 (1996).

Mandatory minimum sentences. — O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1, imposing mandatory minimum sentences in certain cases, does not violate equal protection because the legislation bears a reasonable relationship to the legitimate legislative concern of deterring crime and ensuring that a court imposed sentence will be served in its entirety. Campbell v. State, 268 Ga. 44, 485 S.E.2d 185 (1997).

Exclusion from drug court program did not violate equal protection. — Defendant was not admitted into a drug court program under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(a) not because of the defendant's HIV status, but because the defendant had a mental illness, was under a doctor's supervision, and was taking four prescription medications. As the state's interest in preserving the defendant's health was rationally related to the state's decision to exclude the defendant from the program, there was no equal protection violation. Evans v. State, 293 Ga. App. 371, 667 S.E.2d 183 (2008).

AIDS testing of convicts. — O.C.G.A. § 17-10-15(b) does not violate the Fourth Amendment because the government's interest outweighs the individual's and the results are kept confidential and cannot be used against the individual in a criminal prosecution; nor does O.C.G.A. § 17-10-15(b) violate the right to privacy under the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment or the state or federal equal protection clauses. Adams v. State, 269 Ga. 405, 498 S.E.2d 268 (1998).

Driving under the influence by minor. — O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(k) (minor driving under the influence) does not violate the right to equal protection under the federal or state constitutions. Barnett v. State, 270 Ga. 472, 510 S.E.2d 527 (1999).

Purity requirement of drugs. — O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(e) did not violate principles of equal protection of the law because the statute contained no purity requirement, as was required for cocaine. Because the legislature was under no duty to treat all drugs and drug offenders the same, the mere fact that cocaine and methamphetamine were both listed as Schedule II controlled substances did not mean that the legislature had to enact identical statutes pertaining to those substances, and the statute treated all those charged with methamphetamine trafficking equally. Hardin v. State, 277 Ga. 242, 587 S.E.2d 634 (2003).

Inheritance through out of wedlock children. — O.C.G.A. § 53-2-4(b)(2) creates a gender-based classification in violation of the equal protection clauses of both the United States and Georgia Constitutions; it provides that a father of a child born out of wedlock cannot inherit from his child if he failed or refused to openly treat the child as his own, but that a mother who acts in the same manner can inherit from the child, and there is no legitimate state interest achieved by not subjecting mothers of illegitimate children to the same standards of conduct. Rainey v. Chever, 270 Ga. 519, 510 S.E.2d 823 (1999), cert. denied, 527 U.S. 1044, 119 S. Ct. 2411, 144 L. Ed. 2d 808 (1999).

Deprived children. — Treating deprived children who were placed in the legal custody of the Department of Families and Children Services because there was no relative committed to the child who was available for immediate placement differently from deprived children who did have a committed parent or guardian available for immediate placement did not violate the equal protection clause or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, as the classes were not similarly situated and the laws were rationally related to the goal of minimizing government intervention while ensuring that children were reared in a familial environment. In the Interest of A.N., 281 Ga. 58, 636 S.E.2d 496 (2006).

Action for termination of parental rights. — By not raising the issue below, a mother in a termination of parental rights case waived her arguments that the trial court violated equal protection and due process by not determining whether her mental health concerns affected her ability to complete the specific goals in her case plan; moreover, there was uncontradicted evidence that despite her mental health problems, the mother understood the case plan, appreciated its requirements, and could have completed it, but did not do so, and the mother testified that she was able both physically and mentally to care for the child. In the Interest of H.M., 287 Ga. App. 418, 651 S.E.2d 527 (2007).

Parents required to pay part of costs of case plan in deprivation. — In a deprivation proceeding, the department of family and child services did not violate equal protection by requiring the parents to pay part of the costs for services mandated under their case plan. The department was not drawing a distinction between similarly situated parties in that a parent who could afford to contribute financially was not similarly situated to one who could not afford to do so; moreover, even if the parents were similarly situated to others who were not required to pay for a portion of services, the goals served by the contribution requirement of calling for parents to take responsibility for conduct that harmed their children and of increasing the likelihood of success for family reunification represented legitimate governmental purposes. In the Interest of P.N., 291 Ga. App. 512, 662 S.E.2d 287 (2008).

Rational basis for disparate treatment of utility companies. — Trial court properly granted summary judgment to the county, particularly because the telecommunications company did not show its equal protection rights had been violated. Although the telecommunications company argued that the county, through its ordinance, imposed a permit fee on telecommunication companies that it did not charge other utilities, the county was able to show that the telecommunication companies filed for a disproportionately high number of the permits to use the county's rights of way and also that their installations had caused a disproportionately high amount of damages and disruption in the county, which meant there existed a rational basis for imposing permit fees on telecommunication companies, but not on other utilities. BellSouth Telecomms., Inc. v. Cobb County, 277 Ga. 314, 588 S.E.2d 704 (2003).

Driving under the influence jury charges. — Equal protection clause was not violated in charging the jury to convict if defendant was under the influence of alcohol to the extent that it was "less safe" for defendant to drive, rather than if defendant was "rendered incapable of driving safely"; the standards were legally equivalent. Johnson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 426, 602 S.E.2d 177 (2004).

State conduct is required. — Former employee's claims that the employee was dismissed because of expressive activity, failed under both Georgia's equal protection provisions and freedom of speech guarantees because the former employer and the two managers, were not state actors or private parties acting under the color of state law. Johnson v. Shoney's, Inc., No. 7:04-CV-68 (HL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18101 (M.D. Ga. Aug. 18, 2005).

Education. — Claim that the equal protection clause imposed an obligation on the state to equalize education opportunities, and that education was a "fundamental right" subject to strict scrutiny has been rejected and a trial court properly dismissed a complaint alleging violations of constitutional rights arising from the closing of an elementary school. Williams v. State of Ga., 277 Ga. App. 850, 627 S.E.2d 891 (2006).

The mere fact that a defendant who pled guilty was treated differently than one who was convicted after trial did not violate the equal protection clause because the defendants were not similarly situated; thus, the defendant's equal protection claim, based on the rule requiring that a motion to withdraw a guilty plea be filed in the same term as that in which the defendant was sentenced, failed. Smith v. State, 283 Ga. 376, 659 S.E.2d 380 (2008).

Elementary school orchestra and band teachers' equal protection claims failed because: (1) the school district had a rational basis for treating those teachers and Grades 1 through 3 paraprofessionals differently with regard to which employees would be retained since, inter alia, "teachers" and "paraprofessionals" were treated differently under Georgia law; and (2) the district was not collaterally estopped from defending against the equal protection claims since the district was not subject to offensive, non-mutual collateral estoppel. Demaree v. Fulton County Sch. Dist., No. 12-15900, 2013 U.S. App. LEXIS 6994 (11th Cir. Apr. 8, 2013) (Unpublished).

O.C.G.A. § 20-2-690.1 did not violate equal protection because the defendant failed to show any potential variation in application of the statute without a rational basis and the statute was reasonably related to the legitimate governmental interest of ensuring that children residing in Georgia are afforded the opportunity of an education. Pitts v. State, 293 Ga. 511, 748 S.E.2d 426 (2013).

O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12, pertaining to registration of convicted sex offend-

Equal Protection (Cont'd)ers, does not violate the concept of equal protection under the law. —

Trial court did not err in revoking a convicted sexual offender's probation for failing to register an address change after the offender moved into a motel because the offender failed to establish that the offender was treated differently from a similarly situated nonresident sexual offender entering the state; if O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(e)(7) applies to a hypothetical nonresident sexual offender, that person must update his or her information within 72 hours of a change of address as required in § 42-1-12(f)(5), and any nonresident sexual offender who is required to register by virtue of the specification of § 42-1-12(e)(7) is equally subject to the requirement that he or she register a new address within 72 hours of changing that address and equally subject to being charged with a violation. Dunn v. State, 286 Ga. 238, 686 S.E.2d 772 (2009).

Age classification in criminal statute of limitation tolling provision. —

Supreme Court of Georgia holds that the age classification chosen in the tolling statute of O.C.G.A. § 17-3-2.2 does not violate the Equal Protection clauses of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, and U.S. Const., amend. XIV. Harper v. State, 292 Ga. 557, 738 S.E.2d 584 (2013).

ClassificationThree generally accepted standards for determining constitutionality under equal protection provisions of both United States and state Constitutions: (1) rational relationship test; (2) intermediate level of scrutiny; and (3) strict judicial scrutiny standard. Under the rational relationship test a statutory classification is presumed valid and will comport with constitutional standards as long as it bears a reasonable relationship to a legitimate governmental purpose. Intermediate level of judicial scrutiny requires that the classification be substantially related to an important governmental objective. Under the strict judicial scrutiny standard, which is employed when the classification involves socially stigmatic inequalities, such as those based on race, the governmental classification will fall unless it demonstrates that the classification is necessarily related to a compelling governmental objective. McDaniel v. Thomas, 248 Ga. 632, 285 S.E.2d 156 (1981).

Strict scrutiny test means that classification is not entitled to usual presumption of validity and that the state bears the burden of proving that classification system "has been structured with 'precision' and is 'tailored' narrowly to serve legitimate objectives and that it has selected less 'drastic means' for effectuating its objectives." McDaniel v. Thomas, 248 Ga. 632, 285 S.E.2d 156 (1981).

State has right to classify. — A very wide discretion must be conceded to the legislative power of the state in the classification of trades, callings, businesses, or occupations which may be subjected to special forms of regulation or taxation through an excise or license tax. Nance v. Harrison, 176 Ga. 674, 169 S.E. 22 (1933).

The State of Georgia has an inherent, sovereign right to properly classify all businesses carried on within the state's borders. Harrison v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 183 Ga. 1, 187 S.E. 648 (1936), rev'd on other grounds, 301 U.S. 459, 57 S. Ct. 838, 81 L. Ed. 1223 (1937).

The right of the legislature to make reasonable classifications of persons and things for the purpose of legislation is clearly recognized by all authorities. The mere fact that legislation is based on a classification, and is made to apply to certain persons and not to others, does not affect its validity, if it be so made that all persons subject to its terms are treated alike under like circumstances and conditions. Rourke v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co., 187 Ga. 636, 1 S.E.2d 728 (1939).

Reasonable classification permitted.

— The lawmaking power may classify and provide penalties applicable to different classes, so long as the classification is fair and reasonable, and all coming within the same class are treated alike. Leonard v. American Life & Annuity Co., 139 Ga. 274, 77 S.E. 41 (1913); Commercial Sec. Co. v. Lee, 148 Ga. 597, 97 S.E. 516 (1918); Assets Realization Co. v. Lewis, 150 Ga. 301, 103 S.E. 463 (1920).

The constitutional guaranty of equal protection requires that all persons shall be treated alike under like circumstances and conditions. However, it does not prevent a reasonable classification relating to the purpose of the legislation. Reed v. Hopper, 235 Ga. 298, 219 S.E.2d 409 (1975).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment, as the indictment filed against defendant arising out of the offense of first-degree homicide by vehicle, which contained a predicate offense making it easier to convict defendant because defendant was under 21-years-old and had a blood alcohol concentration of .02 or more at the time of the accident that killed defendant's passenger, did not violate defendant's equal protection rights under the state and federal constitutions because the predicate offense did not operate to disadvantage a suspect class or interfere with a fundamental right; rather, it was rationally related to the state's legitimate purpose in deterring younger, more inexperienced drivers from drinking and driving. David v. State, 261 Ga. App. 468, 583 S.E.2d 135 (2003).

Because the legislative purpose of O.C.G.A. § 51-1-29.5(c) is legitimate, and the classification drawn has some reasonable relation to furthering that purpose, the classification passes constitutional muster, and, although § 51-1-29.5(c) raises the burden of proof in certain cases, it does not deprive one of the right to a jury trial or any other fundamental right. Promoting affordable liability insurance for health care providers and hospitals, and thereby promoting the availability of quality health care services, are legitimate legislative purposes, and it is entirely logical to assume that emergency medical care provided in hospital emergency rooms is different from medical care provided in other settings and that establishing a standard of care and a burden of proof that reduces the potential liability of the providers of such care will help achieve those legitimate legislative goals. Gliemmo v. Cousineau, 287 Ga. 7, 694 S.E.2d 75 (2010).

When classification is based on rational distinctions. — Under the equal protection guarantee of the Georgia Constitution, classification in legislation is permitted when the classification is based on rational distinctions, and the basis of the classification bears a direct and real relation to the object or purpose of the legislation. Cannon v. Georgia Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 240 Ga. 479, 241 S.E.2d 238 (1978); State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Five Transp. Co., 246 Ga. 447, 271 S.E.2d 844 (1980); Home Materials, Inc. v. Auto Owners Ins. Co., 250 Ga. 599, 300 S.E.2d 139 (1983).

Classification must have reasonable basis. — The fact that a revenue or tax-raising statute discriminates in favor of a certain class does not make it arbitrary, if the discrimination is founded upon a reasonable distinction. Nance v. Harrison, 176 Ga. 674, 169 S.E. 22 (1933).

Municipal ordinances which are intended to regulate lawful occupations and businesses must be reasonable, otherwise they are void. Bunn v. City of Atlanta, 67 Ga. App. 147, 19 S.E.2d 553, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 666, 63 S. Ct. 73, 87 L. Ed. 535 (1942).

Classification is permitted, provided it is made upon reasonable basis. City of Calhoun v. North Ga. Elec. Membership Corp., 233 Ga. 759, 213 S.E.2d 596 (1975).

Classification must relate to object of legislation. — In order to constitutionally classify for legislation, the basis for classification must relate to the object or purpose of the legislation. City of Atlanta v. Wilson, 209 Ga. 527, 74 S.E.2d 455 (1953); Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Mann, 234 Ga. 884, 218 S.E.2d 593 (1975).

This paragraph allows classification by legislation only when the basis of such classification bears a direct and real relation to the object or purpose of the legislation, and when thus classified, uniformity upon all those coming within the class satisfies the Constitution. Simpson v. State, 218 Ga. 337, 127 S.E.2d 907 (1962).

If the legislative purpose is legitimate and the classification drawn has some reasonable relation to furthering that purpose, the classification passes muster. Wilder v. State, 232 Ga. 404, 207 S.E.2d 38 (1974).

Limitation on income benefits in former

Classification (Cont'd)

Code 1933, § 56-3404, as construed by the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, established a constitutionally permissible classification reasonably related to the purposes of the no-fault Act. Leonard v. Preferred Risk Mut. Ins. Co., 247 Ga. 574, 277 S.E.2d 675 (1981).

That employee is entitled to benefits based on employment by hospital bears substantial relationship to purpose of Employment Security Law. Caldwell v. Hospital Auth., 248 Ga. 887, 287 S.E.2d 15 (1982).

Any reasonable state of facts will sustain classification. — A classification, even though discriminatory, is not a violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment if any state of facts reasonably may be conceived that would sustain it. Wilder v. State, 232 Ga. 404, 207 S.E.2d 38 (1974); Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Mann, 234 Ga. 884, 218 S.E.2d 593 (1975); State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Five Transp. Co., 246 Ga. 447, 271 S.E.2d 844 (1980).

Arbitrary classification not allowed. — The law recognizes the right and power of a municipal government to make reasonable classifications of subjects for taxation and to make subclassifications of such classes. But it does not permit an arbitrary classification, the basis for which has no reasonable relationship to the purpose for which classification is made. Elder v. Smith, 188 Ga. 65, 2 S.E.2d 670 (1939).

An arbitrary classification, when there exists no real difference as concerns the purpose of the legislation, is not allowed and constitutes a violation of the Constitution notwithstanding an arbitrary attempt to classify and then discriminate as between those in the different classifications. Simpson v. State, 218 Ga. 337, 127 S.E.2d 907 (1962).

Standard for valid classification. — If the selection or classification is neither capricious nor arbitrary, and rests upon some reasonable consideration of difference or policy, there is no denial of the equal protection of the law. Nance v. Harrison, 176 Ga. 674, 169 S.E. 22 (1933).

If the legislature has the power to enact discriminatory legislation, the discrimination is not invalid under the equal protection provision of the Constitution, if not so arbitrary as to be unreasonable and beyond the wide discretion that a legislature may exercise. Harrison v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 183 Ga. 1, 187 S.E. 648 (1936), rev'd on other grounds, 301 U.S. 459, 57 S. Ct. 838, 81 L. Ed. 1223 (1937).

Classification for taxation. — All that the law requires is that classification of persons who are to be exempt from taxation shall not be arbitrary and unreasonable. Pharr Rd. Inv. Co. v. City of Atlanta, 224 Ga. 752, 164 S.E.2d 803 (1968).

Uniformity within classes satisfies Constitution. — When a proper basis for classification exists, the law may classify; and uniformity within the classes thus created satisfies the Constitution. Pharr Rd. Inv. Co. v. City of Atlanta, 224 Ga. 752, 164 S.E.2d 803 (1968).

Imperfect classifications not necessarily violative. — The validity of the state's classifications does not depend upon their absolute correctness nor upon the absence of any under- or over-inclusiveness in the categories drawn. Wilder v. State, 232 Ga. 404, 207 S.E.2d 38 (1974).

In the area of economics and social welfare, a state does not violate the equal protection clause merely because the classifications made by its laws are imperfect. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Five Transp. Co., 246 Ga. 447, 271 S.E.2d 844 (1980).

Mathematical precision not required. — In its regulation of business and industry, the state is not bound to make classifications which are perfectly symmetrical or mathematically precise, so long as the classifications are not arbitrary or unreasonable. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Five Transp. Co., 246 Ga. 447, 271 S.E.2d 844 (1980).

If a classification has some reasonable basis, it does not offend the Constitution simply because the classification is not made with mathematical nicety or because in practice it results in some inequality. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Five Transp. Co., 246 Ga. 447, 271 S.E.2d 844 (1980).

Court need not agree with soundness of categories. — The court must necessarily agree with the soundness of the distinction maintained by the statutory scheme. If the legislative purpose is legitimate and the classification drawn has some reasonable relation to furthering that purpose, the classification passes muster. Wilder v. State, 232 Ga. 404, 207 S.E.2d 38 (1974).

Basis for separate classification of businesses. — A mere difference in the nature or character of two businesses which it is sought to regulate by legislative enactment will not be sufficient to justify separate classification of each business into different classes. But if a business is affected with a great public interest in which all of the citizens of the state are concerned, and injury will result to the general public unless regulatory control is applied, a right of classification arises on behalf of the general public. Harrison v. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection & Ins. Co., 183 Ga. 1, 187 S.E. 648 (1936), rev'd on other grounds, 301 U.S. 459, 57 S. Ct. 838, 81 L. Ed. 1223 (1937).

Distinction between residents and nonresidents is permissible classification. — An ordinance, which provides that rates for water service shall be higher in territory outside the corporate limits, is not unconstitutional and void as denying equal protection under the federal and state Constitutions. Barr v. City Council, 206 Ga. 753, 58 S.E.2d 823 (1950).

When the city has the right under the city's charter to furnish water to resident and nonresident users, and to classify the rates for such service, an ordinance, increasing the rates and fixing rates for nonresident users higher than for resident users, is not violative of the equal protection clauses of the federal and state Constitutions. Messenheimer v. Windt, 211 Ga. 575, 87 S.E.2d 402 (1955).

The incest statute's classification on the basis of step-parent and step-child bears a rational relationship to the governmental interest in protecting children and family unity and does not violate equal protection guarantees. Benton v. State, 265 Ga. 648, 461 S.E.2d 202 (1995).

Classification of procedural rules by amount in controversy permitted. — Classification by the General Assembly of procedural rules based upon the amount in controversy does not deny poor persons equal protection of the laws under the Georgia and federal Constitutions. Sellers v. Home Furnishing Co., 235 Ga. 831, 222 S.E.2d 34 (1976).

Population is discriminatory basis for classification. — Population as the sole basis for the attempted classification of counties to be excluded from the privilege of fishing noncommercially on Sunday is discriminatory and repugnant to this paragraph. McAllister v. State, 220 Ga. 570, 140 S.E.2d 828 (1965).

Present customers and future customers of a utility do not form discrete classes for purposes of equal protection analysis because customers are a constantly fluctuating group. Lasseter v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 253 Ga. 227, 319 S.E.2d 824 (1984).

O.C.G.A. § 46-2-26.3 does not create an unconstitutional classification although its application is in fact limited to only one power plant, because it is possible to conclude that the section does not confer a special benefit upon the utility. Lasseter v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 253 Ga. 227, 319 S.E.2d 824 (1984).

Improper classification found. — Directives which the University System of Georgia's Board of Regents gave the institutions for calculating pay raises resulted in some faculty members being treated unfairly and not receiving the full pay to which they were entitled under their contracts, and violated the equal protection rights of the affected faculty members, as there was no standard delineating what sets of circumstances would authorize the use of each method, and instead conferred upon the institutions uncontrolled discretion in deciding which of the two methods to use in calculating pay; the classification was also defective in that it drew a line between otherwise identical groups without an objective basis for doing so. Bd. of Regents of the Univ. Sys. v. Rux, 260 Ga. App. 760, 580 S.E.2d 559 (2003).

DUI cases ineligible for first offender treatment. — O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(f) did not violate equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II by excluding driving-under-the-influence offenses from First Offender Act, O.C.G.A. § 42-8-60 et seq., coverage. The defendant did not show the absence of a rational relationship between the state's compelling interest in protecting the public's safety and the classification; the defendant's equal protection argument boiled down to no more than the claim that the legislature made a bad policy judgment about which offenders should be eligible for First Offender Act treatment. Rhodes v. State, 283 Ga. 361, 659 S.E.2d 370 (2008).

Judicial ReliefCourts of equity to provide relief. —

If by mistake the constitutional protection provided for in this paragraph is denied the citizen, and it is not voluntarily rectified, courts of equity will command its rectification. Whipple v. County of Houston, 214 Ga. 532, 105 S.E.2d 898 (1958).

A citizen who has been wronged by an arbitrary or capricious exercise of the power to grant licenses may not be prevented from seeking aid from the courts to protect the citizen. Jenkins v. Manry, 216 Ga. 538, 118 S.E.2d 91 (1961).

Consumer has standing to challenge a rate schedule on the ground that the schedule discriminates against the consumer or a class of consumers in violation of the equal protection guarantees of the state and federal Constitutions. Georgia Power Co. v. Allied Chem. Corp., 233 Ga. 558, 212 S.E.2d 628 (1975).

Individuals outside affected class lack standing. — When none of the petitioners come within the class of individuals who are alleged to have been discriminated against, those petitioners are not in a position to raise the question of violation of this paragraph. Villyard v. Regents of Univ. Sys., 204 Ga. 517, 50 S.E.2d 313 (1948).

Municipal corporation may not protest denial of equal protection. — A municipal corporation created by the state for the better ordering of government cannot make the point that a provision of the state law is invalid because it denies to the municipality the equal protection of the laws. V.C. Ellington Co. v. City of Macon, 177 Ga. 541, 170 S.E. 813 (1933).

A county or municipal corporation, created by the legislature, does not have standing to invoke the equal protection clause of the state or federal Constitution in opposition to the legislature. City of Atlanta v. Spence, 242 Ga. 194, 249 S.E.2d 554 (1978).

Collateral source damages provision unconstitutional. — O.C.G.A. § 51-12-1(b), which authorizes the admission of evidence of collateral sources of recovery available to a plaintiff seeking special damages for tortious injury, violates the provision of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II, which proclaims that the paramount duty of government is the protection of person and property and that the protection shall be impartial and complete. Denton v. Con-Way S. Express, Inc., 261 Ga. 41, 402 S.E.2d 269 (1991).

Police Power

Laws for protection of public permitted. — To be able to prevent the construction or maintenance of fire hazards is as much within the scope of the general powers of a municipality as the building of a school house. Irwin v. Torbert, 204 Ga. 111, 49 S.E.2d 70 (1948).

The state in the exercise of its police powers may make, repeal, alter, or modify laws for the protection of the public. Bailey v. State, 210 Ga. 52, 77 S.E.2d 511 (1953).

A municipality can, in the exercise of its police power, make reasonable regulations to protect its citizens, including measures designed to preclude the use of water unfit for human consumption or other use. City of Midway v. Midway Nursing & Convalescent Ctr., Inc., 230 Ga. 77, 195 S.E.2d 452 (1973).

Act must bear reasonable relation to public health. — An Act which, considered as a whole, does not bear any reasonable or substantial relation to the public health, safety, or morality, or other phase of the general welfare, is unconstitutional and void as an exercise of the police power. Bramley v. State, 187 Ga. 826, 2 S.E.2d 647 (1939).

No power to arbitrarily discriminate. — A municipal government is without power under the “police power” to arbitrarily and without cause discriminate between licensees by revoking one license and not those of others who occupy exactly the same position, since the licensee has something more than a “mere privilege” and is entitled to the equal protection guaranteed by the Constitution. Mayor of Savannah v. Savannah Distrib. Co., 202 Ga. 559, 43 S.E.2d 704 (1947).

State not victim has interest in prosecutions. — Trial court abused the court’s discretion by dismissing charges alleging that the defendant violated state statutes prohibiting affrays, disrupting a public school, and criminal trespass by fighting on school grounds, over the state’s objection, after defense counsel told the court that school officials wanted the charges dismissed. State v. Perry, 261 Ga. App. 886, 583 S.E.2d 909 (2003).

Zoning

Power to zone established. — The police power of the state to zone property to prevent its use for certain purposes in the future, as distinguished from the taking or damaging in respect to a use already in existence, is not open to question, and does not require the payment of any compensation. National Adv. Co. v. State Hwy. Dep’t, 230 Ga. 119, 195 S.E.2d 895 (1973).

Power to zone limited. — When substantial expenditures are made in the acquisition of property or in preparations for the construction of a building in reliance upon the granting of a permit, vested rights are acquired which cannot be displaced by the passage of a new ordinance. Clairmont Dev. Co. v. Morgan, 222 Ga. 255, 149 S.E.2d 489 (1966).

Criteria for valid zoning ordinances. — A zoning ordinance does not offend equal protection if it has some fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation and furnishes a legitimate ground of differentiation. Parking Ass’n v. City of Atlanta, 264 Ga. 764, 450 S.E.2d 200 (1994), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1116, 115 S. Ct. 2268, 132 L. Ed. 2d 273 (1995).

Notice and hearing required. — It is a prerequisite to the validity of a municipal ordinance that notice be given and an opportunity for a hearing be accorded to anyone who has an interest or property right in the property which may be affected by the zoning regulation. Sikes v. Pierce, 212 Ga. 567, 94 S.E.2d 427 (1956).

A zoning ordinance, in which no language appears providing for hearing and notice of hearing to the property affected thereby, is clearly in contravention of the constitutional requirements of due process, and is therefore unconstitutional and void. Bell v. Studdard, 220 Ga. 756, 141 S.E.2d 536 (1965).

Notice by publication of a rezoning hearing is proper and adequate insofar as the requirements of equal protection are concerned. F.P. Plaza, Inc. v. Waite, 230 Ga. 161, 196 S.E.2d 141, cert. denied, 414 U.S. 825, 94 S. Ct. 129, 38 L. Ed. 2d 59 (1973).

Exercise of zoning power to be reasonably and fairly done. — Municipalities and counties which have had conferred upon them the power to zone property cannot always at one and the same time enact such a comprehensive scheme of zoning and planning as will particularly describe and embrace every piece of property in the entire area of the county or municipality. When reasonably and fairly done, however, such power may be exercised by the enactment of different ordinances affecting different areas at different times. Taylor v. Shetzen, 212 Ga. 101, 90 S.E.2d 572 (1955).

Zoning ordinance which changed rear-yard setback for properties zoned for multi-family use after the date the ordinance was passed but which retained a prior and more restrictive setback requirement for properties zoned prior to that date was arbitrary and unreasonable and, thus, violated the equal protection clauses of the United States and Georgia Constitutions. Bailey Inv. Co. v. Augusta-Richmond County Bd. of Zoning Appeals, 256 Ga. 186, 345 S.E.2d 596 (1986).

Detriment to owner by zoning. — In a suit by a property buyer against the county alleging that the zoning was unconstitutional, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment to the county on the ground that the owner did not prove a significant detriment, because the evidence authorized inferences that the buyer could not feasibly develop the property for residential use under the current agricultural zoning, and that the property only had economic value for residential uses. Legacy Inv. Group, LLC v. Kenn, 279 Ga. 778, 621 S.E.2d 453 (2005).

Ordinance banning permit applications if two or more ordinance violations existed. — In a declaratory judgment action brought by a developer against a county seeking to invalidate an ordinance which required denial of the developer's land disturbance permit based on two soil-related ordinance violations existing, the judgment in favor of the developer was upheld on appeal with regard to the developer's claim for damages under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, for alleged violations of the developer's equal protection rights in the county's enforcement of the ordinance. The trial court properly determined that the developer was not required to prove a valid property right with regard to the developer's equal protection challenge; the trial court properly awarded attorney fees to the developer under O.C.G.A. § 13-6-11 as the jury was authorized to award the attorney fees as an element of the damages it awarded on the developer's federal equal protection claim, regardless of whether the developer could prevail on any state law claim for damages; but the trial court erred by failing to address the merits of the developer's petition for a declaratory judgment since the overall enforceability of the ordinance, which was still the law, was not rendered moot by the withdrawal notice. Fulton County v. Legacy Inv. Group, LLC, 296 Ga. App. 822, 676 S.E.2d 388 (2009).

Taxation

This paragraph does not affect the right of the legislature to tax occupations and to classify the occupations for taxation. Williams v. Fears, 110 Ga. 585, 35 S.E. 699, 50 L.R.A. 685 (1900), aff'd, 179 U.S. 270, 21 S. Ct. 128, 45 L. Ed. 186 (1900).

Unequal taxation forbidden. — The discrimination in taxation which the equal protection clause forbids is the failure of the taxing authorities to tax all like property which is subject to taxation equally or to tax the property of one owner and exempt like property belonging to another owner. Delta Air Lines v. Coleman, 219 Ga. 12, 131 S.E.2d 768, cert. denied, 375 U.S. 904, 84 S. Ct. 195, 11 L. Ed. 2d 145 (1963).

Unequal benefit did not violate equal protection. — County's approval of a tax assessment of each property in the county in order to pay for medical care for indigent patients did not violate due process and equal protection under U.S. Const., amends. 5 and 14 and under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. I and II even though not all taxpayers benefitted; the question of the benefit to each taxpayer was for the legislature except in extraordinary cases, and the instant case was not extraordinary. Greene County Bd. of Comm'rs v. Higdon, 277 Ga. App. 350, 626 S.E.2d 541 (2006).

Meaning of uniform taxation. — The requirement in the Constitution that the rule of taxation shall be uniform means that all kinds of property of the same class not absolutely exempt must be taxed alike, by the same standard of valuation, equally with other taxable property of the same class, and coextensively with the territory to which it applies. Colvard v. Ridley, 218 Ga. 490, 128 S.E.2d 732 (1962).

Property valuation by method other than standard method. — The uniformity clause of the state constitution and the equal protection clauses of the state and federal Constitutions were not offended by a county's valuation of a motel by a method other than the standard method for motels, since the motel property was not actually being operated as a motel and there was no income stream from which to calculate room revenue for use with the standard gross income multiplier method. Coastal Equities, Inc. v. Chatham County Bd. of Tax Assessors, 201 Ga. App. 571, 411 S.E.2d 540, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 903, 411 S.E.2d 540 (1991).

Statute creating special districts for the purpose of implementing a hotel/motel tax did not violate state and federal constitutional due process and equal protection guarantees. Youngblood v. State, 259 Ga. 864, 388 S.E.2d 671 (1990).

County homestead tax exemptions did not violate equal protection. — County homestead exemptions from ad valorem and education taxes did not violate due process or equal protection because they were rationally related to the legitimate government interests of the encouragement of neighborhood preservation, continuity, and stability, and the protection of reliance interest of existing homeowners, and the limits placed on the exemptions were not arbitrary. Blevins v. Dade County Bd. of Tax Assessors, 288

Ga. 113, 702 S.E.2d 145 (2010).

Ordinance imposing an occupational tax on attorneys. — City ordinance imposing an occupational tax on attorneys who maintain an office and practice law in the city did not violate constitutional equal protection because the tax paid for a variety of city services that benefited all citizens within the city, including attorneys. It was reasonable for the city to require attorneys with offices inside city limits to help pay for city services from which the attorneys benefit, and all attorneys subject to the ordinance were taxed uniformly. Moss v. City of Dunwoody, 293 Ga. 858, 750 S.E.2d 326 (2013).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Inconsistent state action is denial of equal protection. — Allowing students who move into fraternity housing to void their university housing contracts while not extending the same privilege to other students is state action which denies equal protection of the laws. 1971 Op. Att’y Gen. No. 71-93.

Unreasonable restriction on police power. — Requiring state personnel to sign waivers of liability for injuries sustained while carrying out their duties of inspection constitutes an unreasonable restriction on the state’s police power. 1976 Op. Att’y Gen. No. 76-121.

Fulton County’s obligation to accord equal treatment to all superior court judges of the Atlanta Judicial Circuit is applicable to all county funded support services, including staffing (e.g., law clerks, secretaries, court reporters, case managers and the like) and the operating budget required for a superior court judge to properly perform the judge’s constitutional and statutory duties. 2002 Op. Att’y Gen. No. U2002-6.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Right to adopt, profess, entertain, or advocate any religious views, or to fail or refuse to do so, is unlimited, and cannot be controlled by any law. There is no authority under the system of jurisprudence to alter, modify, or infringe upon this right. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943).

Acts inimical to societal order not allowed. — While there is no power to control what a person may believe about religion or the type of religion the person may adopt or profess, there is a power under the law to limit the person's acts, even though to do such acts may be part of the person's religious belief. The constitutional guarantee of the exercise of religious freedom does not extend to acts which are inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943); Ferguson v. City of Moultrie, 71 Ga. App. 15, 29 S.E.2d 786 (1944).

Right to exercise religious freedom ceases when others' rights transgressed. — A person's right to exercise religious freedom, which may be manifested by acts, ceases when it overlaps and transgresses the rights of others. Everyone's rights must be exercised with due regard to the rights of others. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943); Ferguson v. City of Moultrie, 71 Ga. App. 15, 29 S.E.2d 786 (1944); Anderson v. State, 84 Ga. App. 259, 65 S.E.2d 848 (1951).

When professed creed not subversive of societal order not concern of government. — So long as professed creed is not subversive of the peace and good order of society, it is not within the province of any department of the government to settle differences in creeds or to determine what ought or ought not to be a fundamental religious belief. Crosby v. Lee, 88 Ga. App. 589, 76 S.E.2d 856 (1953).

Questions of faith and practice not concern of court when civil rights not involved. — All questions relating to the faith and practice of the church and of its members belong to the church judicatories, to which the members have voluntarily subjected themselves. When a person becomes a member of a church, the person does so upon the condition of submission to its ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and the person has no right to invoke the supervisory power of a civil court so long as none of the person's civil rights are involved. Crosby v. Lee, 88 Ga. App. 589, 76 S.E.2d 856 (1953).

Communications in proceeding for expulsion from church membership privileged. — Communications allegedly defaming plaintiff were privileged when made in the course of proceedings expelling a member from a church. Crosby v. Lee, 88 Ga. App. 589, 76 S.E.2d 856 (1953).

Determination of church property rights. — In a dispute over control of church property, after the trial court found that a genuine issue of material fact existed as to which of the two competing factions represented a majority of the congregation and established a procedure for holding an election to resolve the issue, judgment for the deacons was affirmed since: (1) it appeared that the church meeting may have been manipulated to exclude the deacons and their supporters and that non-members may have been allowed to cast votes, the trial court properly ordered and supervised an election process to determine which faction had majority support of the congregation on the issue of church property; and (2) the trial court did not exceed its authority in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. III, as it limited the election procedures to resolving the issue of which faction represented the majority of church members. Howard v. Johnson, 264 Ga. App. 660, 592 S.E.2d 93 (2003).

In a dispute over ownership of a church's property and assets, a trial court erred by granting summary judgment to the plaintiffs, who claimed to be the majority of the church's membership, because the record was insufficient to allow the trial court to determine whether the plaintiffs represented a majority of the church. God's Hope Builders, Inc. v. Mount Zion Baptist Church of Oxford, Georgia, Inc., 321 Ga. App. 435, 741 S.E.2d 185 (2013).

Ordinance forbidding use of public address system from vehicle on public streets upheld. — An ordinance forbidding any person, firm, or corporation to operate a loud speaker or public address system from any vehicle on public streets, alleys, or thoroughfares is not an infringement upon the rights of the defendant granted to the defendant by the provisions of the Constitution of the State of Georgia or of the United States. The thoroughfares of cities are maintained by the public and to say that anyone has a constitutional right to use a loud speaker or public address system from any vehicle on these streets seems to overlap and interfere with the constitutional rights of other people. It makes no difference whether the violation is using the loud speaker to broadcast what one terms recorded sermons or using the loud speaker for vending goods or promoting some political candidate or for some other purpose. Brinkman v. City of Gainesville, 83 Ga. App. 508, 64 S.E.2d 344 (1951).

Ordinance forbidding sales on certain sidewalks during certain hours reasonable regulation. — A municipal ordinance making it illegal for any person, firm, or corporation to sell or offer for sale any goods, wares, merchandise, pamphlets, magazines, maps, or other articles of value, on any Saturday between the hours of 12 Noon and 9 P.M. on certain congested sidewalks and setting a penalty is a valid and reasonable regulation for public safety and convenience, under the police power of the city. When the plaintiffs seek to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance against them, on the grounds that the magazines sold and offered for sale are devoted to religious subjects, and advocate the adoption of a particular form of religion, the distribution of which is a part of their religious belief, and urge that to prohibit the sale of the magazines would be in violation of their rights of religious freedom under the state and federal Constitutions, it is not error to deny an injunction. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943).

County commission's invitational practice. — County commission's sectarian invitational practice did not violate the Freedom of Conscience Clause, Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. III, because county taxpayers and residents failed to persuasively explain how being exposed to prayers with sectarian references interfered with their right of conscience within the meaning of the Georgia Constitution and did not show any government-imposed obstacle to their ability to worship, or not, in a manner that they saw fit. Bats v. Cobb County, 410 F. Supp. 2d 1324 (N.D. Ga. 2006), aff'd, 547 F.3d 1263 (11th Cir. 2008).

Right to adopt, profess, entertain, or advocate any religious views, or to fail or refuse to do so, is unlimited, and cannot be controlled by any law. There is no authority under the system of jurisprudence to alter, modify, or infringe upon this right. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943).

Acts inimical to societal order not allowed. — While there is no power to control what a person may believe about religion or the type of religion a person may adopt or profess, yet there is a power under the law to limit a person’s acts, even though to do such acts may be part of a person’s religious belief. The constitutional guarantee of the exercise of religious freedom does not extend to acts which are inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society. *Jones v. Right to exercise religious freedom ceases when others’ rights transgressed. — A person’s right to exercise religious freedom, which may be manifested by acts, ceases when it overlaps and transgresses the rights of others. Everyone’s rights must be exercised with due regard to the rights of others. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943).

Party’s religious belief cannot be accepted as justification for committing an overt act made criminal by law of the land. Coleman v. City of Griffin, 55 Ga. App. 123, 189 S.E. 427 (1936), appeal dismissed, 302 U.S. 636, 58 S. Ct. 23, 82 L. Ed. 495 (1937).

Ordinance prohibiting distribution of literature without permission valid. — Ordinance prohibiting the distributing of literature within the city limits without prior written permission from the city manager did not deprive the defendant, a Jehovah’s Witness, of the defendant’s constitutional right of the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, even though it prohibited the defendant from introducing and carrying out a scheme or purpose which the defendant saw fit to claim as a part of the defendant’s religious system. Coleman v. City of Griffin, 55 Ga. App. 123, 189 S.E. 427 (1936), appeal dismissed, 302 U.S. 636, 58 S. Ct. 23, 82 L. Ed. 495 (1937).

Ordinance forbidding sales on certain sidewalks during certain hours reasonable regulation. — A municipal ordinance making it illegal for any person, firm, or corporation to sell or offer for sale any goods, wares, merchandise, pamphlets, magazines, maps, or other articles of value, on any Saturday between the hours of 12 Noon and 9 P.M. on certain congested sidewalks and setting a penalty is a valid and reasonable regulation for public safety and convenience, under the police power of the city. When plaintiffs seek to enjoin enforcement of the ordinance against them, on the grounds that the magazines sold and offered for sale are devoted to religious subjects and advocate the adoption of a particular form of religion, the distribution of which is a part of their religious belief, and urge that to prohibit the sale of the magazines would be in violation of their rights of religious freedom under the state and federal Constitutions, it is not error to deny an injunction. Jones v. City of Moultrie, 196 Ga. 526, 27 S.E.2d 39 (1943).

Civil courts forbidden from determining ecclesiastical issues. — Courts of Georgia are prohibited from determining issues of expulsion of members, pastors, and the internal procedures of a religious entity. United Baptist Church, Inc. v. Holmes, 232 Ga. App. 253, 500 S.E.2d 653 (1998).

Trial court did not involve itself in ecclesiastical matters in church property dispute case. — A trial court did not violate the principle of separation of church and state by exercising jurisdiction in a civil case brought by a church and its board of deacons against the pastor and others to have the pastor removed and to have the pastor relinquish control of the church's property because the trial court did not involve itself in ecclesiastical matters when it ordered that persons eligible to vote on whether to retain or discharge the pastor were limited to those in membership with the church under the church's existing bylaws. Further, because the petition in the case involved a dispute over the control of church property, it presented a civil matter over which the trial court had jurisdiction. Smith v. Mount Salem Missionary Baptist Church, 289 Ga. App. 578, 657 S.E.2d 642 (2008).

ANALYSIS

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

APPLICATION

1. IN GENERAL
2. CRIMINAL MATTERS
3. SIGN ORDINANCES
4. SEXUAL EXPRESSION

General Consideration

No absolute right to speak or publish. — It is a fundamental principle, long established that the freedom of speech and of the press which is secured by the Constitution, does not confer an absolute right to speak or publish, without responsibility, whatever one may choose, or an unrestricted and unbridled license that gives immunity for every possible use of language and prevents the punishment of those who abuse this freedom. Carr v. State, 176 Ga. 55, 166 S.E. 827 (1932).

Exercise of freedom must be compatible with preservation of other essential, guaranteed freedoms. — Freedom of speech and of the press, as guaranteed by the Constitution, is essential to the preservation of a free society; but its exercise must be compatible with the preservation of other freedoms essential to a democracy and guaranteed by the Constitution. The independence of the judiciary and the fair and impartial administration of justice are also necessary to a free society. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

Free speech does not necessarily exempt one from regulation, license, or payment of tax, which, under some other theory of law, is a protected public or private right. That which may be a permissible regulation even though it restricts the right of free speech to some extent must bear some genuine and reasonable relation to the general welfare, and to the public health, safety, or morals. Wolfe v. City of Albany, 104 Ga. App. 264, 121 S.E.2d 331 (1961).

Free speech does not give one right to malign another or do act injurious to another’s person or property. Wolfe v. City of Albany, 104 Ga. App. 264, 121 S.E.2d 331 (1961).

Restraints on freedom of speech must be reasonably related to community welfare. — When there is no reasonable relationship between the restraints imposed on freedom of speech and the general welfare of the community, the ordinance is unconstitutional. Wolfe v. City of Albany, 104 Ga. App. 264, 121 S.E.2d 331 (1961).

All speech and press that lie outside of an “abuse of that liberty” are protected by this paragraph. The protection is absolute and cannot be abridged, curtailed, or restrained in any degree for any period of time no matter how short. K. Gordon Murray Prods., Inc. v. Floyd, 217 Ga. 784, 125 S.E.2d 207 (1962).

Abuses of liberty may be suppressed, restrained, enjoined, or punished. — “Abuses of that liberty” are outside the protection of the Constitution and may be suppressed, restrained, enjoined, or punished without violating the Constitution, provided constitutional means for so doing are employed. K. Gordon Murray Prods., Inc. v. Floyd, 217 Ga. 784, 125 S.E.2d 207 (1962).

No prior restraints upon publications but no freedom from censure when criminal matter published. — The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every free person has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments the person pleases before the public; to forbid this, is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if the person publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, the person must take the consequence of the person's own temerity. 106 Forsyth Corp. v. Bishop, 362 F. Supp. 1389 (M.D. Ga. 1972), aff'd, 482 F.2d 280 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1044, 95 S. Ct. 2660, 45 L. Ed. 2d 696 (1975).

Liberty of the press was intended to prevent all previous restraints upon publications as had been practiced by other governments, and in early times, to stifle the efforts of patriots to enlighten their fellow subjects upon their rights and the duties of rulers. The liberty of the press was to be unrestrained, but one who used it was to be responsible in case of its abuse. 106 Forsyth Corp. v. Bishop, 362 F. Supp. 1389 (M.D. Ga. 1972), aff'd, 482 F.2d 280 (5th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 422 U.S. 1044, 95 S. Ct. 2660, 45 L. Ed. 2d 696 (1975).

When injunction not invalid as illegal prior restraint. — If prior to the issuance of an injunction an adequate determination is made that certain communication is unprotected by constitutional provisions safeguarding freedom of speech; that the order is based on a continuing course of repetitive conduct; and that the order is clear and sweeps no more broadly than necessary, then the injunction is not invalid as an illegal prior restraint. Retail Credit Co. v. Russell, 234 Ga. 765, 218 S.E.2d 54 (1975).

Regulatory statute not intended to control content of speech upheld when justified by valid governmental interest. — The freedom of expression guaranteed under the Constitution has been consistently recognized as being narrower than an unlimited license to talk; and regulatory statutes not intended to control the content of speech but incidentally limiting its unfettered exercise are not regarded as violating the constitutional guarantee when justified by a valid governmental interest. Hodnett v. City of Atlanta, 145 Ga. App. 285, 243 S.E.2d 605 (1978).

State conduct is required. — Former employee's claim that the employee was dismissed because of expressive activity, failed under both Georgia's equal protection provisions and freedom of speech guarantees because the former employer and the two managers, were not state actors or private parties acting under the color of state law. Johnson v. Shoney's, Inc., No. 7:04-CV-68 (HL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 18101 (M.D. Ga. Aug. 18, 2005).

Cited in 10950 Retail, LLC v. City of Johns Creek, 299 Ga. App. 458, 682 S.E.2d 637 (2009); DeLong v. State, 310 Ga. App. 518, 714 S.E.2d 98 (2011).

Freedom of the Press

Newspaper libel as limitation on publication privilege. — Certain newspaper publications are privileged; but the privilege is conditional, not absolute; and the “liberty of the press” will not authorize a violation of O.C.G.A. § 51-5-2. Horton v. Georgian Co., 175 Ga. 261, 165 S.E. 443 (1932).

Libel is abuse of liberty of press for which laws of state hold press answerable in damages. McGill v. State, 209 Ga. 500, 74 S.E.2d 78 (1953).

Liberty of press is subordinate to independence of judiciary and proper administration of justice. McGill v. State, 209 Ga. 500, 74 S.E.2d 78 (1953); Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. Grimes, 216 Ga. 74, 114 S.E.2d 421 (1960); Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

Obstructing administration of justice by state courts is abuse of liberty of speech and of press. — Constitution of Georgia guarantees the liberty of speech and of the press, but does not protect an abuse of that liberty. Obstructing the administration of justice by the courts of this state is an abuse of that liberty and will subject the abuser to punishment for contempt of court. McGill v. State, 209 Ga. 500, 74 S.E.2d 78 (1953); Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

Liberty of the press is not synonymous with license, and it does not give the press any right or license to publish libelous matter without responsibility to those who are innocent victims of such libelous publication. Freedom of the press gives the right to print the truth and to comment fairly about the truth; freedom of the press does not give a license to print untruths or half-truths, which are equivalent to untruths and which, in their effect on a person's character and reputation are often more damaging and devastating than would be an outright falsehood. Davis v. Macon Tel. Publishing Co., 93 Ga. App. 633, 92 S.E.2d 619 (1956).

Courts may stop press when interfering with conducting court proceedings. — Courts may stop conduct of representatives of the press in any field of activity interfering with orderly conduct of court procedure or creating distractions interfering therewith. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. Grimes, 216 Ga. 74, 114 S.E.2d 421 (1960), commented on in 23 Ga. B.J. 406 (1961).

When restraint upon newspaper's liberty of speech and of press unwarranted. — A restraining order which prohibited a newspaper from publishing any information on an alleged suspect in a murder case obtained through discovery without the newspaper's first following a procedure of notifying the court of its intent to disclose any information and obtaining the permission of the court to disclose the information in the event an objection was filed constituted an unwarranted restraint upon the newspaper's liberty of speech and of the press. Georgia Gazette Publishing Co. v. Ramsey, 248 Ga.

No right to keep news source confidential. — The guaranty of freedom of the press does not afford a reporter a right not to disclose a confidential news source. Vaughn v. State, 259 Ga. 325, 381 S.E.2d 30 (1989).

Liberty of the press balanced against right to privacy. — Newspaper articles naming a high school student as the victim of a vicious attack by fellow students, and containing a graphic description of the attack, were not an actionable invasion of privacy, in light of the public's legitimate interest in the arrest and prosecution of the perpetrators. Tucker v. News Publishing Co., 197 Ga. App. 85, 397 S.E.2d 499 (1990).

Publishing 20-year-old nude photos of an aspiring model who later became a professional wrestler and whose murder was highly publicized did not fall within Georgia's right of publicity newsworthiness exception; the photos were unrelated to the incident of public concern, the model's death, and thus, a right of publicity case filed by the plaintiff, the mother and personal representative for the model's estate, against the defendant publisher, could be pursued; under the First Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V, every private fact disclosed in an otherwise truthful, newsworthy publication had to have some substantial relevance to a matter of legitimate public interest in order to fall within the newsworthiness exception. Toffoloni v. LFB Publ'g Group, 572 F.3d 1201 (11th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, mot. granted, 130 S. Ct. 1689, 176 L. Ed. 2d 206 (2010).

Newspaper acted with actual malice. — Given that defendants, a newspaper, its editor, and a columnist, so doubted the truthfulness of their articles (alleging that a deputy sheriff beat an arrestee to death with a flashlight) that they refused to print contradictory versions of the events, actual malice could be inferred; as a result, the trial court properly denied their motions for a directed verdict and awarded compensatory and punitive damages to a deputy sheriff in the deputy's libel action. Lake Park Post, Inc. v. Farmer, 264 Ga. App. 299, 590 S.E.2d 254 (2003), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 875, 125 S.

Ct. 104, 160 L. Ed. 2d 125 (2004).

Plaintiff failed to prove newspaper acted with actual malice. — Former police officer sued a newspaper for libel based on a letter to the editor the newspaper printed. As a public figure, the officer had to establish actual malice on the part of the newspaper under O.C.G.A. § 51-5-7(9) and New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254 (1964), but failed to do so because the statements at issue were opinions that were not susceptible of being proved true or false. Evans v. Sandersville Georgian, Inc., 296 Ga. App. 666, 675 S.E.2d 574 (2009).

Application1. In General

State may penalize utterances openly advocating overthrow of government. — A state may penalize utterances which openly advocate the overthrow of the representative and constitutional form of government of the United States and the several states, by violence or other unlawful means. Carr v. State, 176 Ga. 55, 166 S.E. 827 (1932), later appeal, 176 Ga. 747, 169 S.E. 201 (1933).

Freedom of speech and press does not protect disturbances to public peace or attempt to subvert government. — Freedom of speech and press does not protect publications or teachings which tend to subvert or imperil the government or to impede or hinder it in the performance of its governmental duties. Carr v. State, 176 Ga. 55, 166 S.E. 827 (1932), later appeal, 176 Ga. 747, 169 S.E. 201 (1933).

Constitutionality of false statement statute. — False statement statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20, when properly construed to require that the defendant make the false statement with knowledge and intent that the statement may come within the jurisdiction of a state or local government agency, is constitutional because correctly interpreted, the statute raises no substantial constitutional concern on the statute's face; the statute requires a defendant to know and intend, that is, to contemplate or expect, that his or her false statement will come to the attention of a state or local department or agency with the authority to act on the statement, and as properly construed, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20 may only be applied to conduct that persons of common intelligence would know was wrongful because the statement could result in harm to the government. Haley v. State, 289 Ga. 515, 712 S.E.2d 838 (2011), cert. denied, U.S. , 133 S. Ct. 60, 183 L. Ed. 2d 711 (2012).

Ordinance forbidding use of public address system from vehicle on public streets upheld. — An ordinance forbidding any person, firm, or corporation to operate a loud speaker or public address system from any vehicle on public streets, alleys, or thoroughfares is not an infringement upon the rights of the defendant granted to the defendant by the provisions of the Constitution of Georgia or of the United States. The thoroughfares of cities are maintained by the public and to say that anyone has a constitutional right to use a loud speaker or public address system from any vehicle on these streets seems to overlap and interfere with the constitutional rights of other people. It makes no difference whether the violator is using the loud speaker to broadcast what the violator terms recorded sermons, or using the loud speaker for vending goods, or promoting some political candidate, or for some other purpose. Brinkman v. City of Gainesville, 83 Ga. App. 508, 64 S.E.2d 344 (1951).

Ordinance regulating the volume of noise upheld. — Local ordinance regulating the volume of noise from mechanical sound-making devices, Athens-Clarke County, Ga. Ordinance § 3-5-24(c)(2)(a), did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V since the ordinance served a significant government interest in protecting both the community in general and individual citizens from noises which could have affected their comfort, repose, health, or safety, the provision left open ample alternatives for expression, and the ordinance was the least restrictive means of promoting the county's significant interest in protecting the comfort and repose of the county's citizens. Grady v. Unified

Vagueness finding reversed since party lacked standing to challenge constitutionality of county zoning provision. — Because a lessor and a lessee did not preserve an “as applied” challenge to two county zoning code provisions, did not seek a special use permit, and lacked standing to make a constitutional challenge, the trial court erred in finding the provisions unconstitutionally vague, regardless of whether they had an otherwise viable facial challenge. Catoosa County v. R.N. Talley Props., LLC, 282 Ga. 373, 651 S.E.2d 7 (2007).

Malevolent picketing to injure employer and aid unlawful strike not constitutionally protected. — The judicial theory that peaceful picketing is a form of free speech, which is protected by the Constitutions, both federal and state, cannot be stretched to shield malevolent picketing for the purpose of injuring the employer and aiding an unlawful strike. Ellis v. Parks, 212 Ga. 540, 93 S.E.2d 708 (1956); NAACP v. Overstreet, 221 Ga. 16, 142 S.E.2d 816 (1965), cert. dismissed, 384 U.S. 118, 86 S. Ct. 1306, 16 L. Ed. 2d 409 (1966).

Prohibition against showing motion pictures until permit obtained held unconstitutional. — A charter and ordinance provision, requiring inspection of protected as well as unprotected pictures, and requiring a permit from the city authorities before any picture can be exhibited in the theater, violate this paragraph and are void. K. Gordon Murray Prods., Inc. v. Floyd, 217 Ga. 784, 125 S.E.2d 207 (1962).

A section of a city's charter amending act and an ordinance of the city adopted pursuant thereto which prohibit the display of all motion pictures, the good as well as the bad, until a permit to display any of them has been obtained from the city's Board of Censorship offend this section of Georgia's Constitution since the section of the charter amending act authorizes, and the ordinance imposes, a prior restraint of speech on good as well as bad or objectionable pictures. City of Atlanta v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 219 Ga. 271, 133 S.E.2d 12 (1963), commented on in 26 Ga. B.J. 475 (1964).

Government-instituted proceeding must place defendant exhibitor or seller on notice as to what film or publication the defendant has exhibited, sold, or held for sale that the government seeks to seize or suppress. Sanders v. State, 231 Ga. 608, 203 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Freedom of teachers to comment upon matters of public importance and concern. — The question whether a school system requires additional funds is a matter of legitimate public concern on which the judgment of the school administration, including the school board, cannot, in a society that leaves such questions to popular vote, be taken as conclusive. On such a question, free and open debate is vital to informed decision-making by the electorate; teachers are, as a class, the members of a community most likely to have informed and definite opinions as to how funds allotted to the operation of the schools should be spent; accordingly, it is essential that they be able to speak out freely on such questions without fear of retaliatory dismissal. Lindsey v. Board of Regents, 607 F.2d 672 (5th Cir. 1979).

When a questionnaire solicits the views of faculty on a broad range of issues, such as the degree of mutual confidence existing between administration and faculty, the extent to which good teaching and good research are rewarded, the extent to which faculty opinions are listened to and respected, the effectiveness of the administration in dealing with grievances, the accuracy and completeness of information used to evaluate teachers, and other matters that are of public importance and concern, comment upon them is protected speech. Lindsey v. Board of Regents, 607 F.2d 672 (5th Cir. 1979).

Former school district employee's claim that the right to free speech under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V was violated when the employee was terminated after complaining of discriminatory acts by a Superintendent was dismissed upon summary judgment because the employee's speech did not involve a matter of public concern but was related to the employee's own private interest in receiving benefits and a certain pay level. Palmer v. Stewart County Sch. Dist., No.

4:04-CV-21 (CDL), 2005 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35511 (M.D. Ga. June 17, 2005).

When restraint upon newspaper's liberty of speech and of press unwarranted. — A restraining order which prohibited a newspaper from publishing any information on an alleged suspect in a murder case obtained through discovery without the newspaper's first following a procedure of notifying the court of its intent to disclose any information and obtaining the permission of the court to disclose the information in the event an objection was filed constituted an unwarranted restraint upon the newspaper's liberty of speech and of the press. Georgia Gazette Publishing Co. v. Ramsey, 248 Ga. 528, 284 S.E.2d 386 (1981).

Material printed by law publisher rating attorneys is protected by U.S. Const., amend. 1 and this paragraph. Bergen v. Martindale-Hubbell, Inc., 248 Ga. 599, 285 S.E.2d 6 (1981).

Business license tax. — When the purpose of a business license tax was for the purpose of revenue raising and not for the control of solicitation it was not in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V. Miles v. City Council, 551 F. Supp. 349 (S.D. Ga. 1982), aff'd, 710 F.2d 1542 (11th Cir. 1983).

Statement is contemptuous and therefore not constitutionally protected when the statement poses a present danger to the orderly administration of justice but neither an inherent nor a reasonable tendency to do so is enough to justify a restriction of free expression. Garland v. State, 253 Ga. 789, 325 S.E.2d 131 (1985).

Equity will not enjoin libel and slander. Brannon v. American Micro Distribs., Inc., 255 Ga. 691, 342 S.E.2d 301 (1986); High Country Fashions, Inc. v. Marlenna Fashions, Inc., 257 Ga. 267, 357 S.E.2d 576 (1987).

Injunction restricting activities of abortion protesters. — Injunction issued pursuant to a city ordinance declaring the actions of abortion protesters to be a public nuisance was not unconstitutional since the protesters were permitted to exercise their right of free speech by engaging in social protest, limited only by reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions. Hirsh v. City of Atlanta, 261 Ga. 22, 401 S.E.2d 530, cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1221, 111 S. Ct. 2836, 115 L. Ed. 2d 1004 (1991).

Statute regulating profane words on bumper stickers unconstitutionally restricts freedom of expression as guaranteed by the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and by the Georgia Constitution. Cunningham v. State, 260 Ga. 827, 400 S.E.2d 916 (1991).

Ordinance prohibiting the distribution of printed materials to homes violated the freedom of speech and press clauses under the United States and Georgia Constitutions because it was not narrowly tailored to meet the city's interest in preventing litter and failed to provide for meaningful alternatives of communication. Statesboro Publ. Co. v. City of Sylvania, 271 Ga. 92, 516 S.E.2d 926 (1999).

Soliciting in privately owned shopping mall. — Policy of a privately owned shopping mall that prohibited all mall visitors from engaging in solicitation or leafleting in the mall's common areas did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V. Cahill v. Cobb Place Assocs., L.P., 271 Ga. 322, 519 S.E.2d 449 (1999).

Intent of the Anti-Strategic Lawsuits Against Public Participation statute, O.C.G.A. § 9-11-11.1, is to encourage the exercise of free speech and afford a procedural protection to acts of communication on public issues; in connection with this procedural protection, the appellate court held that the mere procedural filing of a verification does not end the matter as to whether a claim could go forward under O.C.G.A. § 9-11-11.1(b) and (d). Harkins v. Atlanta Humane Soc'y, 264 Ga. App. 356, 590 S.E.2d 737 (2003).

Unauthorized practice of law could be limited. — O.C.G.A. § 15-19-51(a)(7) did not limit defendant's right to free speech under U.S. Const., amend. 1, or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V, as defendant had no right to engage in speech which was calculated to deceive or mislead people into thinking that defendant was qualified to practice law. Marks v. State, 280 Ga. 70, 623 S.E.2d 504 (2005).

Festival permits. — City's moratorium on the issuance of festival permits was not an unconstitutional prior restraint under either U.S. Const., amend. 1, or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V because the moratorium did not abridge the right of free speech, the moratorium was content-neutral, and in the absence of a festivals ordinance, the city was not obligated to provide municipal services pertaining to outdoor festivals. Camp Legal Def. Fund, Inc. v. City of Atlanta, 451 F.3d 1257 (11th Cir. 2006).

Ninety-day advance application requirement of the Atlanta Outdoor Festivals Ordinance of 2003, Atlanta, Ga., Code of Ordinances §§ 138-186 to 138-209, was not an unconstitutional prior restraint under either U.S. Const., amend. 1, or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V because the requirement was content-neutral, the requirement was the least restrictive means of regulation, and the requirement left open alternative channels of communication. Camp Legal Def. Fund, Inc. v. City of Atlanta, 451 F.3d 1257 (11th Cir. 2006).

Content-neutral regulation that incidentally affected protected expression should not have been analyzed using rational basis test. — When a night club asserted violations of the club's free speech rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V, the trial court erred in applying the rational basis test in denying the night club's petition for an interlocutory injunction. The challenged content-neutral amendments to county ordinances, which provided that one hour after the end of the legal period for selling alcoholic beverages, a business must be cleared of customers, close, and not reopen until 9:00 A.M., should have been analyzed using the appropriate legal standard: whether the regulation furthered an important government interest, whether the government interest was unrelated to the suppression of speech, and whether the incidental restriction of speech was no greater than was essential to the furtherance of that interest. Great Am. Dream,

Inc. v. DeKalb County, 290 Ga. 749, 727 S.E.2d 667 (2012).

2. Criminal Matters

This paragraph does not guarantee freedom of speech or right of assembly in perpetration of crime. Lowry v. Herndon, 182 Ga. 582, 186 S.E. 429 (1936), rev'd on other grounds, 301 U.S. 242, 57 S. Ct. 732, 81 L. Ed. 1066 (1937).

Anti-Mask Act held constitutional. — Georgia "Anti-Mask Act", O.C.G.A. § 16-11-38, which proscribes intimidating or threatening mask-wearing behavior, does not violate the constitutional rights of freedom of speech, freedom of association, and equal protection of the law. State v. Miller, 260 Ga. 669, 398 S.E.2d 547 (1990).

"Fighting words" not protected speech. — "Fighting words" constitute one of those narrow speech areas not constitutionally protected. State v. Klinakis, 206 Ga. App. 318, 425 S.E.2d 665 (1992).

Rape Victim Confidentiality Statute. — The victim of a sexual assault could not recover damages from a newspaper for invasion of privacy, since, when the victim shot and killed the perpetrator of the assault, the victim became the object of legitimate public interest and the newspaper had the right under the United States and Georgia Constitutions to accurately report facts regarding the incident, including the victim's name. Macon Tel. Publishing Co. v. Tatum, 263 Ga. 677, 436 S.E.2d 655 (1993).

Prior restraint of freedom of speech. — A city's refusal to issue a building permit because the business intended to violate O.C.G.A. § 16-12-80(c) did not constitute an unconstitutional prior restraint of free speech. Chamblee Visuals v. City of Chamblee, 270 Ga. 33, 506 S.E.2d 113 (1998).

Obscene material not protected. — Devices "designed or marketed as useful primarily for the stimulation of human genital organs," prohibited from distribution under O.C.G.A. § 16-12-80, are not protected expressions under either the First Amendment of the federal constitution or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I.

Morrison v. State, 272 Ga. 129, 526 S.E.2d 336 (2000).

“Fighting words” construed narrowly. — To ensure no abridgment of constitutional rights, the application of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-39(a)(3)’s proscription on “fighting words” must necessarily be narrow and limited; since the only statements shown in the evidence to have been uttered by defendant to an officer during an incident at a store were, “Arrest me” and “Damn, I’m calling corporate office” did not rise to the level of required “fighting words,” defendant’s conviction of disorderly conduct, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-39(a)(3), was not supported by sufficient evidence. Sandidge v. State, 279 Ga. App. 86, 630 S.E.2d 585 (2006).

Constitutionality of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-34. — O.C.G.A. § 16-11-34(a) was overbroad and was unconstitutional; the literal language of the statute was so overbroad in its scope that it led to an absurdity manifestly not intended by the legislature, and its constitutionality could not have been preserved by judicial construction. State v. Fielden, 280 Ga. 444, 629 S.E.2d 252 (2006).

Constitutionality of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60(b). — Trial court did not err in finding that O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60(b) was not unconstitutionally vague nor overbroad and was not preempted by federal law, as: (1) the statute aimed to protect the public and entertainment industry from piracy and bootlegging, a legitimate governmental interest unrelated to free speech concerns; (2) it did not impinge upon pure speech, but, at most, regulated a combination of commercial conduct and speech; (3) its deterrent effect on legitimate expression was minimal; and (4) it plainly prohibited the sale, or possession for the purposes of sale, of an article that did not prominently display the name and address of the individual (or entity) who transferred the sounds to the article. Briggs v. State, 281 Ga. 329, 638 S.E.2d 292 (2006).

Constitutionality of Georgia Street Gang Terrorism and Prevention Act. — Trial court properly denied the appellants’ motion to dismiss various counts charging the appellants with gang-related crimes under the Georgia Street Gang Terrorism and Prevention Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-15-1 et seq., since properly construed O.C.G.A. § 16-15-4(a) did not directly or indirectly infringe upon the First Amendment right to freedom of association as, to support a conviction, gang conduct or participation was required. Further, reading of § 16-15-4(a) according to the natural and obvious import of the statute’s language and in conjunction with the specific definitions in O.C.G.A. § 16-15-3, the statute provided a sufficiently definite warning to persons of ordinary intelligence of the prohibited conduct and was not susceptible to arbitrary and discriminatory enforcement and did not reach a substantial amount of constitutionally protected conduct, thus, the statute was not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad. Rodriguez v. State, 284 Ga. 803, 671 S.E.2d 497 (2009).

O.C.G.A. § 16-5-5(b) is unconstitutional under the free speech provisions of the United States and Georgia Constitutions, U.S. Const., amend. 1 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V, because it is not all assisted suicides that are criminalized but only those that include a public advertisement or offer to assist; because the state failed to provide any explanation or evidence as to why a public advertisement or offer to assist in an otherwise legal activity was sufficiently problematic to justify an intrusion on protected speech rights, it could not, consistent with the United States and Georgia Constitutions, make the public advertisement or offer to assist in a suicide a criminal offense. Final Exit Network, Inc. v. State, 290 Ga. 508, 722 S.E.2d 722 (2012).

Freedom to choose own counsel. — Trial court did not abuse the court’s discretion by denying the defendant’s motion for a continuance and ruling that the defendant had three options: proceed to trial with old counsel, proceed with new counsel instantler, or self-represent when the trial court engaged in a proper balancing test by weighing the fact that the defendant and trial counsel, who was prepared for trial, disagreed regarding trial strategy against what the court determined was an undue delay in trying the case. Alwi v. State, 331 Ga. App. 903, 773 S.E.2d 387 (2015), cert. denied, 2015 Ga. LEXIS 559 (Ga. 2015).

3. Sign Ordinances

Sign ordinance's content-based restrictions were invalid. — In grandfathering a condominium development sign pursuant to Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-370, while prohibiting all other commercial signs in residential areas, the city imposed differential burdens upon speech based on its content. Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

Selective enforcement of sign ordinance prohibited. — Grandfather provision of Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-370, was unconstitutional to the extent that city sign ordinance enforcement officials chose not to enforce the sign ordinance against any non-compliant sign in place before their jobs began; having decided to enact a rigorous sign ordinance, the city was prohibited from selectively applying its provisions for the sake of convenience; moreover, if aesthetics were a concern, as the city stated, that concern was not promoted by allowing non-compliant signs, no matter when they were erected. Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

1994 Sign Ordinance. — The 1994 Sign Ordinance, a comprehensive regulatory framework for the posting of all signs within the City of Atlanta, does not violate equal protection or free speech. Outdoor Sys. v. City of Atlanta, 885 F. Supp. 1572 (N.D. Ga. 1995).

City sign ordinance that prohibited the display of noncommercial messages at locations where commercial messages were permitted was unconstitutional. Union City Bd. of Zoning Appeals v. Justice Outdoor Displays, Inc., 266 Ga. 393, 467 S.E.2d 875 (1996).

Ordinance that restricted signs in residential zoning districts to on-premise signs and certain temporary or special signs, allowing temporary political signs, but not providing for permanent signs expressing the political, religious, or other noncommercial views of residents, was unconstitutional. Union City Bd. of Zoning Appeals v. Justice Outdoor Displays, Inc., 266 Ga. 393, 467 S.E.2d 875 (1996).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment to a city in a suit brought by an outdoor sign company challenging the constitutionality of the city's sign ordinance as the company's sign applications failed to meet the city's height and size restrictions and the restrictions were constitutional. Since the company lacked standing to challenge any other provision of the ordinance, the trial court should not have addressed the company's constitutional arguments concerning other provisions of the ordinance, though that appellate court determination did not change the grant of summary judgment to the city. Granite State Outdoor Adver., Inc. v. City of Roswell, 283 Ga. 417, 658 S.E.2d 587 (2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 222, 172 L.Ed.2d 143 (2008).

Standing to object to city ordinance. — In a corporation's suit alleging that a city's denial of the corporation's variance applications under the September 20, 1983, Cumming, Georgia zoning ordinance, as amended on June 20, 2006, violated Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. 1, Para. V, the corporation lacked standing to assert the corporation's claims regarding the actual denial of the variances; those claims were not redressible because the corporation did not challenge the height or spacing requirements upon which the denials were predicated. However, the corporation had standing to assert the corporation's claims regarding the city's long delay in processing the applications because such injury was redressible. Roma Outdoor Creations, Inc. v. City of Cumming, 599 F. Supp. 2d 1332 (N.D. Ga. 2009).

County sign ordinance. — A county ordinance which prohibited off-premise signs in commercially-zoned areas, including all commercial signs, and then permitted the county to decide on a case-by-case basis which signs were allowed, violated the First Amendment. By initially declaring all signs as illegal and allowing the county to exempt from the ban only on a case-by-case basis, the ordinance was more extensive than was necessary to protect against misleading commercial speech and provided insufficient protection for protected speech, both commercial and otherwise. Fulton County v. Galberaith, 282 Ga. 314, 647 S.E.2d 24 (2007).

Standard for determining constitutionality of sign ordinance. — Trial court erred by holding that there was a rational relationship between a county's sign restrictions and its interests in aesthetics and traffic safety in denying a request filed by two residents to temporarily enjoin the enforcement of certain provisions of the county ordinance; the court should have applied a time, place, and manner standard as required by the U.S. Constitution, or a least restrictive means analysis as required by the Georgia Constitution, drawing regulations to suppress no more speech than was necessary to achieve the county's goals. Coffey v. Fayette County, 279 Ga. 111, 610 S.E.2d 41 (2005).

In considering the constitutionality of ordinances restricting free speech, the courts were required to review the ordinance closely to ensure that it was narrowly drawn to serve the governmental interest and were not permitted to merely defer to the discretion of the governmental entity; a trial court erred in upholding a county's sign ordinance without taking evidence and in deferring without question to the decisions made at the discretion of the county. Coffey v. Fayette County, 280 Ga. 656, 631 S.E.2d 703 (2006).

Ban on signs in public right of way not unconstitutional. — City clearly had the right to prohibit the erection of signs on the public right of way; therefore, the provision of the city sign ordinance, banning signs on the public right of way, Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-372(e), was not unconstitutional. Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

Holiday decoration exemption unconstitutional. — Although the general setback provision of the city sign ordinance, Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-374(a), requiring signs to be set back 10 feet from the edge of the sidewalk or 15 feet from the edge of the road where there was no sidewalk, was constitutional since it was narrowly drawn to ensure that yard signs did not block the view of traffic or otherwise obstruct intersections, but otherwise allowed those passing by to be able to read the signs, the exemption for seasonal displays and decorations found in Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-363(f) was not constitutional; if the city did not wish a sign near its right of way because of traffic and visibility concerns, allowing a large holiday decoration near the sidewalk would have posed the same problems. Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

Content-based ban on flags unconstitutional. — City's arbitrary enforcement of Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-376(e), which banned all commercial flags on residential property, was unconstitutional, based on the city's own definition of a "commercial message," found in Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance § 5-362; the city's failure to enforce the ban on the posting of commercial messages in residential areas against the flags of professional sports teams constituted content-based discrimination since non-sports team commercial messages were at a disadvantage; accordingly, such content-based restrictions were presumptively invalid. Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

Content-neutral sign ordinance constitutionally valid. — Cherokee County, Ga., sign ordinance did not violate the state or federal constitution because the number, height, and area requirements under which the permit applications were denied were constitutionally valid; the sign ordinance allowed a maximum area of 120 square feet, a maximum height of 35 feet and restricted businesses to only one freestanding sign. Furthermore, the ordinance was content-neutral and did not grant unfettered discretion to government officials, as the ordinance itself contained adequate standards to guide the official's decision and render it subject to judicial review. Douglas Out- door Adver. of Ga., Inc. v. Cherokee County, No. 1:03-CV-1677-JOF, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14113 (N.D. Ga. July 13, 2004).

Because there was a reasonable fit between the city's stated goals of public and traffic safety and aesthetic harmony and the city sign ordinance's restrictions on the size and height of real estate signs and the number and location of yard sale signs, Avondale Estates, Ga., Sign Ordinance §§ 5-361(a) and 5-380(a)(4), the court found that the restrictions, limiting real estate signs to four square feet in area and three square feet in height, as well as the number and location of yard sale signs, were constitutional limitations on commercial speech. Kennedy v. Avondale Estates, 414 F. Supp. 2d 1184 (N.D. Ga. 2005).

Sign ordinance's content based restrictions were invalid. — Corporation was successful in the corporation's suit alleging that a city's denial of the corporation's variance applications under the September 20, 1983, Cumming, Georgia zoning ordinance, as amended on June 20, 2006, violated Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V since the ordinance, which limited billboard content to travel services and attractions, was unconstitutional on the ordinance's face because the ordinance was a prior restraint that was content-based and lacked time limits, and the city's delay of more than 150 days in processing the corporation's billboard variance applications violated the corporation's rights. Roma Outdoor Creations, Inc. v. City of Cumming, 599 F. Supp. 2d 1332 (N.D. Ga. 2009).

4. Sexual Expression

When allegedly obscene materials or films are suppressed or seized, a judicial proceeding must provide for a prompt and final judicial determination of the obscenity of the film or material. Temporary restraints to preserve the status quo in this regard are authorized after an adversary hearing and when followed by a prompt final determination of obscenity. Sanders v. State, 231 Ga. 608, 203 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Injunctive procedures are available to stop obscene expressions. Sanders v. State, 231 Ga. 608, 203 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Government must bear burden of proof of obscenity. — In each case, the government must institute judicial proceedings whereby the material or film is seized or suppressed and the government bears the burden of proof of the obscenity of the material or film. Sanders v. State, 231 Ga. 608, 203 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Sexually-oriented communication. — Statute prohibiting certain nude and sexual conduct on premises where alcoholic beverages are sold or dispensed for consumption on the premises infringes upon protected speech and must fall as an improper exercise of the state's police power. Harris v. Entertainment Sys., 259 Ga. 701, 386 S.E.2d 140 (1989).

Although a state may have a certain amount of its police power restored to it under the Twenty-first Amendment that would otherwise be limited under the First Amendment, the expression involved in an establishment offering sexually-oriented communication where alcohol is served is still within the purview of the First Amendment, and is still protected by Georgia's free expression guarantees. Because Georgia has no constitutional equivalent to the Twenty-first Amendment, the state's police power, though possibly not limited under the U.S. Constitution, is limited by Georgia's Constitution. Harris v. Entertainment Sys., 259 Ga. 701, 386 S.E.2d 140 (1989).

O.C.G.A. § 16-12-103(b)(2) prohibiting the admission of persons between 18 and 21 years of age to premises where sexually explicit performances are exhibited is unconstitutional as an infringement on free speech rights without proof of a compelling state interest justifying the application of such a restriction. State v. Cafe Erotica, Inc., 269 Ga. 486, 500 S.E.2d 574 (1998).

"Total nude dancing" municipal ordinance unconstitutional. — Municipal ordinance prohibiting total nude dancing and placing restrictions on partial nude dancing was an unconstitutional infringement on protected expression as overly broad, and void for vagueness for lack of sufficient warning as to proscribed conduct. Pel Assoc., Inc. v. Joseph, 262 Ga.

Ordinance prohibiting sale of alcohol in adult entertainment establishments. — City ordinance prohibiting the sale of alcohol at an erotic dance establishment was constitutional. The adult entertainment establishment ordinance was narrowly drawn to promote the city's interest in combating the secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments. Gravely v. Bacon, 263 Ga. 203, 429 S.E.2d 663 (1993).

County ordinance restricting adult entertainment establishments offering nude dancing and alcohol was sufficiently narrow in its descriptions of prohibited attire and conduct to pass constitutional challenges for "overbreadth". S.J.T., Inc. v. Richmond County, 263 Ga. 267, 430 S.E.2d 726 (1993).

A legislative restriction on adult entertainment must satisfy a tripartite test in order to comport with the free speech guarantees of the federal and state constitutions. The constitutionality of a law regulating adult entertainment will be upheld only: (1) if it furthers an important government interest; (2) if that government interest is unrelated to the suppression of speech; and (3) if the incidental restriction of speech is no greater than is essential to the furtherance of that government interest. Discotheque, Inc. v. City Council, 264 Ga. 623, 449 S.E.2d 608 (1994).

When the stated purpose of a municipal ordinance regulating adult entertainment on premises licensed to sell alcoholic beverages was to reduce criminal activity and deterioration of neighborhoods as pernicious secondary effects of adult entertainment establishments, the city failed to show there was no genuine issue of material fact as to these issues. Discotheque, Inc. v. City Council, 264 Ga. 623, 449 S.E.2d 608 (1994).

A city ordinance adopted pursuant to the authority of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. VI, Para. VII, and providing that a liquor license would not be issued for a location where adult entertainment licenses were required did not violate constitutional free speech guarantees. Goldrush II v. City of Marietta, 267 Ga. 683, 482 S.E.2d 347 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 818, 118 S. Ct. 70, 139 L. Ed. 2d 31 (1997).

Restricting off-site advertising of nude dance establishments. — A statute proscribing any form of off-site advertising for commercial establishments featuring nude dancing impedes the free flow of information and far exceeds the state's legitimate interest in preventing hazards to the traveling public, and, thus, impermissibly infringes the right of free speech. State v. Cafe Erotica, Inc., 270 Ga. 97, 507 S.E.2d 732 (1998).

Indecent or obscene speech. — Defendant's conviction for violating O.C.G.A. § 46-5-21(a)(1) was reversed as the statute was an overbroad infringement on defendant's First Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V rights to free speech; the statute does not contain the necessary language setting out the least restrictive means to further a compelling state interest as it applies to indecent or obscene speech, whether heard by children or adults, and whether not welcomed by listeners or spoken with intent to please. McKenzie v. State, 279 Ga. 265, 626 S.E.2d 77 (2005).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Equality of the civil rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the employment of this principle, if within its power. Missouri State Life Ins. Co. v. Lovelace, 1 Ga. App. 446, 58 S.E. 93 (1907).

Safeguarding the right of the people to exercise their civil rights and to be free from violence and intimidation is not only a compelling interest, it is the General Assembly’s affirmative constitutional duty. State v. Miller, 260 Ga. 669, 398 S.E.2d 547 (1990).

Access to courts. — The 1987 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 9-3-73, which altered tolling provisions otherwise applicable to tort claims by injured minors in cases in which tort claims arose from health care professionals’ malpractice, did not violate a brain-damaged child’s right to equal protection or right of access to the courts. Smith v. Cobb County-Kennestone Hosp. Auth., 262 Ga. 566, 423 S.E.2d 235 (1992).

Punishment for violent or repeat offenders constitutional. — O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6.1, which dictates the punishment for serious violent offenders, in conjunction with O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7, the sentencing statute applicable to recidivist armed robbers, does not violate either the federal or the state constitutions. Byrd v. State, 236 Ga. App. 485, 512 S.E.2d 372 (1999).

Failure to conduct Faretta hearing. — Trial court deprived the defendant of the defendant’s constitutional right to self-representation by summarily ruling that the defendant could not represent oneself at trial without conducting a Faretta hearing and apprising the defendant of the dangers and disadvantages of self-representation. Smith v. State, 332 Ga. App. 849, 775 S.E.2d 211 (2015).

Legal resident is synonymous with domiciliary. a domiciliary being one whose permanent home is in a particular place, known as the domicile. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 91.

Requirements for state citizenship. — A person must be a citizen, either natural born or naturalized, of the United States and must reside within this state in order to be a citizen of the State of Georgia. 1984 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 84-55.

Legal resident is not actual resident.

— The fact that one is a legal resident of Georgia does not, of itself, render one an actual resident of the state. One can only be an actual resident by living in the state. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 91.

Effect of temporary change of residence. — Loss of citizenship does not result from a change of residence not intended to be permanent. 1958-59 Op. Att'y Gen. p. 92.

Paragraph VIII. Arms, right to keep and bear.

The right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, but the General Assembly shall have power to prescribe the manner in which arms may be borne.

1976 Constitution. — Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V.

Cross references. — Right to bear arms, U.S. Const., amend. 2, and § 1-2-6. Restrictions on the right to bear arms, § 16-11-100 et seq.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Right to bear arms is common-law right, and is for the purpose of securing a well qualified militia. Nunn v. State, 1 Ga. 243 (1846); Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S.E. 260, 36 L.R.A. (n.s.) 115, 1913B Ann. Cas. 323 (1911).

Legislature may inhibit wearing of concealed weapons. Stockdale v. State, 32 Ga. 225 (1861).

Provision requiring one carrying revolver to obtain license does not violate this paragraph. Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S.E. 260, 36 L.R.A. (n.s.) 115, 1913B Ann. Cas. 323 (1911); Glenn v. State, 10 Ga. App. 128, 72 S.E. 927 (1911); McCoy v. State, 157 Ga. 767, 122 S.E. 200 (1924).

Prohibition of keeping and carrying certain kinds of weapons is justified for purpose of preventing crime under the general police power of regulation of the state, the question in each case being whether the particular regulation involved is legitimate and reasonably within the police power, or whether it is arbitrary, and, under the name of regulation, amounts to a deprivation of the constitutional right to keep and bear arms. Carson v. State, 241 Ga. 622, 247 S.E.2d 68 (1978).

Prohibition of possessing weapons in context of visitation order. — Trial court's order that the parties not have any weapons in their possession when exchanging their children did not infringe on a parent's right under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. VIII to keep and bear arms as the parent's possession of a firearm was not restricted except in the context of a narrowly tailored condition of visitation justified by the evidence. Moore v. Moore-McKinney, 297 Ga. App. 703, 678 S.E.2d 152 (2009).

Marketing of handguns not unreasonably dangerous or socially unacceptable. — The enactment of comprehensive licensing provisions for suppliers and purchasers of handguns indicates that the General Assembly is not inclined to ban the use of such weapons and that legislators do not consider the marketing of handguns to be an unreasonably dangerous or socially unacceptable activity. Rhodes v. R.G. Indus., Inc., 173 Ga. App. 51, 325 S.E.2d 465 (1984).

O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131 is a reasonable regulation authorized by the police power and thus is not violative of Ga. Const. 1976, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. V (see now O.C.G.A. Art. I, Sec. I, Para. VIII). Landers v. State, 250 Ga. 501, 299 S.E.2d 707 (1983).

O.C.G.A. § 16-11-129 not unconstitutional. — O.C.G.A. § 16-11-129, which regulated the ability of citizens to carry a weapon in public, was justified by the goal to protect the safety of individuals who are in public places, which was a legitimate and compelling government interest. The statute was not unconstitutional as applied to an applicant who pled nolo contendere to violent felonies in Florida more than 20 years earlier, under either U.S. Const., amend. II or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. VIII. Hertz v. Bennett, 294 Ga. 62, 751 S.E.2d 90 (2013).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

No duty on officials to effectuate presentation and consideration of petition. — While every citizen of this state is given a constitutional right to petition to those vested with the powers of government for redress of grievances, it does not follow that there was a duty upon the defendants, Speaker and Clerk of the House of Representatives, to effectuate its presentation and consideration, and their failure, therefore, to present a petition seeking the impeachment of certain officers to the House did not constitute a violation of a legal duty to petitioner which would form the basis for a right of action for even nominal damages. Richter v. Harris, 62 Ga. App. 64, 7 S.E.2d 432 (1940).

Invalidity of statute restricting right of application. — A law authorizing a court to restrain any person from applying to either department of the government for a right to which that person claims to be entitled is invalid. Northeastern R.R. v. Morris, 59 Ga. 364 (1877).

Unified city/county government was not a municipality for purposes of the waiver of sovereign immunity by operation of O.C.G.A. § 36-33-1, because the charter creating the unified government expressly provided that its tort and nuisance liability would follow the law and rules of tort liability applicable to counties in Georgia. Athens-Clarke County v. Torres, 246 Ga. App. 215, 540 S.E.2d 225 (2000).

Requirement that one judge of a court of limited jurisdiction be available on a 24-hour basis to issue warrants does not infringe on the right to assemble as guaranteed in the state and federal constitutions. McCray v. Cobb County, 251 Ga. 24, 302 S.E.2d 563 (1983).

No right to solicit in privately-owned shopping malls. — Nothing in the Georgia Constitution or the Recall Act of 1989, either separately or together, establishes a right of private citizens to enter onto privately-owned shopping malls to solicit signatures for a recall petition. Citizens for Ethical Gov't, Inc. v. Gwinnett Place Assoc., 260 Ga. 245, 392 S.E.2d 8 (1990).

ANALYSIS

BILL OF ATTAINDER

EX POST FACTO LAWS

RETROACTIVE LAWS

LAWS IMPAIRING OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS

VESTED RIGHTS

General Consideration

Status analogous to contractual relation could not be impaired by subsequent provisions. — The approval of school bonds by the electors and their validation according to statute created a status analogous to a contractual relation between such electors and the state, which could not be destroyed or impaired by a subsequent statute or constitutional provision. Wheeler v. Board of Trustees, 200 Ga. 323, 37 S.E.2d 322 (1946).

Contract between state and individual is protected by this constitutional prohibition. Morris v. Interstate Bond Co., 180 Ga. 689, 180 S.E. 819 (1935).

No bar to tax legislation effective upon business or occupation in year in which enacted. — It is competent for the legislature to enact that a person entering upon the business or occupation upon which the tax provided in an ordinance has been imposed, by the terms thereof, should pay the amount of the tax named for the year, or for any period of time within the year, during which the person should choose to apply for a license. Pharr Rd. Inv. Co. v. City of Atlanta, 224 Ga. 752, 164 S.E.2d 803 (1968).

Statute made no irrevocable grant of right of taxation. — Former Code 1933, § 56-1310, (see now O.C.G.A. § 33-8-8) was not unconstitutional because it neither made any irrevocable grant of special privileges and immunities nor did it irrevocably give, grant, limit, or restrain the state's sovereign right of taxation as proscribed by this paragraph and Ga. Const. 1945, Art. VII, Sec. I, Para. I (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VII, Sec. I, Para. I). Nash v. National Preferred Life Ins. Co., 222 Ga. 14, 148 S.E.2d 402 (1966).

Statute regulating coin operated amusement machines. — In a suit for tortious interference with contractual relations, the trial court erred by granting partial summary judgment against the owners of coin-operated amusement machines because O.C.G.A. § 50-27-70 et seq. did not void preexisting contracts and it was error to interpret the statute otherwise. All Star, Inc. v. Ga. Atlanta Amusements, LLC, 332 Ga. App. 1, 770 S.E.2d 22 (2015).

Constitutional issue on zoning ordinance. — Trial court erred by failing to address whether a 1993 county zoning ordinance was constitutional because the record established that the landfill permit applicant raised a constitutional challenge to the zoning ordinance before the trial court in its response to the challengers' motion for partial summary judgment and, in fact, in its transfer order to the appellate court, the trial court specifically stated that the court did not rule on the applicant's constitutional argument. Southern States-Bartow County, Inc. v. Riverwood Farm Prop. Owners Ass'n, Inc., 331 Ga. App. 878, 769 S.E.2d 823 (2015).

Application of amendments to criminal history record information statute.

— Recent amendments to Georgia's criminal history record information statute, O.C.G.A. § 35-3-37, are to be applied to information regarding arrests occurring prior to the amendments' effective date as the statute itself made clear that the statute does apply to information regarding arrests pre-dating the amendments, and such application presents no constitutional problem. Mosley v. Lowe, 298 Ga. 363, 782 S.E.2d 43 (2016).

Bill of Attainder

Removal of county commissioner from office. — Local act, which had the effect of removing a county commissioner from office before the end of the two-year term to which the commissioner had been appointed to fill a vacancy left by a deceased commissioner, was a bill of attainder prohibited by both the Georgia and United States Constitutions. Fulton v. Baker, 261 Ga. 710, 410 S.E.2d 735 (1991).

Bill of Attainder (Cont'd)

Discovery. — The amended discovery procedure of O.C.G.A. § 17-16-1 et seq. is not a bill of attainder, which refers to legislative imposition of punishment on specific persons or on a class of persons without any judicial proceeding. Stinski v. State, 281 Ga. 783, 642 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

Local deannexation statute that included the area of the city in which the mayor resided, making the mayor ineligible to hold office, was not an unconstitutional bill of attainder because it neither singled out the mayor nor punished the mayor as an officeholder. Lee v. City of Villa Rica, 264 Ga. 606, 449 S.E.2d 295 (1994).

Local act providing for selection of chair of board of education was unconstitutional bill of attainder. — H.B. 563 was an unconstitutional bill of attainder under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X, as applied to the chairperson of the Randolph County Board of Education because prior to the passage of the bill, the chairperson's term was not set to expire until December 31, 2010, but the bill operated to cut short the chairperson's four-year term that had previously been established by O.C.G.A. § 20-2-57(a) and local board policy. Cook v. Smith, 288 Ga. 409, 705 S.E.2d 847 (2010).

Ex Post Facto Laws

Ex post facto laws are prohibited. Akins v. State, 231 Ga. 411, 202 S.E.2d 62 (1973).

The amended discovery procedure of O.C.G.A. § 17-16-1 et seq. is not an ex post facto law because it affects purely procedural rights and duties. Stinski v. State, 281 Ga. 783, 642 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

General aspects of ex post facto laws. — A statute cannot be an ex post facto law if it is apparent that the legislature in enacting the statute involved did not make that a criminal act which was innocent when done; did not aggravate an offense or change the punishment and make it greater than when it was committed; did not alter the rules of evidence and require less or different evidence than the law required at the time of the commission of the offense; and did not deprive the accused of any substantial right or immunity possessed by the defendant at the time of the commission of the offense. Todd v. State, 228 Ga. 746, 187 S.E.2d 831, answer conformed to, 125 Ga. App. 841, 189 S.E.2d 696 (1972).

As a general rule, any law is ex post facto which is enacted after the offense was committed, and which, in relation to it or its consequences, alters the situation of the accused to the accused's disadvantage. Todd v. State, 228 Ga. 746, 187 S.E.2d 831, answer conformed to, 125 Ga. App. 841, 189 S.E.2d 696 (1972).

Construction of ex post facto prohibitions. — The ex post facto laws prohibited by the state and federal Constitutions refer only to laws which aggravate the crime, increase the punishment, or allow conviction on a less or different weight of evidence, and not to those which reduce or mollify the penalty. Barton v. State, 81 Ga. App. 810, 60 S.E.2d 173 (1950).

Term ex post facto refers to criminal statutes. Williams v. State, 213 Ga. 221, 98 S.E.2d 373 (1957); Goolsby v. Regents of Univ. Sys., 141 Ga. App. 605, 234 S.E.2d 165 (1977).

The taking of a urine sample from a fireman by a city was not a legislative enactment and therefore did not violate the ex post facto clause. Smith v. City of E. Point, 189 Ga. App. 454, 376 S.E.2d 215 (1988), cert. denied, 189 Ga. App. 913, 376 S.E.2d 215 (1989).

Ex post facto law relates to criminal cases only and is a law that alters the situation of the accused to the accused's disadvantage. Bailey v. State, 210 Ga. 52, 77 S.E.2d 511 (1953).

Prohibition of ex post facto laws applies only to substantive, not procedural, rights. Cannon v. State, 246 Ga. 754, 272 S.E.2d 709 (1980).

Act which is procedural in nature does not violate ex post facto rule when applied to previously committed offense unless it results in the infliction of greater punishment for the crime or alters the situation of the accused to the accused's disadvantage. Walker v. State, 132 Ga. App. 274, 208 S.E.2d 5 (1974).

Statute that only regulates procedure is outside constitutional prohibitions. — While it is the rule that no one has a vested right in a mere mode of procedure, so that a statute merely regulating procedure, and leaving untouched “all the substantial protections with which existing law surrounds the person accused of crime,” is not within the constitutional inhibition against ex post facto laws, yet a statute is void and ineffective as related to previous offenses, if it takes from the accused a substantial right given to the accused by the law in force at the time to which the accused’s guilt relates, and such a statute “cannot be sustained simply because, in a general sense, it may be said to regulate procedure.” Winston v. State, 186 Ga. 573, 198 S.E. 667 (1938), commented on in 1 Ga. B.J. 46 (1939); Todd v. State, 228 Ga. 746, 187 S.E.2d 831, answer conformed to, 125 Ga. App. 841, 189 S.E.2d 696 (1972).

In order for statute to violate prohibition against ex post facto laws it must affect substantive right of accused and an accused does not have a vested right in a mere mode of procedure. Eades v. State, 232 Ga. 735, 208 S.E.2d 791 (1974).

Upon the defendant’s constitutional challenge to the retrospective application of three provisions of the Criminal Justice Act, Ga. L. 2005, p. 20, no reversible error resulted from challenges to the closing arguments and admission of character evidence, as: (1) the former was not distinctly ruled upon by the lower court; and (2) the lower court sustained objections to the admissibility of character evidence, and thus, the state could not introduce character evidence regarding the defendant’s prior criminal convictions; moreover, a change in the number of the defendant’s peremptory challenges by the Act did not affect any protected right by the application of the amended version of O.C.G.A. § 15-12-165, as strikes were procedural and not substantive in nature. Madison v. State, 281 Ga. 640, 641 S.E.2d 789 (2007).

Jury determination of sentence is not a substantive right so as to come within the proscriptions of “ex post facto laws”. Adkins v. State, 134 Ga. App. 507, 215 S.E.2d 270 (1975); Mealor v. State, 134 Ga. App. 564, 215 S.E.2d 272 (1975).

Changes deemed necessary for orderly and just conduct of criminal trials is outside ex post facto prohibitions. — When the changes effected by the enactment of a law constitute merely an alteration in the conditions deemed necessary for the orderly and just conduct of criminal trials, they do not deprive the defendant of any substantial personal right within the meaning of the constitutional prohibitions of ex post facto laws. Todd v. State, 228 Ga. 746, 187 S.E.2d 831, answer conformed to, 125 Ga. App. 841, 189 S.E.2d 696 (1972).

Statute may use conviction as element of future offense. — Even though a statute, passed after a conviction, uses the conviction as an element of a future offense, this is not an ex post facto law, because the defendant’s punishment for an earlier conviction is not increased, because the statute punishes only for a future offense, and because punishment is rationally enhanced by the prior conviction. State v. Dean, 235 Ga. App. 847, 510 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Prior conviction as an element of a future offense. — Even though O.C.G.A. § 42-1-13 was passed after a sex offender’s statutory rape conviction, and used the prior conviction as an element of a future offense, it was not an ex post facto law since it only punished a future offense, which punishment was enhanced by the prior conviction, and the sex offender could only have been punished under § 42-1-13 if the offender prospectively chose to violate it by continuing to live at the offender’s current home; the fact that the prior conviction subjected the sex offender to possible punishment under § 42-1-13 did not make the statute into an unconstitutional ex post facto law. Denson v. State of Ga., 267 Ga. App. 528, 600 S.E.2d 645 (2004).

Habitual violator statute is not ex post facto. — A habitual violator statute allowing consideration of offenses which occurred before enactment of the statute is not ex post facto. The repetition of the criminal conduct aggravates the offender’s guilt and justifies heavier penalties when the offender is again convicted, and the penalty is imposed for a new crime only but is heavier if the offender is a habitual violator. Cofer v. Crowell, 146 Ga. App. 639, 247 S.E.2d 152 (1978).

Ex Post Facto Laws (Cont'd)

Statute allowing the use of victim impact evidence at the sentencing phase of a trial is not an unconstitutional ex post facto law since it does not affect the manner and degree of punishment nor alter any substantive rights of the defendant. Livingston v. State, 264 Ga. 402, 444 S.E.2d 748 (1994).

Sex offender registration. — A defendant who entered an Alford plea in 2000 to sex offenses as a first offender was properly required to register as a sex offender pursuant to the 2005 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12; that section applies to first offenders convicted before July 1, 2004, and it is not an ex post facto law because if a defendant fails to register, the defendant will be guilty of a felony distinct from those crimes of which the defendant has been previously convicted. Watson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 635, 642 S.E.2d 328 (2007).

Amendment of forcible rape statute meant indictment within statute of limitations. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for forcible rape of the defendant's child during the time the child was 13 through 15 years of age, the trial court correctly concluded that the state had 15 years from the victim's 16th birthday on January 12, 1995, or until January 12, 2010, to prosecute the case noting the extension of the statute of limitation to 15 years as to forcible rape by the 1996 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 17-3-1; therefore, no ex post facto violation occurred since the indictment was filed on January 8, 2008. Duke v. State, 298 Ga. App. 719, 681 S.E.2d 174 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1866, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2010).

Amendment changing retroactive effect of prior amendment. — An amendment which changed the retroactive effect of an earlier amendment to O.C.G.A. § 40-5-67.1, the implied consent warning law, so that it applied only to stops made after the effective date of the earlier amendment, rather than to cases pending on such date, did not violate federal or state ex post facto constitutional provisions. State v. Martin, 266 Ga. 244, 466 S.E.2d 216 (1996).

Imposition of special conditions of parole that were not part of the state's parole regimen at the time of defendant's convictions did not violate the ex post facto clause of the state constitution. Hamm v. Ray, 272 Ga. 659, 531 S.E.2d 91 (2000).

Use of the amended version of O.C.G.A. § 42-8-34.1 when an appellant's probation was revoked due, in part, to the appellant's failure to abide by a special condition of the probation, did not implicate ex post facto concerns inasmuch as the imposition of a probated sentence is within the discretion of the sentencing court, and the appellant did not have a substantial right to receive probation, much less to receive probation that could not be revoked in its entirety upon violation of a special condition of probation. Walker v. Brown, 281 Ga. 468, 639 S.E.2d 470 (2007).

Amendment to firearms possession statute. — Amendment adding the phrase "or within arm's reach" after the phrase "on his person" to a criminal firearms possession statute was a substantive change and therefore subject to the prohibition against ex post facto laws. McIntosh v. State, 185 Ga. App. 612, 365 S.E.2d 454, cert. denied, 185 Ga. App. 910, 365 S.E.2d 454 (1988).

Amendment to drug trafficking statute. — When, at the time of the offense, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(a) defined two methods of committing the crime of trafficking in cocaine, one dealing with pure cocaine and the other with mixtures containing cocaine, by amending the trafficking statute in 1985 to define the crime as "actual possession of 28 grams or more of cocaine," the legislature demonstrated an intent to repeal that portion of the trafficking statute which defined the crime as "actual possession of 28 grams or more ... of any mixture containing cocaine ...," and a defendant convicted thereafter of trafficking in a mixture is being held under an illegal sentence and must be discharged in a habeas corpus proceeding. Bassett v. Lemacks, 258 Ga. 367, 370 S.E.2d 146 (1988).

Manufacturing methamphetamine charge in a complaint did not violate ex post facto protections under U.S. Const., art. I, sec. X and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X since the defendant was not charged under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(f)(1), which was not effective at the time of the defendant's conduct; at the time of the offense, the defendant's alleged conduct was prohibited by former O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(e). Gentry v. State, 281 Ga. App. 315, 635 S.E.2d 782 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 78 (Ga. 2007).

Probation revocation ex-post facto inquiry. — To determine if an ex post facto violation resulted from use of the applied law in a probation revocation matter, the law in effect at the time of the probation revocation must be measured against the law in effect at the time of the initial offense, not the law in effect at the time of the act that resulted in probation revocation. Walker v. Brown, 281 Ga. 468, 639 S.E.2d 470 (2007).

Retroactive Laws

Retroactive laws are prohibited. Anthony v. Penn, 212 Ga. 292, 92 S.E.2d 14 (1956).

Definition of retroactive laws. — An Act of the General Assembly which creates a new obligation and imposes a new duty in respect to transactions or considerations already past is retroactive in character, and in violation of this paragraph. Ross v. Lettice, 134 Ga. 866, 68 S.E. 734 (1910); Wilkins v. Mayor of Savannah, 152 Ga. 638, 111 S.E. 42 (1922); Rider v. Taylor, 166 Ga. App. 474, 304 S.E.2d 557 (1983).

Term "retroactive law" applies exclusively to constitutional challenges to civil statutes. Evans v. State, 252 Ga. 312, 314 S.E.2d 421, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 826, 105 S. Ct. 106, 83 L. Ed. 2d 50 (1984).

That no retroactive law shall be passed is unconditional mandate of the people; it is too positive and too certain in meaning to be misunderstood by anyone, lawyer, judge, or layman. Grimes v. Lindsey, 219 Ga. 779, 135 S.E.2d 860 (1964).

General aspects of retrospective laws. — Upon principle, every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing laws, or creates a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability, in respect to transactions or considerations already past, must be deemed retrospective. Lon-

A statute is retroactive in its legal sense, which creates a new obligation on transactions or considerations already past, or destroys or impairs vested rights. A statute does not operate retrospectively because it relates to antecedent facts, but if it is intended to affect transactions which occurred or rights which accrued before it became operative as such, and which ascribe to them essentially different effects, in view of the law at the time of their occurrence, it is retroactive in character. London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Pittman, 69 Ga. App. 146, 25 S.E.2d 60 (1943); Todd v. Morgan, 215 Ga. 220, 109 S.E.2d 803 (1959); Adams v. Adams, 219 Ga. 633, 135 S.E.2d 428 (1964); Woodruff v. Trust Co., 233 Ga. 135, 210 S.E.2d 321 (1974).

Retrospective statutes are forbidden by first principles of justice, and an Act of the General Assembly which affects detrimentally some substantial right of a party, or imposes a new duty in respect to transactions or considerations already past, or places an additional burden on a pending action, is retroactive and violates the Constitution. Bank of Norman Park v. Colquitt County, 169 Ga. 534, 150 S.E. 841 (1929); London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Pittman, 69 Ga. App. 146, 25 S.E.2d 60 (1943).

General rule regarding operation of laws. — This paragraph expressly prohibited the passage of retroactive laws, and the general rule laid down by former Code 1933, § 102-104 (see now O.C.G.A. § 1-3-5) was that laws prescribe only for the future; it was also a general rule applicable to amending statutes that they are to be construed as intended to have operation on future transactions only, and as having no retroactive purpose not plainly expressed. Layton v. Liberty Loans, 152 Ga. App. 504, 263 S.E.2d 167 (1979), overruled on other grounds, Finance Am. Corp. v. Drake, 154 Ga. App. 811, 270 S.E.2d 449 (1980).

Because a retroactive application of O.C.G.A. § 9-11-68 would have impaired the offeror's rights to recover attorney's fees and costs, the trial court did not err in applying the statute in effect at the time the offeror's offer was made. Kromer v. Bechtel, 289 Ga. App. 306, 656 S.E.2d 910 (2008).

Laws prescribe only for the future, and generally have no retroactive operation, and the settled rule for the construction of statutes is not to give them a retrospective operation, unless the language imperatively requires such construction. Bank of Norman Park v. Colquitt County, 169 Ga. 534, 150 S.E. 841 (1929); London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Pittman, 69 Ga. App. 146, 25 S.E.2d 60 (1943).

Retroactive application of statute only when expressed or by necessary implication. — Unless a statute, either expressly or by necessary implication, shows that the General Assembly intended it to operate retroactively, it will be given only prospective application. Anthony v. Penn, 212 Ga. 292, 92 S.E.2d 14 (1956); Robert & Co. Assocs. v. Pinkerton & Laws Co., 124 Ga. App. 309, 183 S.E.2d 628 (1971); Southern Ry. v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 228 Ga. 23, 183 S.E.2d 912 (1971).

Not all retrospective statutes prohibited by Constitution. — A statute which may be retrospective in its operation is not necessarily prohibited by the Constitution or by any principle of justice. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937).

Retroactive laws which do not injuriously affect any right of citizen may be passed. State Hwy. Dep't v. Bass, 197 Ga. 356, 29 S.E.2d 161 (1944).

Passage of only those retroactive, or rather retrospective, laws which injuriously affect vested rights of citizens is forbidden. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937); Darby v. Cook, 201 Ga. 309, 39 S.E.2d 665 (1946).

The general rule throughout the United States is that a state legislature may constitutionally repeal, alter, or modify state laws enacted under the police power for the protection of the public, without violating any express or implied constitutional prohibition against retroactive statutes. Fortson v. Weeks, 232 Ga. 472, 208 S.E.2d 68 (1974).

The constitutional prohibition against retroactive laws applies only to those laws which affect or impair vested rights. Bituminous Cas. Corp. v. United Servs. Auto. Ass'n, 158 Ga. App. 739, 282 S.E.2d 198 (1981); Cole v. Roberts, 648 F. Supp. 415 (M.D. Ga. 1986).

This paragraph strikes at such retrospective legislation as injuriously affects some substantial right of citizen. Bacon v. Mayor of Savannah, 105 Ga. 62, 31 S.E. 127 (1898); Mills v. Geer, 111 Ga. 275, 36 S.E. 673, 52 L.R.A. 504 (1900).

Some laws have valid retroactive application. — While new laws passed by the legislature are normally only prospective in application, a statute determining who may be proper parties to actions, especially when the actions are of a remedial nature, will be applied to actions accrued or pending at the time of its passage. Motor Fin. Co. v. Harris, 150 Ga. App. 762, 258 S.E.2d 628 (1979).

Retroactive remedial laws are valid. — To apply the constitutional provision against "retroactive laws," as meaning any retroactive law, rather than those which "injuriously affect the right of citizens," would be contrary to the many decisions of this court holding that remedial laws, even though retroactive, are valid, as the reason for holding these laws to be constitutional is based on the fact that there is no vested right of the citizen involved. State Hwy. Dep't v. Bass, 197 Ga. 356, 29 S.E.2d 161 (1944).

Even though a statute may not be effective in a certain situation for retroactively affecting vested rights, the statute is not otherwise invalid per se. Mead Corp. v. Collins, 258 Ga. 239, 367 S.E.2d 790 (1988).

Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X does not apply to remedial or procedural statutes. Ferrero v. Associated Materials, Inc., 923 F.2d 1441 (11th Cir. 1991).

Retroactive application of statute of limitations held constitutional. — The legislature may revive a workers' compensation claim which would have been barred by a previous limitation period by enacting a new statute of limitation without violating Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X. Canton Textile Mills, Inc. v. Lathem, 253 Ga. 102, 317 S.E.2d 189, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 918, 105 S. Ct. 296, 83 L. Ed. 2d 231 (1984).

Administrator's fraudulent conveyance claims against group one were time-barred under O.C.G.A. §§ 18-2-74(a)(1) and 18-2-79(1), even though the claim was not time-barred under the limitations period in effect when the claim accrued, as application of O.C.G.A. § 18-2-79, a procedural law in effect at the time the suit was filed, did not violate the constitutional prohibition against retroactive laws under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X; the administrator also failed to avail the administrator of the one-year statute of limitation effective upon discovery of the alleged fraud. Huggins v. Powell, 315 Ga. App. 599, 726 S.E.2d 730 (2012).

There is no violation of the state's constitutional prohibition against the retroactive application of a procedural statute because one has no vested rights in any course of procedure, and the presumption against a retrospective statutory construction does not apply to statutory enactments which affect only court procedure and practice, even when the alteration from the statutory change results in a disadvantage to a party. Murphy v. Murphy, 295 Ga. 376, 761 S.E.2d 53 (2014).

Legislature cannot revive a right of action which is barred by the statute of limitations in existence prior to the passage of the reviving Act. Such an Act is unconstitutional and void for the reason that it violates this paragraph which provides that no retroactive law shall be passed. Bussey v. Bishop, 169 Ga. 251, 150 S.E. 78 (1929).

State has sovereign right to legislate for general welfare despite effect on existing contracts. — Constitutional restraints upon the impairment of the obligation of contracts do not prevent the state from exercising such powers as are necessary in the exercise of its sovereign right to protect the lives, health, morals, comfort, and general welfare of the public, though contracts previously entered into between individuals may thereby be affected. Moore v. Georgia Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 242 Ga. 182, 249 S.E.2d 549 (1978).

Arbitration Code. — The application of the Georgia Arbitration Code, O.C.G.A. § 9-9-1 et seq., to a dispute arising after its effective date regarding contracts entered into at an earlier date was contemplated in its enactment; the law does not provide a new remedy or repair any obligation under the contract and its application to such a dispute does not violate the constitutional prohibition against retroactive laws. Weyant v. MacIntyre, 211 Ga. App. 281, 438 S.E.2d 640 (1993).

Legislative enactments modifying state laws under police power not prohibited. — A state legislature may constitutionally repeal, alter, or modify state laws enacted under the police power for the protection of the public, without violating any express or implied constitutional provision against retroactive statutes. Keenan v. Hardison, 245 Ga. 599, 266 S.E.2d 205 (1980).

Legislature was not precluded from subsequently modifying express and implied powers given to city authorities to prohibit livestock from running loose by the prohibition against retroactive laws. Pierce v. Powell, 188 Ga. 481, 4 S.E.2d 192 (1939).

Right of state may be impaired by retrospective laws. — There is authority to the effect that the right of the state, as distinguished from the right of a citizen, may be impaired by retrospective laws. State Hwy. Dep't v. Bass, 197 Ga. 356, 29 S.E.2d 161 (1944).

Repealing act will not be given retroactive operation, so as to divest previously acquired rights, or to impair the obligation of a contract lawfully made by virtue of and pending the existence of the law repealed. Bank of Norman Park v. Colquitt County, 169 Ga. 534, 150 S.E. 841 (1929).

Subsequent adoption of pending zoning ordinance was not ex post facto or retroactive law. — When the plaintiff, while proceeding to zone property was pending, filed application to authorize building of a filling station, and an ordinance was later adopted zoning plaintiff's property for residential purposes, such ordinance was not in violation of the federal and state Constitutions as an ex post facto or retroactive law. Gay v. Mayor of Lyons, 212 Ga. 438, 93 S.E.2d 352 (1956).

Statute on covenants restricting land use not intended to operate retroactively. — Former Code 1933, § 29-301 (see now O.C.G.A. § 44-5-60), declaring that “covenants restricting lands to certain uses shall not run for more than 20 years in municipalities which have adopted zoning laws”, properly construed, was not intended to operate retrospectively, and would not have the effect of terminating a covenant that was already in existence as a valid and binding contract between the parties. Dooley v. Savannah Bank & Trust Co., 199 Ga. 353, 34 S.E.2d 522 (1945).

Asbestos claim statute. — Superior and state courts did not err in entering nearly identical orders which held that because O.C.G.A. § 51-14-1 et seq. required asbestos plaintiffs to provide proof that exposure to asbestos was a substantial contributing factor in their medical condition, it unconstitutionally affected an employee’s substantive rights by establishing a new element which did not exist when the original cause of action accrued, and hence, could not be applied retrospectively; moreover, because these requirements and limitations were the heart of the statute, their severance would result in a statute that failed to correspond to the main legislative purpose, or give effect to that purpose. DaimlerChrysler v. Ferrante, 281 Ga. 273, 637 S.E.2d 659 (2006).

Board zoning action changing use classification of property not prohibited. — In the passage of a comprehensive zoning plan and amending it, the board of county commissioners did so under the police power, and the action of the board in changing the use classification of the defendants’ property from an agricultural use to that of apartment use does not deny the plaintiffs the equal protection of law, nor operate retroactively in violation of the federal and state constitutional provisions prohibiting the passage of ex post facto laws. Morgan v. Thomas, 207 Ga. 660, 63 S.E.2d 659 (1951).

Attempt by legislature to make amendment retroactive fails. — A party in an alimony action in which a final judgment was entered prior to the 1977 amendment to Ga. L. 1964, p. 713, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. § 19-6-19) had a vested right in the judgment not being subject to modification because of a change in the income of the wife, since the law in effect at the time of the judgment did not permit a modification on such change. Accordingly, the attempt by the legislature in Ga. L. 1978, p. 2204, § 1 and Ga. L. 1957, p. 94, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 19-6-23 and 19-6-24), to make the 1977 amendment to Ga. L. 1964, p. 713, § 1 retroactive is unconstitutional under this paragraph. McClain v. McClain, 241 Ga. 422, 246 S.E.2d 187 (1978).

Retroactive application of provisions regarding insanity verdict not unconstitutional. — The provisions of former Code 1933, § 27-1503 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-7-131), that, in the event of an acquittal of a person accused of crime by reason of insanity, the jury shall so state in their verdict, and the accused shall thereafter be confined in the state hospital for the insane, would not be unconstitutional, as being retroactive or ex post facto, when applied to the trial of a person charged with a crime committed prior to the date of the passage of the act. Bailey v. State, 210 Ga. 52, 77 S.E.2d 511 (1953).

Applying guilty but mentally ill provision retrospectively. — When crimes were committed before July 1, 1982, and a verdict of guilt is authorized by the evidence, the application of the “guilty but mentally ill” provision, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-131, is procedural, not substantive; it leaves untouched the substantive right to the insanity plea as an absolute defense, and the accused is given an additional advantage when the “guilty but mentally ill” statute is applied. Such a verdict is not an unconstitutional application of an ex post facto law. Kirkland v. State, 166 Ga. App. 478, 304 S.E.2d 561 (1983).

Statute inapplicable to commercial paper executed prior to its enactment. — Ga. L. 1935, p. 381, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. § 44-14-161) relating to confirmation of sales under foreclosure proceedings on real estate, to limit and abate deficiency judgments in suit and foreclosure proceedings on debts secured by mortgages, security deeds, and other lien contracts on real estate, is not applicable to a note and security deed executed prior to its enactment. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. Laird, 181 Ga. 416, 182 S.E. 617 (1935).

Adverse possession of mineral rights constitutional. — The protection against retroactive (or retrospective) laws prohibits the impairment of vested rights. Although owners of mineral interests may be said to have “vested rights,” that property is held subject to the proper exercise of the police power by legislative bodies. O.C.G.A. § 44-5-168 (adverse possession of mineral rights) does not divest the mineral owner of the owner’s rights; it conditions the retention of those rights upon the requirements of either using them or paying taxes upon them for the public benefit. Hayes v. Howell, 251 Ga. 580, 308 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

No retroactive application of change in “guest passenger” rule. — A trial court does not err in refusing to apply O.C.G.A. § 51-1-36, changing the “guest passenger” rule as to the duty owed by an automobile operator to passengers to ordinary care, to a case involving a 1981 accident, since, although a statute is “remedial” and affects only the procedure and practice of the courts and thus may be retroactive in application, the “guest passenger” rule established the duty owed by an automobile owner or operator to a nonpaying guest passenger, and there is nothing in the enactment of O.C.G.A. § 51-1-36 which discloses a legislative intent to apply the terms thereof retroactively. Rider v. Taylor, 166 Ga. App. 474, 304 S.E.2d 557 (1983).

No retroactive application of former bank share tax statute. — Although the former bank share tax statute, Ga. L. 1975, pp. 147-153, was passed in March 1975 and stated that it did “apply to all taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1975,” this could not retroactively impose a tax on property held by a bank before the statute was enacted, in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X. Roberts v. Gunter, 251 Ga. 276, 304 S.E.2d 369 (1983).

Wrongful death act amendment not applied retroactively. — The 1985 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 51-4-2, conferring exclusive standing upon the surviving spouse to bring a wrongful death action, could not be applied retroactively to bar a son’s suit on a claim which arose prior to the effective date of the amendment. Cole v. Roberts, 648 F. Supp. 415 (M.D. Ga. 1986).

Notice and service provisions of the Tort Claims Act, O.C.G.A. § 50-21-20 et seq., were procedural laws that could be applied retroactively to authorize dismissal of a claim against the Department of Transportation when the plaintiff did not serve the Director of the Risk Management Division of the Department of Administrative Services or mail a copy of the complaint to the Attorney General. Henderson v. DOT, 267 Ga. 90, 475 S.E.2d 614 (1996).

Retirement benefits. — Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X precludes the application of an amendatory statute or ordinance in the calculation of the employee’s retirement benefits if the effect of the amendment is to reduce rather than increase the benefits payable. City of Athens v. McGahee, 178 Ga. App. 76, 341 S.E.2d 855 (1986).

Application to interest from child support statute. — The amended version of O.C.G.A. § 7-4-12.1 applies to all civil actions that were filed when the former version of the statute was effective but were still pending on or after January 1, 2007; the amended version of § 7-4-12.1 makes changes related to interest on child support arrearage that are remedial rather than substantive, and therefore retroactive application does not impair vested substantive rights. Gowins v. Gary, 284 Ga. App. 370, 643 S.E.2d 836 (2007), rev’d on other grounds, 283 Ga. 433, 658 S.E.2d 575 (2008).

Application to attorney fee statute. — O.C.G.A. § 9-11-68(b)(1) does not merely prescribe the methods of enforcing rights and obligations, but rather affects the rights of parties by imposing an additional duty and obligation to pay an opposing party's attorney fees when a final judgment does not meet a certain amount or is one of no liability; by creating this new obligation, the statute operates as a substantive law, which is unconstitutional under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X, given its retroactive effect to pending cases. Fowler Props. v. Dowland, 282 Ga. 76, 646 S.E.2d 197 (2007).

Authorization for direct action against insurer of common carrier. — Prohibition in Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X against retroactive laws applied only to those laws which affected substantive rights under prior law that had vested at the time the subsequent law took effect; the amendments to former O.C.G.A. § 46-7-12(c), effective July 1, 2000, providing for a direct action against the insurer of a common carrier, did not affect substantive rights and were given retroactive effect. Devore v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 257 Ga. App. 7, 570 S.E.2d 87 (2002).

No retroactive application of amendment to voluntary dismissal law. — When plaintiff's first complaint was filed before July 1, 2003, the effective date of the amendment to O.C.G.A. § 9-11-41(a)(3), and the second and third complaints were filed after July 1, 2003, the 2003 amendment did not apply retroactively to make the voluntary dismissal of the second complaint act an adjudication on the merits. Davis v. Lugenbeel, 283 Ga. App. 642, 642 S.E.2d 337 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 518 (Ga. 2007).

Provision permitting contracts in partial restraint of trade. — Retroactive application of O.C.G.A. § 13-8-2.1, permitting contracts in partial restraint of trade, did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X. Ferrero v. Associated Materials, Inc., 923 F.2d 1441 (11th Cir. 1991).

Retroactive extinguishment of right to trial by jury unconstitutional. — Retroactive application of the 1977 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 19-7-40, which extinguished the right to a jury trial in a paternity suit, was unconstitutional. Hargis v. Department of Human Resources, 272 Ga. 617, 533 S.E.2d 712 (2000).

No retroactive application of tolling statute by injured passenger. — As a vehicle passenger's claim was only two months old when the tolling provisions of O.C.G.A. § 9-3-99 became effective, and the passenger had not yet filed suit, § 9-3-99 was applicable to the action and there was no merit to a claim that it was retroactively applied in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X. Beneke v. Parker, 293 Ga. App. 186, 667 S.E.2d 97 (2008), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 285 Ga. 733, 684 S.E.2d 243 (2009).

Laws Impairing Obligation of Contracts

This paragraph forbids passage of laws which impair vested rights. — The test is whether there was a vested right. If so, no subsequent legislative act could impair it; but if not, there is no bar to a change or abolition of it at any time before it becomes fixed by a judgment. Spengler v. Employers Com. Union Ins. Co., 131 Ga. App. 443, 206 S.E.2d 693 (1974); Aetna Ins. Co. v. Windsor, 133 Ga. App. 159, 210 S.E.2d 373 (1974); Goolsby v. Regents of Univ. Sys., 141 Ga. App. 605, 234 S.E.2d 165 (1977).

Decision to award a limited liability company fee simple title in real property did not violate the contract impairment clauses in U.S. Const., art. I, sec. X and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X as a corporation's rights to the property pursuant to a 1984 tax deed had not vested prior to the effective date of a 1989 amendment of O.C.G.A. § 48-4-48, which operated retrospectively. BX Corp. v. Hickory Hill 1185, LLC, 285 Ga. 5, 673 S.E.2d 205 (2009).

Statutes which impair contracts are void. — The remedy subsisting in a state when and where a contract is made and is to be performed is a part of its obligation, and any subsequent law of the state which so affects that remedy as substantially to impair and lessen the value of the contract is forbidden by the Constitution, and is, therefore, void. Atlantic Loan Co. v. Peterson, 181 Ga. 266, 182 S.E. 15 (1935).

Even remedial statute may impair obligation of contract, and in such event the act is unconstitutional. Atlantic Loan Co. v. Peterson, 181 Ga. 266, 182 S.E. 15 (1935).

Specific remedies constitute part of contract. — A specific remedy, provided by the contract itself, cannot be changed by legislation, because it constitutes a part of the contract. Atlantic Loan Co. v. Peterson, 181 Ga. 266, 182 S.E. 15 (1935).

Permissible to modify remedies existing by law but not remedies expressly part of contract. — The remedies existing by law at the time of the execution of a contract may be modified by the legislature without impairing the obligation, provided an efficient remedy is left for its enforcement; however, the rule is different as to a remedy which the parties have expressly made a part of the contract, because in such case the remedy is integrated as a part of the obligation, and a subsequent statute which affects the remedy impairs the obligation and is unconstitutional. Atlantic Loan Co. v. Peterson, 181 Ga. 266, 182 S.E.2d 15 (1935).

This paragraph does not prohibit passage of laws curing defects in remedy, or confirming rights already existing, or adding to the means of securing and enforcing those rights. Pritchard v. Savannah St. & Rural Resort R.R., 87 Ga. 294, 13 S.E. 493, 14 L.R.A. 721 (1891); Mills v. Geer, 111 Ga. 275, 36 S.E. 673, 52 L.R.A. 504 (1900).

Legislation lessening efficacy of contract enforcement impairs obligation. — The obligation of a contract, in the constitutional sense, is the means provided by law by which it can be enforced, by which the parties can be obliged to perform it, and whatever legislation lessens the efficacy of these means impairs the obligation. Atlantic Loan Co. v. Peterson, 181 Ga. 266, 182 S.E. 15 (1935).

Laws are construed in future so as not to impair obligation of contracts. Jones v. Oemler, 110 Ga. 202, 35 S.E. 375 (1900); Dennington v. Mayor of Roberta, 130 Ga. 494, 61 S.E. 20 (1908); Chason v. O'Neal, 158 Ga. 725, 124 S.E. 519 (1924).

Obligation of contract is not impaired by later taxing statute, which taxes the proceeds of the contract, if it does not prevent receipt of the proceeds under the contract. Airways Parking Co. v. City of Atlanta, 229 Ga. 70, 189 S.E.2d 405 (1972).

Constitution precludes application of amendatory statute or ordinance in calculation of employee's retirement benefits if the effect of the amendment is to reduce rather than increase the benefits payable. Withers v. Register, 246 Ga. 158, 269 S.E.2d 431 (1980).

This paragraph does not forbid the equitable modification of contract. Selby v. Gilmer, 240 Ga. 241, 240 S.E.2d 80 (1977).

Impairment clause does not preclude reformation of contracts. Withers v. Register, 246 Ga. 158, 269 S.E.2d 431 (1980).

Reformation of written agreement by court not impairment of contract. — Parties to a contract cannot claim unconstitutional impairment of their contractual rights simply because a court of equity has reformed their written agreement to speak the true intentions of the parties. Withers v. Register, 246 Ga. 158, 269 S.E.2d 431 (1980).

Constitutional Act of legislature is equivalent to contract, and when performed, is a contract executed; and whatever rights are thereby created, a subsequent legislature cannot impair. Davis v. Hunt, 218 Ga. 630, 129 S.E.2d 778 (1963); Spengler v. Employers Com. Union Ins. Co., 131 Ga. App. 443, 206 S.E.2d 693 (1974).

This constitutional inhibition on any state law impairing obligation of contracts is not limitation on power of eminent domain. — The obligation of a contract is not impaired when it is appropriated to a public use and compensation made therefor. Such an exertion of power is a taking, and not an impairment of its obligation. City of Atlanta v. Airways Parking Co., 225 Ga. 173, 167 S.E.2d 145 (1969).

The condemnation of a portion of the rights of a condemnee under its contract with a city does not violate the provisions of this paragraph prohibiting the passage of a law impairing the obligation of contracts. City of Atlanta v. Airways Parking Co., 225 Ga. 173, 167 S.E.2d 145 (1969).

Laws Impairing Obligation of Contracts (Cont'd)

No impairment of obligation when changes in salary expressly linked to appropriations. — If a contractual salary obligation itself is expressly conditioned upon changes in state appropriations, then such changes requiring readjustments of salaries do not impair the obligations of contracts. Austin v. Benefield, 140 Ga. App. 96, 230 S.E.2d 16 (1976).

Amendment to statute given no retroactive effect. — While the Act of the General Assembly, Ga. L. 1949, p. 455, amending former Code 1933, § 3-108 (see now O.C.G.A. § 9-2-20), was apparently enacted to permit a beneficiary under a contract between other parties to recover, it could be given no retroactive effect, as to do so would violate U.S. Const., art. I, sec. X, cl. 1 and this paragraph, as to impairing the obligations of contracts, by creating a right for one to recover under an existing contract when one previously had no such right and subjecting a party to an existing contract to liability to a third person who previously had no right under the contract. Guest v. Stone, 206 Ga. 239, 56 S.E.2d 247 (1949).

Statute subsequent to execution of contract inapplicable thereto. — A contract made and indebtedness incurred by the County Superintendent of Schools in 1918, on behalf of the county board of education, for school supplies and furnishings was prior to the enactment of former Code 1933, § 32-928 (see now O.C.G.A. § 20-2-504), and therefore is not void under such provisions, the statute not being construed as being applicable to contracts made before its passage. Board of Educ. v. Southern Mich. Nat'l Bank, 184 Ga. 641, 192 S.E. 382 (1937).

No prohibition against ordinance limiting power to make certain contracts. — Ordinance prohibiting the owning, maintaining, and operating of pinball machines and the like was not violative of the provisions of the federal and state Constitutions inhibiting the passage of laws impairing the obligation of contracts, in that it impaired the contractual powers of petitioner, and imposed a limitation upon the petitioner's power to make contracts. Woodward v. City of Lithonia, 191 Ga. 234, 11 S.E.2d 476 (1940).

Impairment of contracts with authority's bond owners proscribed by statute and Constitution. — Ga. L. 1975, p. 107, § 30 (see now O.C.G.A. § 46-3-146), limiting the power of the state to adversely affect the interests of the owners of the municipal electric authority's bonds and notes, does not constitute an unconstitutional delegation of legislative powers in violation of Ga. Const. 1976, Art. III, Sec. I, Para. I (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. III, Sec. I, Para. I), because it does not limit the right of the General Assembly to legislate except to prevent legislation which will impair the contracts with the bond owners, and this is consistent with the Constitution. Thompson v. Municipal Elec. Auth., 238 Ga. 19, 231 S.E.2d 720 (1976).

Statutory provisions impairing existing contractual obligations are unconstitutional. — Georgia Laws 1979, pp. 1625, 1627 (formerly Code 1933, § 84-6610(a-c)) were declared unconstitutional, null, and void because each and all of those sections improperly and unlawfully impaired existing contractual obligations between manufacturers and dealers in violation of this paragraph. Georgia Franchise Practices Comm'n v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 244 Ga. 800, 262 S.E.2d 106 (1979).

Imposition of conditions not in existence at time of contract execution impaired obligation. — Ga. L. 1953, Nov.-Dec. Sess., p. 313, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. § 44-14-80), providing that title to real property conveyed to secure debt should revert to the grantor when the debt became 20 years past due, unless the debt was extended or renewed and such renewal recorded, or an affidavit setting out the facts of the renewal was recorded with the conveyance, imposed conditions upon grantee not in existence at the time of the execution of the contract, divested the grantee of a vested right to the property, and impaired the obligation of the grantee's contract and as applied to such deed, which was executed prior to the passage and effective date of the Act, is unconstitutional, because it is in violation of U.S.

Const., art. I, sec. X, cl. 1 and of this paragraph, which prohibit this state from passing any retroactive law or any law impairing the obligations of contracts. Todd v. Morgan, 215 Ga. 220, 109 S.E.2d 803 (1959).

No impairment to require performance by one county of obligations of merged county. — The legislature can impose upon the county into which another county is merged the burden of performing the contracts and paying the debts of the merged county; an Act so providing for the performance of the contracts and payment of the debts of the merged county does not in any way impair the obligation of the contracts of the merged county in the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution of this state and the Constitution of the United States. Hines v. Etheridge, 173 Ga. 870, 162 S.E. 113 (1931).

This paragraph was not violated by merger of City of Atlanta and Town of Kirkwood. Davidson v. Town of Kirkwood, 152 Ga. 357, 110 S.E. 154 (1921).

Municipal ordinance requiring deposits by consumers of light and water, was not invalid under this paragraph as impairing the obligation of contract. Young v. City of Moultrie, 163 Ga. 829, 137 S.E. 257 (1927).

Statute invalid when it undertook to affect existing contractual obligations. — Former Code 1933, § 30-209 (see now O.C.G.A. § 19-6-5), insofar as it undertook to affect the obligations of a valid contract in existence at the time of its passage so as to provide for the duration of alimony was null and void as violative of this paragraph and U.S. Const., Art. I, Sec. X, Cl. 1. Candler v. Wilkerson, 223 Ga. 520, 156 S.E.2d 358 (1967).

Provisions for revisions in alimony and support judgments not unconstitutional. — Ga. L. 1955, p. 630, §§ 1-4 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 19-6-18 and 19-6-19), which conferred jurisdiction and power on the courts of this state to revise judgments fixing permanent alimony or support for minor children, do not offend those constitutional provisions of this state and of the United States which provide that no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall be enacted, and this is true even though the amount of alimony or support so awarded by the judgment, as well as the time during which it was to be paid, was agreed to in writing by the parties. Nelson v. Roberts, 216 Ga. 741, 119 S.E.2d 545 (1961).

Modification of a judgment incorporating a contract between husband and wife governing property and alimony rights between them pursuant to Ga. L. 1955, p. 630, §§ 1-4 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 19-6-18 and 19-6-19) is not an unconstitutional impairment of the obligation of contracts in violation of this paragraph. This is so because, technically, what is being modified is a judgment of the court and not a contract. Kitfield v. Kitfield, 237 Ga. 184, 227 S.E.2d 9 (1976).

Adverse possession of mineral rights constitutional. — Application of O.C.G.A. § 44-5-168 (adverse possession of mineral rights) does not violate the state constitutional prohibition against impairment of the obligation of contracts. The preservation of the mineral owner's claim under § 44-5-168 depends only upon the owner's use of the minerals or upon returning them for taxes, which is a minimal burden that does not impair contractual obligations. Hayes v. Howell, 251 Ga. 580, 308 S.E.2d 170 (1983).

Municipal employee cannot be barred from recovering pay for services performed. — To bar a municipal employee from recovering pay for services the employee performed by allowing the municipality to claim statutory immunity would violate the prohibition against the impairment of a contract which is found in both the state and federal Constitutions. Smith v. City of Atlanta, 167 Ga. App. 458, 306 S.E.2d 720 (1983).

Retirement benefits as part of employment contract. — When a statute or ordinance establishes a retirement plan for government employees, and the employee contributes toward the benefits the employee is to receive and performs services while the ordinance or statute is in effect, the ordinance or statute becomes part of the contract of employment and is a part of the compensation for the services rendered so that an attempt to amend the statute or ordinance to reduce or eliminate the retirement benefits the employee is to receive violates the impairment clause of the state constitution. Swann v. Board of Trustees, 257 Ga. 450, 360 S.E.2d 395 (1987).

Reduction in non-vested future retirement benefits not impairment of obligation of contract. — Since there is no vested right to benefits one was never entitled to receive, the reduction in future benefits to retiree did not violate the retiree's constitutional right to protection against impairment of contract. Tate v. Teachers' Retirement Sys., 257 Ga. 365, 359 S.E.2d 649 (1987).

County's rescission of county's pension plan and termination of a member's right to benefits under the plan violated the constitutional guarantee against impairment of contracts and was void. Malcom v. Newton County, 244 Ga. App. 464, 535 S.E.2d 824 (2000).

City ordinance increasing pension plan contribution rate. — Trial court properly granted the city defendants summary judgment on the city employees' claims of breach of contract and unconstitutional impairment of contract regarding an ordinance increasing their pension plan contribution rate because the Georgia General Assembly expressly contemplated that a municipal corporation's provision for employee retirement or pension benefits would be subject to being supplemented by local law. Borders v. City of Atlanta, 298 Ga. 188, 779 S.E.2d 279 (2015).

Law regulating insurance. — Provision of O.C.G.A. § 33-34-3 that motor vehicle insurance policies issued by insurers authorized to transact business in the state are deemed to provide the minimum coverage required by Georgia law when the insured is involved in an accident in Georgia does not retroactively impair obligations under the contract in violation of the Georgia Constitution. Bankers Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 267 Ga. 134, 475 S.E.2d 619 (1996).

Vested Rights

Constitutional prohibition against retroactive laws applies only to those laws which affect or impair vested rights. Armistead v. Cherokee County Sch. Dist., 144 Ga. App. 178, 241 S.E.2d 19 (1977).

Substantive right, which has vested, cannot be changed or impaired by subsequent statute. Spengler v. Employers Com. Union Ins. Co., 131 Ga. App. 443, 206 S.E.2d 693 (1974).

Vested ground of defense is protected from being destroyed by Act of legislature. Guest v. Stone, 206 Ga. 239, 56 S.E.2d 247 (1949).

Prohibition against interference with vested rights and vested defenses. — The same rule which forbids interference with vested rights prevents the disturbance of vested defenses; there is no distinction between a vested right of action and a vested right of defense. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937).

Requiring the Unified Government of Athens-Clarke County retirees to elect the health maintenance organization option if they wished to receive cost-free coverage did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. X, since they never had a vested right to maintain in retirement the precise health-care delivery system by which they received their coverage while employed; the precise source of the retirees' cost-free medical coverage was not guaranteed, instead, they were only entitled to cost-free coverage to the same extent that their medical expenses were covered at the time of their retirement, and cost-free coverage was provided by the Unified Government only under the health maintenance organization option. Unified Gov't of Athens-Clarke County v. McCrary, 280 Ga. 901, 635 S.E.2d 150 (2006).

Rights of the decedent's surviving spouse were already vested when the Revised Georgia Trust Code of 2010 (Revised Code), O.C.G.A. § 53-12-1 et seq., was enacted because under the terms of the amended trust agreement, the surviving spouse's rights to the trust assets took effect upon the decedent's death before the Revised Code took effect. Accordingly, any new obligation imposed by the Revised Code that would have impaired the surviving spouse's right to possession could not be applied retroactively. Rose v. Waldrup, 316 Ga. App. 812, 730 S.E.2d 529 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C1888, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 981 (Ga. 2012).

No protection for technical defenses involving no substantial equities. — A vested ground of defense is as fully protected from being cut off or destroyed by an Act of the legislature as is a vested cause of action; the legislature may, however, deprive a party of technical defenses involving no substantial equities. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937).

Party has no vested right in defense based upon mere informality not affecting the party's substantial equities. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937); Walker v. State, 132 Ga. App. 274, 208 S.E.2d 5 (1974).

No one has a vested right to a defense based on mere informalities especially when such informalities consist of matters which originally could have been dispensed with by the legislature; but the legislature has no power, by a subsequent curative statute, to remedy a jurisdictional defect, or one which obviously goes to the substance of a vested right. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937).

There is no such thing as a vested right to do wrong. Bullard v. Holman, 184 Ga. 788, 193 S.E. 586 (1937); Walker v. State, 132 Ga. App. 274, 208 S.E.2d 5 (1974).

Accused has no vested right in procedural matters. Walker v. State, 132 Ga. App. 274, 208 S.E.2d 5 (1974).

No one has vested right in statutory privileges and exemptions, and until final judgment on a pending action, the repeal of the statute, which gives the right of action, or upon which the suit is predicated, destroys it. Winston v. State, 186 Ga. 573, 198 S.E. 667 (1938), commented on in 1 Ga. B.J. 46 (1939).

Vested rights under contract come under protection of this paragraph. Bender v. Anglin, 207 Ga. 108, 60 S.E.2d 756, cert. denied, 340 U.S. 878, 71 S. Ct. 125, 95 L. Ed. 638 (1950).

Statute which changes or affects remedy only and does not destroy or impair vested rights is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract, although it may be retroactive and in changing or modifying the remedy, the rights of the parties may be incidentally affected. Morris v. Interstate Bond Co., 180 Ga. 689, 180 S.E. 819 (1935).

No impairment of obligation when contract provides for modification. — County board of education was not precluded from terminating the employer matching portion of a retirement savings plan since the plan itself provided that its terms could be modified or changed in the future and participating employees never acquired a property right in unchanged benefits. Murray County Sch. Dist. v. Adams, 218 Ga. App. 220, 461 S.E.2d 228 (1995).

Vesting of rights in companies. — Void county sign ordinance could not be used as the basis for the denial of sign companies' applications for permits to construct billboards, and the invalidity of the ordinance resulted in there being no valid restriction on the construction of billboards in the county. Accordingly, the sign companies obtained vested rights in the issuance of the permits which the companies sought and the subsequent creation of new cities within unincorporated county land and the annexation of property into one city did not divest the sign companies of the companies' vested rights. Fulton County v. Action Outdoor Adver., JV, LLC, 289 Ga. 347, 711 S.E.2d 682 (2011).

Lien once acquired under existing law is regarded as vested property right which may not be impaired by subsequent legislation. Morris v. Interstate Bond Co., 180 Ga. 689, 180 S.E. 819 (1935).

Any subrogation rights are vested and therefore cannot be abrogated by later statute. Blaylock v. Georgia Mut. Ins. Co., 239 Ga. 462, 238 S.E.2d 105 (1977).

A city cannot legally divest or restrict vested right by enactment of regulations, even if the enactment is valid and the regulations reasonable and constitutional. Craig v. City of Lilburn, 226 Ga. 679, 177 S.E.2d 75 (1970).

Office of incumbent official not vested. — An incumbent in a public office has no vested right as will entitle the incumbent to complain of legislation affecting the office upon the ground that it is retrospective when no other right under the Constitution is violated. Copland v.

Wohlwender, 197 Ga. 782, 30 S.E.2d 462 (1944).

An Act of the General Assembly revoking a city charter, thus abolishing municipal offices, is not a law in impairment of contract since the right of an incumbent to an office is not vested, but may be revoked if the law the incumbent holds office under is capable of being repealed. City of Mt. View v. Clayton County, 242 Ga. 163, 249 S.E.2d 541 (1978), appeal dismissed, 440 U.S. 902, 99 S. Ct. 1205, 59 L. Ed. 2d 450 (1979).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Georgia Detainer Act, Ga. L. 1968, p. 1110, § 1 (see now O.C.G.A. Art. 1, Ch. 6, T. 42), is not an ex post facto or retroactive law. 1969 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 69-95.

Validated bonds created status analogous to contractual relation which cannot be destroyed or impaired by subsequent statute. 1977 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U77-10.

Prohibiting involuntary separation benefits to state employees. — An amendment to the Georgia Constitution prohibiting the grant of involuntary separation retirement benefits to state employees who are by law currently entitled to coverage under the involuntary separation benefits section of the Employees' Retirement System Act would, in all probability, be unconstitutional under the federal Impairment Clause contained in U.S. Const., art. I, sec. X. 1983 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U83-72.

Forfeiture of public retirement system benefits. — General Assembly has the authority to enact a statute which proposes the forfeiture of earned retirement benefits of future public employees due to the conviction of a crime; however, an amendment to the Georgia Constitution proposing such a forfeiture by employees who are currently by law vested with rights under the public retirement system would, in all probability, be unconstitutional under the federal Impairment Clause contained in U.S. Const., art. I, sec. X. 1985 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U85-3.

Paragraph XI. Right to trial by jury; number of jurors; selection and compensation of jurors.

(a) The right to trial by jury shall remain inviolate, except that the court shall render judgment without the verdict of a jury in all civil cases where no issuable defense is filed and where a jury is not demanded in writing by either party. In criminal cases, the defendant shall have a public and speedy trial by an impartial jury; and the jury shall be the judges of the law and the facts.

(b) A trial jury shall consist of 12 persons; but the General Assembly may prescribe any number, not less than six, to constitute a trial jury in courts of limited jurisdiction and in superior courts in misdemeanor cases.

(c) The General Assembly shall provide by law for the selection and compensation of persons to serve as grand jurors and trial jurors.

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — Some of the cases noted under this paragraph were decided under language appearing in the 1976 Constitution (Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. VIII, XI; Art. VI, Sec. IV, Para. VII; Art. VI, Sec. XV, Paras. I, II) and antecedent provisions, all of which dealt with aspects of the right to jury trial now contained in this paragraph.

Altering order in which persons were selected from jury venire was not shown to have failed to produce an array of impartial, properly drawn prospective jurors from which to pick a jury. Franks v. State, 278 Ga. 246, 599 S.E.2d 134 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1058, 125 S. Ct. 870, 160 L. Ed. 2d 784 (2005).

Constitutionality. — See Sanders v. State, 234 Ga. 586, 216 S.E.2d 838 (1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 931, 96 S. Ct. 1145, 47 L. Ed. 2d 340 (1976).

Right to jury trial not violated in plea bargain. — Defendant's right to a jury trial was not violated by illegal plea bargaining through a threatened longer sentence if the defendant proceeded to trial. Logan v. State, 309 Ga. App. 95, 709 S.E.2d 302, cert. denied, No. S11C1101, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 579; cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 823, 181 L. Ed. 2d 533 (2011).

Prelitigation contractual waiver of the right to trial by jury is not enforceable in cases tried under the laws of Georgia. Bank S. v. Howard, 264 Ga. 339, 444 S.E.2d 799 (1994).

Jury's importance. — The jury is as important a branch of the judicial department as the judge. Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930).

Juror not incompetent on account of having been impaneled in case. — A juror is not incompetent to testify as a witness solely on account of having been impaneled and sworn in the case, if the juror is otherwise competent. Tumlin v. State, 88 Ga. App. 713, 77 S.E.2d 555 (1953).

Cited in McElroy v. McElroy, 252 Ga. 553, 314 S.E.2d 893 (1984); Andrews v. State, 175 Ga. App. 22, 332 S.E.2d 299 (1985); Tutton v. State, 179 Ga. App. 462, 346 S.E.2d 898 (1986); Hughes v. State, 257 Ga. 200, 357 S.E.2d 80 (1987); Freeman v. State, 194 Ga. App. 905, 392 S.E.2d 330 (1990); Quiller v. Bowman, 262 Ga. 769, 425 S.E.2d 641 (1993); Howard v. Bank S., 209 Ga. App. 407, 433 S.E.2d 625 (1993); Burg v. State, 297 Ga. App. 118, 676 S.E.2d 465 (2009).

Right to Trial by Jury

1. In General

Origin of phrase "shall remain inviolate". — The statement in this paragraph that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate refers to the right as it existed at common law at the time of the incorporation of this paragraph into the state Constitution, and consequently the expression means that the right of trial, as it existed in England, should be inviolate or unaltered. Wright v. Davis, 184 Ga. 846, 193 S.E. 757 (1937).

A jury trial in Georgia must be governed by the same rules as prevailed in England at the time the Constitution was adopted if there is an absence of any provision in organic law affecting the right of jury trial. Wright v. Davis, 184 Ga. 846, 193 S.E. 757 (1937).

First part of this paragraph is derived from the declarations in the Magna Carta and is subject to the limitations of the common law. Tift v. Griffin, 5 Ga. 185 (1848); Stewart Dunholter & Co. v. Sholl, 99 Ga. 534, 26 S.E. 757 (1896); De Lamar v. Dollar, 128 Ga. 57, 57 S.E. 85 (1907); Pollard v. State, 148 Ga. 447, 96 S.E. 997 (1918).

Right to jury trial cannot be impaired by legislature. — The right to a jury trial as guaranteed by the state Constitution, i.e., the right shall remain inviolate, are those rights heretofore enjoyed at common law in civil and criminal cases, which cannot be impaired by the legislature. Porter v. Watkins, 217 Ga. 73, 121 S.E.2d 120 (1961).

In a case at common law, a party has a constitutional right to have all questions of fact passed upon by a jury, and a legislative denial of that right is unconstitutional. Williams v. Overstreet, 230 Ga. 112, 195 S.E.2d 906 (1973).

Preservation of rights to jury trial which existed when Constitution adopted. — Constitutional right to trial by jury shall not be taken away in cases where it existed when Constitution was adopted in 1798. Cawthon v. Douglas County, 248 Ga. 760, 286 S.E.2d 30 (1982).

This provision has been uniformly construed as not conferring a right to trial by jury in all classes of cases, but merely as guaranteeing the continuance of the right unchanged as it existed either at common law or by statute at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. Beasley v. Burt, 201 Ga. 144, 39 S.E.2d 51 (1946).

The provision in the Constitution that “trial by jury, as heretofore used, shall remain inviolate” means that it shall not be taken away in cases where it existed when that instrument was adopted in 1798; and not that there must be a jury in all cases. Williams v. Overstreet, 230 Ga. 112, 195 S.E.2d 906 (1973).

All cases triable without a jury prior to the Constitution may still be so tried. — It will be conceded that it is competent for the legislature to provide for a trial without a jury in cases similar to those in which such a trial was in use prior to the adoption of the Constitution. Beasley v. Burt, 201 Ga. 144, 39 S.E.2d 51 (1946).

Demand. — Parties may be required to enter a demand for a jury trial. Sutton v.

Gunn, 86 Ga. 652, 12 S.E. 979 (1891) See also Sanders v. Alexander, 23 Ga. App. 563, 99 S.E. 53 (1919).

This paragraph is complied with if a right to jury trial is had before final liability. Hobbs v. Dougherty County, 98 Ga. 574, 25 S.E. 579 (1896); De Lamar v. Dollar, 128 Ga. 57, 57 S.E. 85 (1907).

This paragraph is complied with if a right to jury trial is obtainable on appeal. Davis v. Harper, 54 Ga. 180 (1875); De Lamar v. Dollar, 128 Ga. 57, 57 S.E. 85 (1907).

Retroactive extinguishment of right to trial by jury unconstitutional. — Retroactive application of the 1977 amendment to O.C.G.A. § 19-7-40, which extinguished the right to a jury trial in a paternity suit, was unconstitutional. Hargis v. Department of Human Resources, 272 Ga. 617, 533 S.E.2d 712 (2000).

This paragraph is not violated by a law requiring payment of costs and giving of bond as a condition precedent to an appeal. Flint River Steamboat Co. v. Foster, 5 Ga. 194, 48 Am. Dec. 248 (1848).

Determination of damages. — Paragraph (e)(2) of O.C.G.A. § 51-12-5.1, requiring that 75 percent of punitive damages awarded in a product liability action be paid into the state treasury, does not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI. State v. Moseley, 263 Ga. 680, 436 S.E.2d 632 (1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1107, 114 S. Ct. 2101, 128 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1994).

Private voir dire on sensitive issues. — Defendant’s right to a public trial was not violated by the trial court’s conduct of certain portions of voir dire in a private jury room rather than in open court because the defendant’s counsel agreed that jurors should have a private opportunity to answer questions of a sensitive nature, including jurors’ attitudes toward homosexuality and jurors’ prior arrests, and the right to a public trial gave way to the right for a fair trial. State v. Abernathy, 289 Ga. 603, 715 S.E.2d 48 (2011).

2. Civil Cases

Common-law right continued. — In civil actions, the right of a jury trial exists only when the right existed prior to the first Georgia Constitution, and the Constitution guarantees the continuance of this right unchanged as it existed at common law. Strange v. Strange, 222 Ga. 44, 148 S.E.2d 494 (1966).

Party to civil action is entitled to trial by jury when issuable defense is filed. Whitaker & Rambo Interior Designs, Inc. v. Prudential Property Cas. Ins. Co., 510 F. Supp. 97 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

When complaint fails to state claim, dismissal of claim is not error even though complainant has made demand for jury trial, and does not contravene the provisions of Ga. L. 1966, p. 609, §§ 38 and 40 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 9-11-38 and 9-11-40), and this paragraph. Bush v. Morris, 123 Ga. App. 497, 181 S.E.2d 503 (1971).

There is no constitutional right to jury trial in equity cases even when questions of fraud are involved. Williams v. Overstreet, 230 Ga. 112, 195 S.E.2d 906 (1973); Burns v. Ledbetter, Inc. v. Primark Marking Co., 244 Ga. 341, 260 S.E.2d 58 (1979); Cawthon v. Douglas County, 248 Ga. 760, 286 S.E.2d 30 (1982).

Because in equity cases the right of trial by jury is not constitutional, but statutory, and a legislative restriction thereof would be constitutional. Mahan v. Cavender, 77 Ga. 118 (1886); Bemis v. Armour Packing Co., 105 Ga. 293, 31 S.E. 173 (1898); Williams v. Overstreet, 230 Ga. 112, 195 S.E.2d 906 (1973).

A case begun as an action to enforce an equitable lien on funds held by a defendant and concluded as an interpleader action after the funds were paid into the registry of the court by the stockholder is a case in equity in which there is no right to trial by jury. Williams v. Overstreet, 230 Ga. 112, 195 S.E.2d 906 (1973).

Jury trial in chancery not constitutional right. — The interposition of juries in trial of chancery cases is purely a matter of legislative regulation. It is not a constitutional right or one guaranteed by Magna Charta. Williams v. Overstreet, 230 Ga. 112, 195 S.E.2d 906 (1973).

Right to trial by jury in a contempt proceeding was not conferred by this provision of the Constitution. Hortman v. Georgia Bd. of Dental Exmrs., 214 Ga. 560, 105 S.E.2d 732 (1958).

Right to trial by jury in a contempt proceeding for violation of mandamus not conferred. — In a proceeding for contempt against the defendant, growing out of the defendant's alleged violation of a mandamus absolute, the defendant is not entitled to a trial by a jury when an issue of fact is raised. Gaston v. Shunk Plow Co., 161 Ga. 287, 130 S.E. 580 (1925).

Right to jury trial in contempt proceeding for violation of injunction not conferred. — Respondent was not entitled to trial by jury in a contempt proceeding on the issue of whether or not the respondent had violated an injunctive order prohibiting the respondent from practicing dentistry without a license, as such case did not fall within the class of proceedings for contempt provided for in former Code 1933, § 24-105 (see now O.C.G.A. § 15-1-4) wherein a jury trial was required. Hortman v. Georgia Bd. of Dental Exmrs., 214 Ga. 560, 105 S.E.2d 732 (1958).

When the order simply enjoined the defendants from operating the plant "in a manner so as to create foul and offensive odors that can be smelled in petitioners' homes," the jury was not called upon to interpret the meaning of the order, but rather to determine the factual question of whether the plant was still emitting offensive odors. The submission of such question to the jury has long been considered as being within the discretion of the trial court. Bennett v. Bagwell & Stewart, Inc., 216 Ga. 290, 116 S.E.2d 288 (1960).

Right to jury trial not conferred when receiver held in contempt. Tindall v. Westcott, 113 Ga. 1114, 39 S.E. 450, 55 L.R.A. 225 (1901).

Defendants in contempt case do not have constitutional right to jury trial even on pure questions of fact. Bennett v. Bagwell & Stewart, Inc., 216 Ga. 290, 116 S.E.2d 288 (1960).

Judge possesses discretion to invoke jury's aid when advisable. — The presiding judge, if the judge deems it proper, may determine, without aid of a jury, all questions of fact arising upon the auditor's report; but inasmuch as the case upon which the contempt proceedings were founded is one in which the court is exercising chancery powers, there is no reason why the judge may not, if such course seems advisable to the judge, invoke the aid of a jury in arriving at a proper conclusion upon the questions of fact presented. It is a matter of discretion as to what method the judge will adopt to arrive at the actual truth to be ascertained. Bennett v. Bagwell & Stewart, Inc., 216 Ga. 290, 116 S.E.2d 288 (1960).

Jury trial right in most cases. — The Constitution of Georgia, as well as the Civil Practice Act, O.C.G.A. Ch. 11, T. 9, guarantee the right of a jury trial to civil litigants in most cases. Raintree Farms, Inc. v. Stripping Ctr., Ltd., 166 Ga. App. 848, 305 S.E.2d 660 (1983).

There is no constitutional right to a jury trial in eminent domain cases. DOT v. Gibson, 251 Ga. 66, 303 S.E.2d 19 (1983).

There is no constitutional right to a jury trial in garnishment proceedings. Worsham Bros. Co. v. FDIC, 167 Ga. App. 163, 305 S.E.2d 816 (1983).

Georgia garnishment law is a special statutory proceeding enacted subsequent to the first Georgia Constitution and is in derogation of the common law. Thus, a garnishment action is not a civil action of such a nature in which a trial by jury is guaranteed. Mull v. Mull, 167 Ga. App. 687, 307 S.E.2d 675 (1983).

No right to jury trial if case best handled by summary judgment. — Because the Seventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution did not apply in state courts, and an insured's right to a jury trial thereunder was not infringed when genuine issues of material fact were lacking and disposition of the matter was best handled by way of summary judgment, the insured's Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial was not infringed; as a result, the insured failed to demonstrate any constitutional deprivation warranting a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action. Cuyler v. Allstate Ins. Co., 284 Ga. App. 409, 643 S.E.2d 783, cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 510 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not violate a purchaser's right to a jury trial under the Georgia Constitution or O.C.G.A. § 9-11-38 by granting summary judgment to a lender because the right to a jury trial was not infringed as the jury would have no role since there were no issues of material fact in dispute. Leone v. Green Tree Servicing, LLC, 311 Ga. App. 702, 716 S.E.2d 720 (2011).

Arbitration. — Local court rule, requiring parties to timely appeal the adverse ruling of an arbitration board if they desired to pursue a jury trial, did not deny them their constitutional right to a jury trial when they were given a reasonable opportunity to demand a jury trial and waived their right to a jury trial by failing to file a timely demand. Tippins v. Winn-Dixie Atlanta, Inc., 192 Ga. App. 172, 384 S.E.2d 199, cert. denied, 192 Ga. App. 172, 384 S.E.2d 199 (1989).

Local court rule provision that a trial de novo be available only upon demand after nonbinding arbitration did not deny the right to a jury trial. Davis v. Gaona, 260 Ga. 450, 396 S.E.2d 218 (1990).

Probate court. — Probate court did not err by failing to conduct a jury trial on the construction of a decedent's will as the decedent's will was unambiguous and no issues of fact remained; further, the corporation challenging the construction was not authorized under Georgia law to serve as a corporate trustee. Chattowah Open Land Trust, Inc. v. Jones, 281 Ga. 97, 636 S.E.2d 523 (2006).

Waiver of right to jury trial in probate proceeding. — Trial court had subject matter jurisdiction to review the probate court's decision under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. IV, Para. I and O.C.G.A. § 15-6-8(4)(E) to deny probate of the decedent's 1988 will and the parties' waiver of the statutory right to a jury trial did not deprive the trial court of subject matter jurisdiction to deny probate of the will. Mosley v. Lancaster, 296 Ga. 862, 770 S.E.2d 873 (2015).

Husband did not waive right to jury trial. — Trial court erroneously denied a husband's motion for a new trial and to set aside the decree of divorce, as the husband's actions in showing up 45 minutes late in answering a calendar call did not amount to either an expressed or implied waiver of an asserted right to a jury trial, and the husband did not expressly consent to a bench trial. Walker v. Walker, 280 Ga. 696, 631 S.E.2d 697 (2006).

Dismissed employee had no constitutional right to trial by jury on the employee's claim for back pay under the Georgia Equal Employment for the Handicapped Code, O.C.G.A. § 34-6A-1 et seq. Smith v. Milliken & Co., 189 Ga. App. 897, 377 S.E.2d 916 (1989).

Right to trial by jury in action on subrogation lien. — When pursuing its subrogation rights, a workers' compensation insurer is not entitled to a jury trial on the question of whether the injured employee has been fully and completely compensated under O.C.G.A. § 34-9-11.1(b). Liberty Mut. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 244 Ga. App. 338, 535 S.E.2d 511 (2000).

No right to jury trial in appeal from adverse decision of policemen's pension fund board. — There is no constitutionally protected right to a trial by jury in an appeal from an adverse decision of the policemen's pension fund board, only the election provided by statute (Ga. L. 1953, pp. 2707, 2710) enabling the appellant to obtain a jury trial upon a proper application within a limited 30-day period. Simmons v. Board of Trustees, 167 Ga. App. 511, 306 S.E.2d 759 (1983).

Right to trial by jury does not apply to special proceedings of a summary character. Hartman v. Georgia Bd. of Dental Exmrs., 214 Ga. 560, 105 S.E.2d 732 (1958); Williams v. State, 138 Ga. App. 662, 226 S.E.2d 816 (1976).

No right to jury trial in proceedings to collect taxes. — As a general rule, there is no right under general constitutional provisions to a jury trial in statutory or summary proceedings for the collection of taxes. Hicks v. Stewart Oil Co., 182 Ga. 654, 186 S.E. 802 (1936).

A bond validation proceeding is not one of the class of cases in which jury trials have ever existed as a matter of right, and it does not fall within this paragraph. Steadham v. State, 224 Ga. 78, 159 S.E.2d 397, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 825, 89 S. Ct. 87, 21 L. Ed. 2d 96 (1968).

Right to jury trial not denied by issuing writ of possession. — A request for jury trial and demand for a court reporter is no "answer" to a petition for a writ of possession. The trial court is therefore mandated by law to issue the writ of possession, which does not amount to a denial of the constitutional right to a jury trial. Banks v. Borg-Warner Acceptance Corp., 168 Ga. App. 46, 308 S.E.2d 54 (1983).

A debtor's constitutionally guaranteed right to a jury trial was not infringed when the trial court issued a writ of possession without the benefit of a jury since there were no issues of material fact in dispute. Bledsoe v. Central Ga. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 180 Ga. App. 598, 349 S.E.2d 821 (1986).

No right to trial by jury exists in habeas corpus cases, and certainly not in juvenile courts when the state as parens patriae created the juvenile court with powers in the nature of habeas corpus for the protection of children. Porter v. Watkins, 217 Ga. 73, 121 S.E.2d 120 (1961).

Appeal to superior court from condemnation award. — There is no state constitutional right to a jury trial with respect to proceedings of statutory origin unknown at the time the Georgia Constitution was adopted. An appeal to the superior court from a special master's condemnation award is such a proceeding. Benton v. Georgia Marble Co., 258 Ga. 58, 365 S.E.2d 413 (1988).

Applicability to dispossessory actions. — Georgia Constitution provides for the right of trial by jury in dispossessory actions. Thomas v. Wells Fargo Credit Corp., 200 Ga. App. 592, 409 S.E.2d 71, cert. denied, 200 Ga. App. 897, 409 S.E.2d 71 (1991).

Verdict on unconditional contract without jury valid. — When a suit on an unconditional contract in writing was in default, and a verdict was taken therein, and a judgment was signed by the judge thereon, such judgment was not void because a verdict was taken, but was a valid judgment. Hayes v. International Harvester Co. of Am., 52 Ga. App. 328, 183 S.E. 197 (1935).

When no issuable defense is filed under oath or affirmation, the court does not err in striking a defendant's answer and rendering judgment without verdict of a jury for the plaintiff in a civil case founded on an unconditional contract. Belt v. Georgia Bank & Trust Co., 115 Ga. App. 545, 154 S.E.2d 764 (1967).

This paragraph was not violated when facts were not submitted to jury in case dealing with validation of municipal bonds. Lippett v. City of Albany, 131 Ga. 629, 63 S.E. 33 (1908).

This paragraph was not violated by former Penal Code 1910, §§ 295 and 296 (see now O.C.G.A. § 45-11-4), which provided a penalty for malpractice by a justice of the peace. Kent v. State, 18 Ga. App. 30, 88 S.E. 913 (1916).

This paragraph was not violated by former Code 1933, § 60-101 (see now O.C.G.A. § 44-2-40 et seq.). Crowell v. Akin, 152 Ga. 126, 108 S.E. 791, 19 A.L.R. 51 (1921); Saunders v. Staten, 152 Ga. 142, 108 S.E. 797 (1921).

Contest of city elections. — This paragraph was not violated when facts were not submitted to the jury concerning contest of election of city officers. Hill v. Mayor of Dalton, 72 Ga. 314 (1884); Freeman v. State ex rel. McDonald, 72 Ga. 812 (1884).

This paragraph was not violated when facts were not submitted to jury in case resulting in verdict on a foreign judgment. Stewart Dunholter & Co. v. Sholl, 99 Ga. 534, 26 S.E. 757 (1896).

This paragraph was not violated by Ga. L. 1909, § 9, creating a Board of Road and Revenue (now Board of Commissioners) and providing its duties, and for the removal of members of such board. Smith v. Duggan, 153 Ga. 463, 112 S.E. 458 (1922).

Former Civil Code 1910, § 1741 (see now O.C.G.A. § 43-34-37) was not unconstitutional as violative of this paragraph. Lewis v. State Bd. of Medical Exmrs., 162 Ga. 263, 133 S.E. 469 (1926).

Ga. L. 1958, p. 34, § 34 (see now O.C.G.A. Art. 2, Ch. 11, T. 19) is not unconstitutional in that it does not provide a jury trial for a divorced father when he is sued by his former wife for the future support of their minor children who are in her custody. Strange v. Strange, 222 Ga. 44, 148 S.E.2d 494 (1966).

Because it was of statutory origin and was unknown to the common or statutory law of England prior to Georgia's first Constitution, a proceeding under Ga. L. 1958, p. 34, § 34 (see now O.C.G.A. Art. 2, Ch. 11, T. 19), did not entitle the father of the minor children to a jury trial as a constitutional right. Strange v. Strange, 222 Ga. 44, 148 S.E.2d 494 (1966).

Because an action for recovery of environmental costs was unknown in 1798 when the Georgia Constitution was adopted, defendants suing under O.C.G.A. § 12-8-96.1(a) of the Georgia Hazardous Site Response Act, O.C.G.A. § 12-8-90 et seq., had no right to a jury trial on the issue of whether the actual costs were reasonable, but they were entitled to a jury trial on the issue of punitive damages. Reheis v. Baxley Creosoting & Osmose Wood Preserving Co., 268 Ga. App. 256, 601 S.E.2d 781 (2004).

Crop lien foreclosure statute. — There is no right to a jury trial in an action under the Georgia Crop Lien Foreclosure Statute, O.C.G.A. § 44-14-340. Bitt Int'l Co. v. Fletcher, 259 Ga. App. 406, 577 S.E.2d 276 (2003).

Exceptions to an auditor's report must be submitted to the jury. Cook v. Commissioners of Houston County, 62 Ga. 223 (1879); Weed v. Gainesville, Jefferson & S.R.R., 119 Ga. 576, 46 S.E. 885 (1904).

Jury verdict on exceptions of fact to auditor's report is a constitutional prerequisite to valid judgment when there is no semblance of a waiver of the jury in the record. Simonton Constr. Co. v. Pope, 213 Ga. 360, 99 S.E.2d 216 (1957).

Attorney's fees. — Since attorney fees were not allowable at common law, there is no constitutional right to a jury trial on the issue of attorney fees. Hudson v. Abercrombie, 258 Ga. 729, 374 S.E.2d 83 (1988).

Statutory cap on noneconomic damages in medical malpractice cases. — Statutory limitation of awards of noneconomic damages in medical malpractice cases to a predetermined amount was unconstitutional because it violated the right to a jury trial guaranteed by Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), and the statute was wholly void and of no force and effect from the date of the statute's enactment. Atlanta Oculoplastic Surgery, P.C. v. Nestlehutt, 286 Ga. 731, 691 S.E.2d 218 (2010).

Jury trial not authorized for recovery of appellate costs. — Because O.C.G.A. § 5-6-5 was enacted in 1845, the statutory procedure for the recovery of appellate costs was unknown in 1798, the year the Georgia Constitution was enacted, and there was no right to jury trial under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a). Mize v. First Citizens Bank & Trust Co., 302 Ga. App. 757, 691 S.E.2d 648 (2010).

3. Criminal Cases

Right to jury trial attaches when the maximum penalty for an offense exceeds six months' imprisonment. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1978).

This paragraph requires the right of jury trial in cases of felonies. Mattox v. State, 115 Ga. 212, 41 S.E. 709 (1902); Pollard v. State, 148 Ga. 447, 96 S.E. 997 (1918).

Right to jury trial attaches in both felony and misdemeanor cases. — Only in cases concerning truly petty crimes, if the deprivation of liberty is minimal, does the defendant have no constitutional right to trial by jury. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1978).

Right to jury trial does not apply to police courts of cities and towns and arrests and trial, with fine and imprisonment therein, under ordinances thereof. Williams v. City Council, 4 Ga. 509 (1848); Floyd v. Commissioners of Eatonton, 14 Ga. 354, 58 Am. Dec. 559 (1853); Hill v. Mayor of Dalton, 72 Ga. 314 (1884); Pearson v. Wimbish, 124 Ga. 701, 52 S.E. 751, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (1906).

Right of jury trial is not required in trial of violators of municipal ordinances. Hill v. Mayor of Dalton, 72 Ga.

314 (1884); Tindall v. Westcott, 113 Ga. 1114, 39 S.E. 450, 155 L.R.A. 225 (1901); Pearson v. Wimbish, 124 Ga. 701, 52 S.E. 751, 4 Ann. Cas. 501 (1906).

Exercise of rights should not be impeachment grounds. — Neither the initial right to exercise the right to trial by jury, nor a subsequent decision to waive that right and plead guilty, should be viewed as a "lie" or ammunition for impeachment. Brown v. State, 228 Ga. App. 281, 491 S.E.2d 488 (1997).

Indictment need not state statutory aggravators. — Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion to quash an indictment, based on Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), and Ring v. Arizona, 536 U.S. 584 (2002), because the face of the indictment did not contain the statutory aggravators for the death penalty; the state was not required to list the statutory aggravators in the indictment. Thomason v. State, 281 Ga. 429, 637 S.E.2d 639 (2006).

Defendant was entitled to trial by jury when indicted for zoning violation punishable as misdemeanor. — An indictment charging violation of a county zoning ordinance is a charge of a violation of state law for failure to comply with the local zoning ordinances and when such violation is a misdemeanor under state law the defendant is entitled to trial by jury. Clark v. State, 157 Ga. App. 486, 277 S.E.2d 738 (1981).

Right not violated in death penalty case. — O.C.G.A. § 17-10-30, enumerating the statutory aggravating factors in a death penalty case, was not unconstitutional under U.S. Const., amend. 6 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI as applied in defendant's case; the jury found beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of the statutory aggravating circumstances, there was no requirement that the jury find non-statutory aggravating factors beyond a reasonable doubt, and the non-statutory aggravating evidence presented by the state was reliable and admissible. Lewis v. State, 279 Ga. 756, 620 S.E.2d 778 (2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1116, 126 S. Ct. 1917, 164 L. Ed. 2d 671 (2006).

O.C.G.A. § 40-13-60 manifestly infringes on constitutional right. —

O.C.G.A. § 40-13-60 manifestly infringes on Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI insofar as it denies a criminal defendant, who is subject to potential punishment as a misdemeanor, the right to trial by jury; eliminating the language in O.C.G.A. § 40-13-60 that seemingly restricts a traffic violator to a bench trial would not undermine the general intent and overall scheme of O.C.G.A. § 40-13-50 et seq. and would not require that the remainder of the statutory scheme be invalidated. Geng v. State, 276 Ga. 428, 578 S.E.2d 115 (2003).

Withdrawing case from jury. — The right to the presumption of innocence is so strong that when the defendant, who had previously plead not guilty, admitted every material element of the crimes charged in the defendant's testimony, it was error to withdraw from the jury the issue of the defendant's guilt or innocence. Bryant v. State, 163 Ga. App. 872, 296 S.E.2d 168 (1982).

Waiver of jury trial as delay tactic prohibited. — When the defendant was represented by counsel when the defendant waived the right to a jury trial in writing, the defendant twice requested a continuance to obtain a mental examination that the defendant refused to complete, the defendant subsequently terminated defense counsel and obtained new counsel, and the defendant first asked to revoke the defendant's jury trial waiver on the day of trial when the defendant asked for another new counsel, the trial court properly denied the request and properly found that the request was a mere dilatory tactic and that to grant the request would have substantially delayed the cause of justice. Bennett v. State, 262 Ga. App. 800, 586 S.E.2d 704 (2003).

Waiver of constitutional rights in guilty plea. — Habeas court's finding that a petitioner's guilty pleas were validly entered was reversed as the waiver forms signed by the petitioner and reviewed with the petitioner by the petitioner's attorneys addressed only the right to be tried by a jury; the waiver forms did not advise the petitioner that the petitioner was waiving the petitioner's right against self-incrimination and the petitioner's confrontation right. Beckworth v. State,

Waiver valid. — Evidence supported a trial court's finding that a defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived the defendant's right to a jury trial as the defense counsel testified that: (1) the defense counsel explained to the defendant on several occasions the defendant's right to a jury trial and the ramifications of that right; (2) the counsel explained the difference between a jury trial and a bench trial and recommended that the defendant waive that right in favor of a bench trial and take the defendant's chances with an appeal of the denial of a motion to suppress; and (3) the defendant indicated to the counsel that the defendant understood the defendant's rights and the strategy and affirmatively agreed to go forward with a bench trial. Fleming v. State, 282 Ga. App. 373, 638 S.E.2d 769 (2006).

Because the state presented sufficient extrinsic evidence showing that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily waived a jury trial, even though this evidence conflicted with the defendant's later testimony at the hearing on the motion for a new trial, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial. Davis v. State, 287 Ga. App. 783, 653 S.E.2d 107 (2007).

Failure to object to juror. — Because the defense counsel only sought to have a juror removed before the second day of a three-day jury trial based on that juror's acquaintance with three state witnesses, did not ask the jury pool questions related to such information during voir dire, and did not move for a mistrial when the issue arose during trial, the defendant waived any claim that a Sixth Amendment right to a jury trial was violated, and the trial court was not required to grant a mistrial, sua sponte; moreover, because the excused juror was not questioned about any familiarity with the witnesses during voir dire, that juror's selection to sit on the panel was not the result of any concealment or misleading statements. Artega v. State, 282 Ga. App. 751, 639 S.E.2d 634 (2006).

Drug forfeiture proceedings. — There is no constitutional right to a jury trial in state drug forfeiture proceedings, as mandated by paragraphs (o)(5) and (p)(6) of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-49. Swails v.

Right to public trial denied when trial held in county jail. — Defendant was denied the right to a public trial under the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a) when the defendant's trial was held in a county jail because the produced un rebutted evidence that jail authorities excluded from the jail courtroom the defendant's brother, a member of the public who wanted to attend the trial; the closure of the courtroom to the brother was neither brief nor trivial as the brother was kept out of the courtroom during the entire trial, which involved criminal charges brought against the defendant in regard to a family member, and the trial court, by deciding to hold the defendant's trial in a facility where the public's access was governed exclusively by the jail authorities, failed in the court's obligation to take reasonable measures to accommodate public attendance at the trial. Purvis v. State, 288 Ga. 865, 708 S.E.2d 283 (2011).

Abuse of discretion to prohibit questions on subject matter during voir dire. — Trial court abused the court's discretion in prohibiting the defendant from asking voir dire questions of prospective jurors as to whether the jurors would automatically impose the death penalty, as opposed to fairly considering all three sentencing options (death, life without parole, and life with the possibility of parole) in a case involving the murder of young children as such questioning was permitted under O.C.G.A. § 15-12-133. Ellington v. State, 292 Ga. 109, 735 S.E.2d 736 (2012).

Public Trial by Impartial Jury1. Public Trial

Right to public trial subject to administration of justice. — The right to a public trial has uniformly been held to be subject to the inherent power of the court to preserve order and decorum in the courtroom, to protect the rights of parties and witnesses, and generally to further the administration of justice. Lowe v. State, 141 Ga. App. 433, 233 S.E.2d 807 (1977).

Press not protected in obstructing administration of justice by courts. — Constitution of Georgia guarantees the liberty of speech and of the press, but does not protect an abuse of that liberty, and obstructing the administration of justice by the courts of this state is an abuse of that liberty and will subject the abuser to punishment for contempt of court. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

Judge may for any special reason exclude certain spectators from courtroom. Tilton v. State, 5 Ga. App. 59, 62 S.E. 651 (1908).

Judge may for any special reason exclude certain spectators from courtroom. — The trial court did not violate O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 by expressing to two jurors an opinion that the defendant was guilty, as the court merely sought to determine whether the two jurors should be excused from further service because of their relationship with the defendant's family and resolved the issue in the manner the defendant requested; moreover, the defendant's right to a public trial was not violated when the trial judge ordered the spectators out of the courtroom at this time, as the judge was accommodating a request of one of the jurors for a more private setting. Berry v. State, 282 Ga. 376, 651 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

No error excluding spectators for lack of space. — Trial court did not err when the court indicated that spectators would need to be excluded from the courtroom during voir dire because of limited space since the defendant never objected and failed to show that any spectators were barred from or sent out of the courtroom. Martinez v. State, 318 Ga. App. 254, 735 S.E.2d 785 (2012).

Permissible to exclude spectators during part of rape trial. — When, on the trial of one accused of rape, the alleged victim is unable to give the victim's testimony before a crowd of spectators, and it appears that the due administration of justice is thereby impeded, the trial judge may clear the courtroom, during the examination of the victim, without infringing upon the defendant's right to a public trial. Moore v. State, 151 Ga. 648, 108 S.E. 47 (1921), appeal dismissed, 260 U.S. 702, 43 S. Ct. 98, 67 L. Ed. 471 (1922).

Failure to object to exclusion of defendant's parents during child victim's testimony. — Because the defendant failed to object to the exclusion of the defendant's parents from the courtroom, and the failure did not amount to plain error, the appeals court rejected the defendant's contentions on appeal that O.C.G.A. § 17-8-54 was violated, as was the defendant's right to public trial; moreover, the appeals court declined to extend the plain error doctrine to the instant facts. Delgado v. State, 287 Ga. App. 273, 651 S.E.2d 201 (2007).

Excluding juveniles. — In a prosecution for aggravated sodomy and incest, there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in excluding juvenile spectators from the courtroom and no violation of the appellant's right to a public trial. Parker v. State, 162 Ga. App. 271, 290 S.E.2d 518 (1982).

There was no abuse of discretion of court in exclusion of spectators during testimony of one witness who was in fear of possible harm because of testimony to be given. Lowe v. State, 141 Ga. App. 433, 233 S.E.2d 807 (1977).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court violated the defendant's right to a public trial after the court cleared the courtroom of nonessential personnel when the youngest victim testified because the defendant did not identify any specific people or category of people that were wrongly evicted. Clark v. State, 309 Ga. App. 749, 711 S.E.2d 339 (2011).

2. Impartial Jury

Defendant entitled to make appearance free from shackles or bonds. — A defendant being tried for a criminal offense on a plea of not guilty was entitled, at common law, to make an appearance free from all shackles or bonds. This is also the present rule, and the right is recognized as an important component of a fair and impartial trial. McKenney v.

State, 138 Ga. App. 88, 225 S.E.2d 512 (1976).

Shackling of defendant, which continued throughout the defendant's trial for aggravated assault and obstruction of an officer, injected partiality into the trial, infringed upon defendant's presumption of innocence and prevented the fundamental fairness which attends a trial by jury. Mapp v. State, 197 Ga. App. 7, 397 S.E.2d 476 (1990).

After the defendant wrote threatening letters, it was reasonable for the court to impose additional security measures, but since the court neither considered intermediate security measures or alternate restraints, even though defense counsel offered to suggest such measures for the court's consideration, nor did the court take precautions to shield the restraints from the jury's view, the use of obvious physical restraints (i.e., shackling of the defendant) was an abuse of discretion. Hicks v. State, 200 Ga. App. 602, 409 S.E.2d 82 (1991).

While in the absence of exceptional circumstances, the trial court abused the court's discretion by requiring the defendant to remain shackled during trial, the decision was harmless error since the trial court made efforts to avoid bringing the shackles to the jury's attention and two co-defendants, also shackled, were acquitted. Reid v. State, 210 Ga. App. 783, 437 S.E.2d 646 (1993).

Although the defendant was obstreperous in unceasingly proclaiming that the defendant was entitled to a different lawyer and that the defendant's rights were being violated, the trial judge failed to properly exercise judicial discretion in the manner in which the judge attempted to control the defendant because there was no evidence that binding and gagging was used as a last resort among reasonable and less prejudicial alternatives, which included removing the defendant from the courtroom until the defendant was willing to be present without disruption. Weldon v. State, 247 Ga. App. 17, 543 S.E.2d 56 (2000).

Physical restraints on defendant at trial. — When physical restraints are necessary and are observed by the jury in a criminal case, the trial court must instruct the jury that the use of physical restraints on the defendant has no bearing on the defendant's guilt or innocence and should not be considered by them during their deliberations. Hicks v. State, 200 Ga. App. 602, 409 S.E.2d 82 (1991).

When physical restraints are necessary and are observed by the jury in a criminal case, the trial court must instruct the jury that the use of physical restraints on the defendant has no bearing on the defendant's guilt or innocence and should not be considered by them during their deliberations. Allen v. State, 248 Ga. App. 79, 545 S.E.2d 629 (2001).

Defendant entitled to panel of qualified jurors not panel of preferred jurors. Smith v. State, 245 Ga. 205, 264 S.E.2d 15 (1980).

Jurors may be placed upon their voir dire, and examined as to their impartiality. Sullivan v. Padrosa, 122 Ga. 338, 50 S.E. 142 (1905).

Defendant may ask jurors whether family members worked for law enforcement agencies. — The trial court errs in limiting voir dire of the jurors by refusing to allow the defendant to ask the panel whether members of the jurors' immediate families have ever worked for law enforcement agencies. Henderson v. State, 251 Ga. 398, 306 S.E.2d 645 (1983).

Determination of competence of juror. — To disqualify a juror in a criminal case, the juror must have formed and expressed an opinion, either from witnessing the crime or having heard sworn testimony concerning it; one who from some other sources had formed and expressed an opinion which is not fixed and determined and who indicates one's competency by answering the statutory questions on voir dire is not an incompetent juror. Griffeth v. State, 154 Ga. App. 643, 269 S.E.2d 501 (1980).

Jurors exposed to anti-drunk driving poster during DUI trial. — Defendant, charged with driving under the influence, was not deprived of a fair trial since the six empaneled jurors who were exposed to an anti-drunk driving poster responded affirmatively when they were asked by defense counsel, "Can you dismiss that poster from your minds and say to me with absolute certainty that it has no bearing on your minds and would have no bearing on this case?". Bryant v. State, 201 Ga. App. 305, 410 S.E.2d 778 (1991).

Requirements for establishing denial of impartial jury. — Under the Sixth Amendment, in order for an appellant to establish the denial of the appellant's right to an impartial jury, the appellant must show either actual juror partiality or circumstances inherently prejudicial to that right. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

In order to support a finding that the defendant did not receive a fair trial, defendant must show: (1) that the setting of the trial was inherently prejudicial; or (2) that the jury selection process showed actual prejudice to a degree that rendered a fair trial impossible. Taft v. State, 154 Ga. App. 566, 269 S.E.2d 69 (1980).

Factors which indicate right to impartial jury not presumptively violated. — Given the absence of any evidence of actual juror prejudice, the remoteness in time between publicity and trial, and the eventual admission of the prejudicial information into evidence, the right to an impartial jury has not been presumptively violated. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

Juror impartial. — Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a motion for new trial pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 5-5-25 after defendant was convicted of criminal charges arising from an incident involving an ex-girlfriend; the fact that one juror indicated that the juror's daughter went to school with the victim's daughter and the daughters had a sleepover a year earlier at the victim's house did not create actual juror partiality or circumstances that were inherently prejudicial to defendant's right to an impartial jury under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI. Sims v. State, 276 Ga. App. 246, 622 S.E.2d 909 (2005).

Juror's extrajudicial knowledge regarding appellant's present crime represents serious potential for prejudice to that appellant's right to an impartial jury, but such potential can be discounted under U.S. Const., amend. 6, if review of the pretrial publicity and total voir dire fails to demonstrate that the "totality of the circumstances" were inherently prejudicial. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

Juror who found joint defendant guilty is incompetent. McKay v. State, 6 Ga. App. 527, 65 S.E. 306 (1909).

Prejudicial circumstances can impeach juror's declaration of impartiality. — Circumstances inherently prejudicial to the appellant's right to an impartial jury can impeach a juror's declaration of impartiality. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

No deprivation of right when juror called as witness for state. — The defendant in a criminal case is not deprived of the right of trial by a fair and impartial jury merely because one or more of the jurors trying the case are called as witnesses for the state as to a matter other than the commission of the crime itself. Williams v. State, 42 Ga. App. 225, 155 S.E. 511 (1930); Tumlin v. State, 88 Ga. App. 713, 77 S.E.2d 555 (1953).

Consideration of effect of pretrial publicity on impartiality of prospective jurors. — When in a publicized murder case, in light of the possibility of prejudice, the trial court granted extensive individual voir dire of prospective jurors outside the presence of the others, and granted each of the defendant's motions to strike jurors for cause, leaving a panel of 50 prospective jurors where some prospective jurors admitted to a vague knowledge of the crimes, but none could recall details and each specifically stated an ability to weigh the evidence impartially, there is no prejudicial pretrial publicity which would outweigh the stated impartiality of the prospective jurors. Gates v. State, 244 Ga. 587, 261 S.E.2d 349 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 938, 100 S. Ct. 1332, 63 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1980).

In a murder trial, the two and one-half month period between the publicity and the trial, the low level of community bias as reflected in the total voir dire, and the admission into evidence of the defendant's confessions permit the court to discount the potential for prejudice admittedly present in the extrajudicial knowledge of the selected jurors in the case, and to find that the "totality of circumstances" surrounding the defendant's trial were not inherently prejudicial to the defendant's right to an impartial jury. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

After one prospective juror made a comment that the defendant killed redheads and that the juror was later excused, the trial court did not violate the defendant's right to an impartial jury under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI and U.S. Const., amend. 6 in refusing to excuse other prospective jurors. Lewis v. State, 279 Ga. 756, 620 S.E.2d 778 (2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1116, 126 S. Ct. 1917, 164 L. Ed. 2d 671 (2006).

Trial court did not deprive the defendant of a fair and impartial jury pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI and U.S. Const., amend. 6 in refusing to transfer venue of the murder case due to pretrial publicity; many of the prospective jurors were unaware of the publicity surrounding the crimes due to the 14-year gap between the crimes and trial, and no remaining venire persons expressed a fixed opinion regarding the defendant's guilt based upon exposure to media coverage. Denny v. State, 281 Ga. 114, 636 S.E.2d 500 (2006).

Corroboration for the court's belief that pretrial publicity was not inherently prejudicial could be found in the percentage of prospective jurors excused for partiality regarding the accused's guilt. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

When only 4 percent of the prospective jurors were excused for partiality regarding the defendant's guilt, the pretrial publicity surrounding the defendant's case did not create a community bias inherently prejudicial to the appellant's right to an impartial jury. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

New trial granted if jury acts from passion or prejudice. — It is a general rule that if the jury acts from passion or prejudice against the accused in rendering their verdict against the accused, a new trial will be granted. Fitzgerald v. State, 184 Ga. 19, 190 S.E. 602 (1937).

New trial when incompetent juror renders verdict. — When a juror is incompetent, and renders a verdict, a new trial will be granted. Doyal v. State, 73 Ga. 72 (1884).

Press should refrain from activities which interfere with trial by impartial jury. — A responsible press, appreciating as it must the great power of the press in a democratic society, should refrain from publishing and distributing news articles which, in the normal course of events would, or which it could reasonably anticipate would, interfere with the trial of a criminal case by an impartial jury; and to do so may subject it to punishment for contempt of court. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

The press should be given the widest latitude possible in the exercise of its freedom that is consonant with the orderly administration of justice, trial by a fair and impartial jury, and the freedom and independence of the courts in the exercise of their constitutional rights and duties. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

Disqualification of jurors with reservations about capital punishment.

— When jurors were disqualified in a murder and rape proceeding because of their reservations about capital punishment, the jurors were properly excused for cause, and the defendant was not deprived of the defendant's right to a jury selected from a representative cross section of the community. Bowen v. State, 244 Ga. 495, 260 S.E.2d 855 (1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 970, 100 S. Ct. 2952, 64 L. Ed. 2d 831 (1980).

The right of an accused to a trial by an impartial jury, guaranteed by the state and federal Constitutions, means the right to a jury impartial as between the state and the accused on the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. The crime of rape in this state may be punished by death, and a person accused of such crime has no constitutional right to have jurors trying the case who have conscientious scruples against the infliction of a punishment prescribed by the law. Massey v. State, 222 Ga. 143, 149 S.E.2d 118, appeal dismissed, 385 U.S. 36, 87 S. Ct. 241, 17 L. Ed. 2d 36 (1966).

Trial court's disqualification of a juror for cause based upon the juror's opposition to the imposition of the death penalty was not an abuse of discretion as: (1) the juror initially indicated that the juror was open to considering the death penalty as a sentencing option, but almost immediately into voir dire the juror vacillated and repeatedly stated that the juror did not know whether the juror could vote for the death penalty; (2) after extensive questioning by the trial court, the juror stated that the death penalty was against the juror's nature and indicated that the juror did not think the juror could vote for it, regardless of the circumstances; and (3) in finding the juror unqualified, the trial court relied in large part on the juror's demeanor, noting the juror's "body language" and the fact that, although the juror had indicated a couple of times that the juror might consider the death penalty, the juror "seemed to struggle with it." Walker v. State, 281 Ga. 157, 635 S.E.2d 740 (2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 833, 128 S. Ct. 60, 169 L. Ed. 2d 50 (2007).

"Death-qualified" jury procedure does not violate constitutional right to jury trial. Chenault v. Stynchcombe, 581 F.2d 444 (5th Cir. 1978).

When the defendant received a sentence of life without parole, not a death sentence, the defendant could not complain of the death-penalty qualification of the jurors; moreover, the death penalty qualification of prospective jurors was clearly authorized. Stokes v. State, 281 Ga. 825, 642 S.E.2d 82 (2007).

Circumstances under which examination by court may be cause for new trial. — The trial judge has the right to propound a question or a series of questions to any witness, for the purpose of developing fully the truth of the case; and the extent to which the examination conducted by the court shall go is a matter within the judge's discretion; and a lengthy examination by the court of a witness called by either party will not be cause for a new trial even though some of the questions propounded by the court were leading in character, unless the court, during the examination of the witness by the court, expresses or intimates an opinion on the facts of the case, or as to what has or has not been proved on the examination takes such course as to become argumentative in character. Beavers v. State, 132 Ga. App. 94, 207 S.E.2d 550 (1974).

Restriction of improper voir dire. — The trial court did not violate Uniform Superior Court Rule 10.1, O.C.G.A. § 15-12-133, the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments, or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. I and XI, by restricting improper voir dire examination of prospective jurors concerning racial bias, pre-trial publicity, and self defense. Walker v. State, 258 Ga. 443, 370 S.E.2d 149 (1988).

Out-of-court communication. — Presumption of prejudice to the defendant when an irregularity in the conduct of a juror is shown was overcome since the court conducted a thorough hearing regarding an out-of-court communication at which both the defendant and the state had ample opportunity to question the witness and the offending juror. Cleveland v. State, 192 Ga. App. 659, 386 S.E.2d 169 (1989).

Judge's comment on jurors' notes did not violate right to impartial jury. — Trial court did not express an opinion in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 or of an inmate's rights to confrontation or a fair and impartial jury when the court explained to those in the courtroom during jury deliberations in the inmate's trial on drug and weapons offenses that it had received two notes from the jury describing a communication received by a juror that offered the juror a bribe in exchange for changing the juror's vote to not guilty; the trial court's comment did not suggest that the inmate had directed the bribery attempt because it merely reviewed the jurors' notes and did not go beyond them, and it added nothing to that which the jurors already knew. Greer v. Thompson, 281 Ga. 419, 637 S.E.2d 698 (2006).

Prejudicial misconduct of counsel may warrant granting mistrial. — The misconduct of counsel may be such that its effect cannot be overcome, and misconduct so prejudicial that the verdict of the jury must have been influenced thereby is not cured by an admonition to the jury, or by sustaining an objection thereto, or by rebuke or admonition of counsel, or by withdrawal by counsel; but the court should grant a mistrial. Fitzgerald v. State, 184 Ga. 19, 190 S.E. 602 (1937).

Handling of misconduct of counsel by court. — When the conduct of the attorney warrants a reprimand, a mere placid direction by the court will not suffice. Whenever necessary, the court may and should admonish the jury to disregard improper arguments, whether requested to do so or not, but especially when properly requested so to do; and unless the misconduct is so prejudicial that its injurious effect cannot be eradicated, the error in counsel's misconduct is cured by an admonition to disregard the impropriety by cautioning the jury to decide the case on the evidence and not on counsel's statements, and that statements of counsel are not to be regarded as evidence. Fitzgerald v. State, 184 Ga. 19, 190 S.E. 602 (1937).

If the solicitor general (now district attorney) in the address to the jury uses highly improper language not authorized by the evidence or any fair deduction therefrom, and counsel for the accused objects thereto and moves that the court declare a mistrial, which the court refuses, a new trial will be granted in the interest of justice, which requires a fair trial. Fitzgerald v. State, 184 Ga. 19, 190 S.E. 602 (1937).

While the language of the court need not be a direct admonishment, a mere perfunctory statement not to consider has been held not sufficient, and a general instruction to try the case free from bias and prejudice and wholly on the evidence is not tantamount to directing the jury to disregard counsel's improper remarks.

Fitzgerald v. State, 184 Ga. 19, 190 S.E. 602 (1937).

The court must so admonish the jury as to remove the prejudice resulting from the prosecutor's misconduct, and in some cases in admonishment to the jury to disregard the remarks of counsel will not correct their effect. The misconduct may be such that the sustaining of objections thereto is not sufficient; and when the argument is very prejudicial, in addition to sustaining an objection, the judge should reprimand counsel, require the improper remarks to be withdrawn, and instruct the jury to disregard the remarks, in order to alleviate the harmful effect; and when the court has sustained an objection to remarks, it is the duty of counsel to desist from further argument of the same character. Fitzgerald v. State, 184 Ga. 19, 190 S.E. 602 (1937).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for mistrial following the state's reference to prison in closing arguments, as the defendant's right to a fair trial under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI was not violated; even assuming that the prosecutor's statement that the defendant did not want to go to prison was improper, the trial court's prompt curative instruction, requesting the jury to disregard any reference to prison and to not be concerned with punishment, was sufficient to prevent any possible prejudicial effect. Carswell-Danso v. State, 281 Ga. App. 576, 636 S.E.2d 735 (2006).

A defendant's conviction for felony murder and other crimes stemming from an incident in which the defendant drove a car into a crowd, hitting and killing the victim, was reversed on appeal since the trial court abused the trial court's discretion by failing to strike a juror for cause since that juror expressed a distinct bias against the defendant, with the juror stating that the juror had pretty much formed an opinion already, that it seemed as if the defendant was guilty of the crime, and that it would be the defense's job to prove that the defendant was not involved. Max-

Remark did not require entire panel to be excused. — Even if trial counsel was ineffective for failing to challenge the jury array on the basis that the array was tainted by the comments of a juror who was excused after stating that the juror thought the defendant was "guilty in 2003," when the crimes occurred, there was no prejudice because the juror's opinion was based solely on media reports, not on any personal knowledge of the defendant; when a prospective juror's comments did not link a defendant with criminal activity, or characterize the defendant as a criminal, the entire jury panel did not have to be excused. Edwards v. State, 282 Ga. 259, 646 S.E.2d 663 (2007).

Refusal to declare mistrial on account of argument of assistant solicitor general (now assistant district attorney) was not denial of constitutional rights of the accused. The argument of the assistant solicitor general (now assistant district attorney), when considered in connection with the statement of the judge, was not such as to affect the impartiality of the jury; and that construction necessarily negatives any violation of this constitutional right. Hicks v. State, 196 Ga. 671, 27 S.E.2d 307 (1943).

When in the trial of an accused for rape, the assistant solicitor general (now assistant district attorney) in a concluding argument made the statement, "anything less than the death penalty would be a mockery," and when counsel for accused promptly stated, "We object to that, and ask for a mistrial in this case," and when the court denied the motion by stating, "I will strike the word 'mockery' and tell the jury to put it out of their minds," the court did not err in refusing to declare a mistrial, and there was no violation of the rights of the accused under the due process clause of the Constitution of this state, or under the provisions that the accused be given a trial "by an impartial jury." Hicks v. State, 196 Ga. 671, 27 S.E.2d 307 (1943).

State witness serving as bailiff during defendant's trial. — Defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to a county sheriff serving as a bailiff during the defendant's trial on charges of, inter alia, arson because the sheriff was a key witness for the state. Even if the sheriff never directly discussed the case with the jurors, the defendant was prejudiced as the sheriff continually associated with the jurors during half the trial and, thus, denied the defendant the right to a fair trial by an impartial jury. Bass v. State, 285 Ga. 89, 674 S.E.2d 255 (2009).

3. Speedy Trial

Speedy trial is fundamental constitutional right, not a privilege. Blevins v. State, 113 Ga. App. 702, 149 S.E.2d 423 (1966); Reid v. State, 116 Ga. App. 640, 158 S.E.2d 461 (1967).

Speedy resolution is a constitutional requirement under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. VI, Sec. IX, Para. I, just as speedy trial is a defendant's right under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI. Williams v. State, 187 Ga. App. 355, 370 S.E.2d 210 (1988).

Statute regarded as aid and implementation of constitutional right. — Since the right of a speedy trial has become a guaranty under the state Constitution, O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170 is to be regarded as in aid and implementation of the state constitutional right and to secure to a defendant in a criminal case the defendant's right thereunder. Reid v. State, 116 Ga. App. 640, 158 S.E.2d 461 (1967).

Purpose of demand statute is to secure rights. — Since the purpose of the demand statute, former Code 1933, § 27-1901 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170) is to secure to defendants in criminal cases their rights guaranteed by this paragraph to a speedy and public trial, the courts should seek to uphold rather than whittle away by judicial construction this and other provisions of the Bill of Rights, which secure the guarantees of freedom upon which this country is founded. Rider v. State, 103 Ga. App. 184, 118 S.E.2d 749 (1961).

Dead docketing a case. — Placing a case upon the dead docket constitutes neither a dismissal nor a termination of the prosecution in the accused's favor. Consequently, the fact that a case is placed on the dead docket does not affect the constitutional right to a speedy trial. Hayes v. State, 298 Ga. App. 338, 680 S.E.2d 182 (2009).

Differing terms of court. — O.C.G.A. §§ 15-6-3(15.1) and 17-7-171 did not combine to deprive a criminal defendant of equal protection of the law by permitting the county of the defendant's adjudication to operate with only two terms of court, while other similar-sized counties operate with more terms of court. Although defendant may have had to wait months longer for the defendant's trial than similarly situated defendants in other counties, the presumptive validity of the statutes stood. Henry v. State, 263 Ga. 417, 434 S.E.2d 469 (1993).

Right becomes operative when one becomes accused and prosecution commences either by formal accusation or arrest. Simpson v. State, 150 Ga. App. 814, 258 S.E.2d 634 (1979).

Rights effective when charged. — The constitutional provisions requiring and guaranteeing "speedy trial" generally become operative when the accused is charged, i.e., when the prosecution commences. Hall v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 625, 216 S.E.2d 839 (1975).

Obligation of courts and prosecution to proceed with reasonable dispatch serves threefold purpose. — The right to a speedy trial is intended to avoid oppression and prevent delay by imposing on the courts and on the prosecution an obligation to proceed with reasonable dispatch. The guaranty has been held to serve a threefold purpose: it protects the accused, if held in jail to await trial, against prolonged imprisonment; it relieves the accused of the anxiety and public suspicion attendant upon an untried accusation of crime; and, like statutes of limitation, it prevents the accused from being exposed to the hazard of a trial after the lapse of so great a time that the means of proving the accused's innocence may have been lost. It also applies to a person who is at large on bail, since, in addition to protecting an accused against prolonged incarceration, the right also serves other purposes which are applicable whether the defendant is on bail or not. Blevins v. State, 113 Ga. App. 702, 149 S.E.2d 423 (1966).

The interests of an accused to be protected by the right to a speedy trial include to: (1) prevent oppressive pretrial incarceration; (2) minimize anxiety and concern of the accused; and (3) limit the possibility that the defense will be impaired. Simpson v. State, 150 Ga. App. 814, 258 S.E.2d 634 (1979).

Four factors are relevant to consideration of whether denial of speedy trial assumes due process proportions: the length of delay, the reason for the delay, the prejudice to the defendant, and waiver by the defendant of the defendant's right to a speedy trial. Sullivan v. State, 225 Ga. 301, 168 S.E.2d 133 (1969), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 935, 92 S. Ct. 2854, 33 L. Ed. 2d 749 (1972); Johnson v. Smith, 227 Ga. 611, 182 S.E.2d 101 (1971); Hughes v. State, 228 Ga. 593, 187 S.E.2d 135 (1972); Mays v. State, 229 Ga. 609, 193 S.E.2d 825 (1972); Dansby v. State, 140 Ga. App. 104, 230 S.E.2d 64 (1976); Powell v. State, 143 Ga. App. 684, 239 S.E.2d 560 (1977); Fleming v. State, 240 Ga. 142, 240 S.E.2d 37 (1977), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 885, 100 S. Ct. 177, 62 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1979); Simpson v. State, 150 Ga. App. 814, 258 S.E.2d 634 (1979); Garrett v. Arrington, 245 Ga. 47, 262 S.E.2d 808 (1980); Collins v. State, 154 Ga. App. 651, 269 S.E.2d 509 (1980).

Violation of constitutional speedy trial right was not denied when the trial court properly analyzed the defendant's claim under a four part test: (1) the length of delay was six months; (2) the initial delay was caused by the defendant's change in counsel and motions for continuance, so the delay was not attributable to the state; (3) the defendant withdrew the defendant's initial statutory demand for a speedy trial and did not assert one again until two months before the defendant was tried; and (4) there was no prejudice when the defendant did not testify or otherwise produce any specific evidence of oppressive pre-trial incarceration and there was no evidence that the defense was impaired by the delay in bringing the defendant to trial. Hudson v. State, 277 Ga. 581, 591 S.E.2d 807, cert. denied, 543 U.S. 934, 125 S. Ct. 317, 160 L. Ed. 2d 238 (2004).

Four factors exist to be considered by a court in determining whether an accused's constitutional right to a speedy trial has been violated: (1) the length of the delay; (2) the reason for the delay; (3) the defendant's assertion of the right; and (4) the prejudice to the defendant. Defendant was not prejudiced by the delay in holding defendant's trial since: (1) the delay was caused by defendant's own failure to appear at defendant's first trial that then required a bench warrant for defendant's arrest to be issued; and (2) the delay did not prejudice defendant's ability to find witnesses to support defendant's alibi defense because a witness who was unavailable would not have been able to testify in support of that defense and defendant had ample time to tell defendant's family members to keep notes of defendant's whereabouts before defendant decided to not appear for defendant's first trial. Mayfield v. State, 264 Ga. App. 551, 593 S.E.2d 851 (2003).

After defendant, who was initially indicted for the burglary of victims who died when their house burned down admitted involvement in their deaths, resulting in a new indictment for murder, arson, and other offenses, as well as the original burglary, while a 62-month delay after the new indictment was presumptively prejudicial, as was the delay of another year after the original indictment, the lack of the state's deliberate act causing the delay, defendant's withdrawal of defendant's speedy trial demand, and the lack of a showing that defendant's defense was impaired by the delay indicated that it was not error to deny defendant's motion to dismiss the indictments. Williams v. State, 279 Ga. 106, 610 S.E.2d 32 (2005).

While a majority of the delay in bringing the defendant to trial was attributable to the state, and the defendant did not assert any right to a speedy trial until approximately 45 months after the date of arrest, after balancing all four factors set out in Barker v. Wingo, any delay in bringing the defendant to trial did not violate the right to a speedy trial, no actual anxiety or concern on the defendant's part was shown, and the testimony that two alleged material defense witnesses would have presented would have either been cumulative or not material. Ingram v. State, 280 Ga. App. 467, 634 S.E.2d 430 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 868 (Ga. 2007).

Given the fact that the defendant waited until only a few weeks before trial to assert a constitutional speedy trial violation, and in light of the failure to show any prejudice by the delay, the trial court acted within the court's discretion in denying the defendant's speedy trial claim; moreover, such was particularly true when there was no evidence that the delay was the result of a deliberate attempt by the state to hamper the defense. Parker v. State, 283 Ga. App. 714, 642 S.E.2d 111, cert. denied, 552 U.S. 995, 128 S. Ct. 496, 169 L.Ed.2d 347 (2007).

Upon the appellate court's analysis of the four Barker v. Wingo factors, given the negative weight of one of two factors against the state, specifically, the reason for the delay, and the defendant's failure to show prejudice and timely assertion of a speedy trial right, no abuse of discretion resulted from the trial court's denial of a motion to dismiss the indictments filed against the defendant on speedy trial grounds. Simmons v. State, 290 Ga. App. 315, 659 S.E.2d 721 (2008).

Applying four-part Barker speedy trial test: (1) the length of the delay; (2) the reason for the delay; (3) the assertion of the right to a speedy trial; and (4) prejudice to the defendant, the appeals court decided that defendant's U.S. Const., amend. 6, Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), and O.C.G.A. § 17-7-171, speedy trial rights were not violated in the defendant's trial for driving under the influence—inter alia deciding that the three-year delay from arrest to trial was presumptively prejudicial, that the loss of DUI blood test result evidence was an equal loss to the defendant and the state, and that the defendant's delay in asserting the right was an indication that the defendant was not anxious or stressed. Allen v. State, 268 Ga. App. 161, 601 S.E.2d 485 (2004).

Defendant was not denied the right to a speedy trial as, assuming the 26-month delay between a first indictment and the trial was presumptively prejudicial: (1) the delay was caused by the defendant's motions for new counsel and to recuse the judge, and by declining an offer of an earlier trial; (2) the defendant did not assert the defendant's right to a speedy trial until 14 months after the indictment; and (3) the only alleged prejudice was the defendant's inability to obtain certain local phone records, and the delay in scheduling the trial did not encumber the defendant's ability to obtain those records. Smith v. State, 282 Ga. App. 339, 638 S.E.2d 791 (2006).

While the trial court was authorized to conclude that the "lead officer" in the prosecution against the defendant was a material and necessary witness who was unavailable for 14 months while the defendant's case was pending, and thus a continuance during that period was proper under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-31, despite the fact that no explanation was given for the remainder of the delay, given that the defendant failed to prove any of the other Barker v. Wingo factors in determining whether a speedy trial violation occurred, the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment on speedy trial grounds was properly denied. Bell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 300, 651 S.E.2d 218 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0031, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 811 (Ga. 2007).

The trial court properly rejected a defendant's constitutional speedy trial claim; although the 18-month delay between a remittitur and the filing of the defendant's second motion for discharge and acquittal was presumptively prejudicial and was apparently caused by failure to schedule the case or by an overcrowded docket, the defendant had not asserted the constitutional speedy trial right until 18 months after remittitur and had not shown that witnesses were unavailable. Oni v. State, 285 Ga. App. 342, 646 S.E.2d 312 (2007).

The trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in granting the defendants' motions to dismiss the charges filed against them because the court was authorized to find that, as the result of the state's negligence, both the defendants were subjected to an extraordinarily long delay in being brought to trial, that they were not dilatory in asserting their right to a speedy trial, and that, as a result of the delay, their ability to defend against the belated murder charge was prejudiced. State v. White, 282 Ga. 859, 655 S.E.2d 575 (2008).

Trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment for pre-indictment delay and granting the defendant's motion to dismiss for delay in prosecution because it failed to properly weigh the case law factors and improperly analyzed the defendant's claim for pre-indictment delay as a due process violation. State v. Curry, 317 Ga. App. 611, 732 S.E.2d 459 (2012).

Error in applying Barker test. — Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment on speedy trial grounds as the trial court miscalculated the length of the delay; improperly considered the state's pre-indictment, pre-arrest inaction for purposes of evaluating the reasons for the delay; failed to weigh the defendant's assertions of the right to speedy trial; and erred in finding that the defense was substantially impaired by the death of the defendant's sister. State v. Gay, 321 Ga. App. 92, 741 S.E.2d 217 (2013).

Same standards for deciding claims of denial of speedy trial are used whether the claim is based on U.S. Const., amend. 6 or this paragraph. Fleming v. State, 240 Ga. 142, 240 S.E.2d 37 (1977), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 885, 100 S. Ct. 177, 62 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1979); Redd v. State, 261 Ga. 300, 404 S.E.2d 264 (1991), cert. denied, 505 U.S. 1218, 112 S. Ct. 3025, 120 L. Ed. 2d 897 (1992).

Constitutional speedy trial questions involve issues of fact that should be resolved by the court having jurisdiction of the criminal prosecution. Garrett v. Arrington, 245 Ga. 47, 262 S.E.2d 808 (1980).

Delay factors weighed against government. — While a deliberate attempt by the prosecution to delay the trial in order to hamper the defense is weighed heavily against the government, an overcrowded docket is considered to be a more neutral reason although it cannot be overlooked. Collins v. State, 154 Ga. App. 651, 269 S.E.2d 509 (1980).

Trial judge's delay in ruling on new trial motion after conviction of accused was not denial of constitutional right to a speedy trial when the delay did not deprive the accused of the opportunity to serve the sentence concurrently with another sentence imposed in a separate trial. Herring v. Ault, 230 Ga. 398, 197 S.E.2d 354 (1973).

Delay in transmitting the record of appeal after defendant's conviction was not a violation of the defendant's federal and state constitutional rights to a speedy trial. Crosby v. State, 188 Ga. App. 191, 372 S.E.2d 471 (1988).

Finding of speedy trial not supported by evidence. — In determining a constitutional speedy trial claim, the trial court failed to account for two years of the four-year delay, and its finding that the rest of the delay was justified by an investigator's military service was not supported by sufficient evidence as it was not clear when the investigator returned; thus, remand was required. Fischer v. State, 286 Ga. App. 180, 651 S.E.2d 432 (2007).

Denial of speedy trial may work to defendant's advantage, and therefore there is no per se prejudice to a defendant from delay, nor is there any specific number of days or months within which a defendant must be tried. Dansby v. State, 140 Ga. App. 104, 230 S.E.2d 64 (1976).

Delay alone is not enough to entitle one to discharge for denial of speedy trial. Fleming v. State, 240 Ga. 142, 240 S.E.2d 37 (1977), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 885, 100 S. Ct. 177, 62 L. Ed. 2d 115 (1979).

Court did not err in denying motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds because, although the initial delay was attributable to the state, after the indictment was filed the state moved with reasonable promptness, defendant filed the motion only weeks before the trial date, and defendant's anxiety about the charges was insufficient to show prejudice. Chappell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 1, 611 S.E.2d 157 (2005).

As defendant's blood-alcohol content registered over .3, well over the legal limit, the trial court could have concluded that a witness's live testimony would not have greatly assisted the defense, and that the witness's absence due to delay was not prejudicial; the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds. Mesaros v. State, 283 Ga. App. 337, 641 S.E.2d 559 (2007).

A trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion to dismiss based on an alleged violation of the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial because the various appeals by the defendant and the state constituted valid reasons for significant periods of the delay in the trial, part of the delay was inherent since the case involved a death penalty prosecution, there was no evidence of a deliberate attempt by the state to delay the trial in order to hamper the defense, and the trial court was authorized to conclude that there had not been any impairment to the defense. Griffin v. State, 282 Ga. 215, 647 S.E.2d 36 (2007), overruled on other grounds, Garza v. State, 284 Ga. 696, 670 S.E.2d 73 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment against the defendant because the defendant never filed an effective statutory demand for a speedy trial and, as to the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial, the 68-month delay was presumed prejudicial, but the defendant prolonged the proceedings due to the defendant's own issues with retaining counsel, including the defendant's original counsel obtaining various leaves of absences due to illness and the defendant's unsuccessful efforts to retain other private counsel. Henderson v. State, 290 Ga. App. 427, 662 S.E.2d 652 (2008).

With regard to a defendant being indicted for malice murder and other crimes, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by denying the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment on speedy trial grounds as, although the delay of two years, two months, and 23 days in bringing the defendant to trial was presumptively prejudicial, the record supported the trial court's factual conclusion that the defendant failed to establish oppressive pretrial incarceration or anxiety and concern beyond that which necessarily attended confinement in a penal institution, and the defendant failed to present any specific evidence that the defendant's ability to defend had been impaired. Ruffin v. State, 284 Ga. 52, 663 S.E.2d 189 (2008), cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1181, 129 S. Ct. 1330, 173 L.Ed.2d 603 (2009).

That a defendant never asserted a statutory right to a speedy trial, agreed to some continuances, never objected to others, and never acted on the trial court's invitation to file an out-of-time speedy trial demand, established that the defendant did not timely and vigilantly assert the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial. Therefore, the defendant's motion to dismiss on speedy trial grounds was properly denied. Bowling v. State, 285 Ga. 43, 673 S.E.2d 194 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying a defendant's motion to dismiss on the basis that the state violated the defendant's right to a speedy trial pursuant to the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a) because although the 54-month delay between the defendant's arrest and the filing of the defendant's motion was presumptively prejudicial, and the state offered no explanation for the delay, the defendant did not file a request for speedy trial pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-171, the defendant did not assert the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial for the 54 months between the defendant's arrest and the filing of the defendant's motion to dismiss, and the trial court specifically found that the defendant failed to establish prejudice. Falagian v. State, 300 Ga. App. 187, 684 S.E.2d 340 (2009), overruled on other grounds, 293 Ga. 282 (2013).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment charging the defendant with armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41, for a violation of the defendant's right to due process because the defendant failed to show that the defense was prejudiced by the six-year delay between the commission of the crime and the defendant's arrest or that the state deliberately delayed the arrest to obtain a tactical advantage; the defendant was arrested and indicted for armed robbery, a noncapital felony, within the applicable seven-year statute of limitation, O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-41(a) and 17-3-1(c), and the mere existence of the possibility that the latent prints could have established "the real perpetrator" if the prints had matched the prints of another offender in the government's database did not establish actual prejudice. Billingslea v. State, 311 Ga. App. 490, 716 S.E.2d 555 (2011).

Defendant must show delay was purposeful, oppressive, or prejudicial. — To sustain a prisoner's contention that there was a violation of the prisoner's constitutional right to a speedy trial, not only must delay be shown, but that such delay was purposeful, oppressive, or prejudicial. Johnson v. Smith, 227 Ga. 611, 182 S.E.2d 101 (1971); Hughes v. State, 228 Ga. 593, 187 S.E.2d 135 (1972).

Trial court erroneously placed upon defendants burden of proving actual prejudice. — Judgment denying the defendants' pleas in bar, which were urged on the basis that the defendants were denied the right to a speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment of the United States Constitution and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), was vacated because the trial court erroneously placed upon the defendants the burden of proving actual prejudice to their legal defense; the extraordinary six-year delay between the defendants' arrest and the pleas in bar raised the presumption of actual prejudice, and the defendants' failure to make a particularized showing of their decreased ability to present a defense at trial could not be weighed heavily against the defendants. Smereczynsky v. State, 314 Ga. App. 73, 722 S.E.2d 892 (2012).

Speedy trial rights violated. — Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to dismiss which alleged a speedy trial violation, as the delay in bringing defendant to trial was prejudicial, especially when, after an assertion of the right, a trial did not immediately ensue, but an additional seven months passed before a ruling on the claim, and in the interim, an alleged material defense witness died. Hardeman v. State, 280 Ga. App. 168, 633 S.E.2d 595 (2006).

Renewed motion for discharge and acquittal by the defendant was properly granted upon a determination that the defendant's constitutional speedy trial rights were violated under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI, as the delay of almost four years in bringing the defendant to trial was presumptively prejudicial, and the remaining Barker-Doggett factors weighed in the defendant's favor; only a small portion of the delay was attributable to the defendant and the defendant timely asserted the right to a speedy trial. State v. Reid, 298 Ga. App. 235, 679 S.E.2d 802 (2009).

Defendant was denied the constitutional right to a speedy trial and to due process based on the state's intentional act of trading discovery responses for a speedy trial right, and the resulting prejudice from the disappearance of a material witness. The trial court therefore abused the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal. Ditman v. State, 301 Ga. App. 187, 687 S.E.2d 155 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0539, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 243 (Ga. 2010).

Indictment was dismissed because the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment was violated as 32 months elapsed from the time of the defendant's arrest until the trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment. Furthermore, the balancing test for a speedy trial violation showed that the length of the delay, the blame for the delay, and the prejudice to the defendant weighed against the State of Georgia, even though the defendant's failure to assert the defendant's right to a speedy trial weighed against the defendant. Butler v. State, 309 Ga. App. 86, 709 S.E.2d 293 (2011).

Denial of the defendant's motion to dismiss the defendant's indictment for violation of the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial was improper under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a) because the trial court clearly erred in reaching several material factual findings of three of the four Barker factors: the cause of the delay, the assertion of the right to speedy trial, and prejudice. Davis v. State, 308 Ga. App. 843, 709 S.E.2d 343 (2011).

Dismissal of the indictment on speedy trial grounds was supported by the fact that, while a small portion of the delay was, in fact, attributable to the defendant, at least seven and a half years of the nine year delay was attributable to the state, and the defendant timely asserted the right after finally obtaining counsel and receiving discovery from the state. State v. Brown, 315 Ga. App. 544, 726 S.E.2d 500 (2012).

Speedy trial rights were violated when the defendant was brought to trial more than 53 months after being indicted, an uncommonly long delay that weighed against the state. The delay occasioned by the prosecuting attorney's announcement that the state intended to seek the death penalty, made on the day the case was set for trial for the tenth time, weighed more heavily against the state; while the defendant did not assert the right to a speedy trial until almost four years after the indictment, the defendant's late assertion was somewhat mitigated by the defendant's repeated insistence that the state comply with the state's discovery obligations; and the defendant suffered actual prejudice as a result of the defendant's inability to show the extent to which evidence tampering occurred, due to an officer's inability to recall important details of the investigation. State v. Buckner, 292 Ga. 390, 738 S.E.2d 65 (2013).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated as the defendant was not brought to trial for three years after being arrested, the delay was due to the state's deliberate choice not to request a production order but to allow the defendant to serve a sentence in another matter and then prosecute the defendant thereafter for the driving under the influence charge, and the defendant was prejudiced by the delay. State v. Johnson, 325 Ga. App. 128, 749 S.E.2d 828 (2013).

Trial court did not err in determining that the defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated as the eight-year passage of time before the case was restored to the trial calendar raised a presumption of prejudice, most of the delay was attributable to the state, the defendant's delay in asserting the right was mitigated by the fact that the defendant had no counsel and a limited education, and the delay impaired the ability to put on a defense. State v. Alexander, 295 Ga. 154, 758 S.E.2d 289 (2014).

Speedy trial rights not violated. — Three defendants failed to carry the burden of establishing that a 14-month delay in bringing defendants to trial was presumptively prejudicial and, therefore, violated defendants' right to a speedy trial, because the peculiar circumstances of the case authorized a finding that the case was being prosecuted with the promptness customary for a complex drug trafficking case involving multiple defendants. Defendants failed to show that such a delay was presumptively prejudicial under the circumstances of the case: (1) the case was more akin to a complex conspiracy charge, as opposed to an ordinary street crime, since the indictment charged 11 people with the serious offense of trafficking in cocaine; (2) defendants acknowledged in the trial court and in appellate briefs that there was a massive amount of evidence for discovery, including thousands of documents, thousands of telephone records, and hundreds of hours of taped conversations; and (3) there was also a federal investigation of the drug operation going on at the same time as the state investigation. Lawrence v. State, 289 Ga. App. 698, 658 S.E.2d 144 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1086, No. S08C1084, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 467, 486, 512 (Ga. 2008).

There was no violation of the defendant's constitutional speedy trial rights under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), as a delay in bringing defendant to trial due to a backlog in the court system was not shown to have caused any prejudice to the defendant, and the defendant failed to timely assert the right to a speedy trial.

Thomas v. State, 296 Ga. App. 231, 674 S.E.2d 96 (2009).

Defendant's constitutional speedy trial right was not violated by delays ranging from two to five years. The primary reason for the delay was the defendant's cooperation in another inmate's case, to which the defendant agreed; the defendant waited several years to assert the speedy trial right; and there was no prejudice to the defendant, who was already serving a lengthy federal prison sentence. Marshall v. State, 286 Ga. 446, 689 S.E.2d 283 (2010).

Although the defendant contended the trial court should have dismissed the charges against the defendant because the defendant was denied the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI the record revealed no basis for granting such a motion because the record showed that any delay in bringing the case to trial was primarily attributable to the defendant and that any resulting prejudice worked to the defendant's benefit, factors which weighed against the defendant and defeated any contention that the defendant was deprived of the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial. Zeger v. State, 306 Ga. App. 474, 702 S.E.2d 474 (2010).

As two defendants' speedy trial time from the date of the defendants' mistrial through to the date the defendants' second dismissal motion was denied was only a little over three months, there was no presumption of prejudice and the defendants' speedy trial rights were not violated under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a). Brewington v. State, 288 Ga. 520, 705 S.E.2d 660 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding that the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial was not violated and in denying the defendant's plea in bar and motion to dismiss the indictment because the defendant failed to show that the delay in bringing the case to trial was purposeful on the part of the state or that the defendant was harmed by the loss of evidence, and since there was no evidence that the state deliberately tried to hamper the defense with delaying the trial, the state's negligence in not bringing the case to trial sooner was considered "relatively benign"; the defendant, who had the benefit of counsel since shortly after the arrest, did not file a statutory demand for speedy trial pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170 and did not assert the constitutional right to a speedy trial until 38 months after the arrest, and the defendant failed to present evidence of any significant anxiety or concern beyond that normally felt by someone facing criminal charges. Weems v. State, 310 Ga. App. 590, 714 S.E.2d 119 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court denied the defendant's claim that the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial was violated because neither the defendant nor the defendant's initial attorney made themselves aware of the actual status of the case between 1998 and 2005, and the defendant failed to keep the defendant's address up to date with the trial court such that the court was unable to send the notice for the arraignment to the defendant's home address; the defendant never made a speedy trial demand during the nine years that passed between the arrest and trial, the defendant was not subjected to oppressive pre-trial incarceration and did not suffer any unusual anxiety or concern because the defendant was not actually incarcerated for most of the nine years in question, and the defendant also was not prejudiced by lost evidence. Rafi v. State, 289 Ga. 716, 715 S.E.2d 113 (2011).

While the superior court erred in failing to analyze separately whether the pretrial delay was uncommonly long, and it should have weighed that factor against the state, the superior court acted within the court's discretion in finding that the reasons for the delay weighed in favor of the state, that the defendant's long delay in asserting the defendant's speedy trial right weighed heavily against the defendant, and that the defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from the delay and in weighing this factor against the defendant. Sechler v. State, 316 Ga. App. 675, 730 S.E.2d 142 (2012).

Prejudice from delay must be shown. — Extraordinary delay without reason shown by the record is overcome when no prejudice is shown and the petitioner did not want a speedy trial (petitioner hoped petitioner would never be tried). Hall v. Hopper, 234 Ga. 625, 216 S.E.2d 839 (1975).

Defendant's plea in bar, wherein the defendant claimed denial of the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial, pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI and U.S. Const., amend. 6, was properly denied as the trial court found that the delay of 11 months from the time that the accusation was filed until the parties were ready for trial was not excessive, some of the delay was attributable to the defendant, and the state had provided adequate explanations for its delay, and further, there was no prejudice shown. The court noted that although the state not proessed the charges by accusation just hours before the defendant filed a demand for a speedy trial, such put the state on notice and, therefore, it was not significant that the defendant did not file another demand for a speedy trial after charges were filed by the grand jury indictment against the defendant. Shuler v. State, 263 Ga. App. 124, 587 S.E.2d 269 (2003).

Because the short delay attributable to the state did not have any demonstrable harmful effect on the defense against two murder charges and because defendant was dilatory in formally asserting the right to a speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment and the Georgia Constitution, the trial court correctly denied defendant's motion to dismiss the indictments. Scandrett v. State, 279 Ga. 632, 619 S.E.2d 603 (2005).

Convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault with the intent to rob, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon were proper because the defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated by the 20-month delay between the date the indictment was issued to the date of the defendant's actual trial as the delay was due to a higher priority of statutory speedy trial demands, so it was not a deliberate delay on the part of the state, and the defendant failed to show any prejudice from the delay. Herndon v. State, 277 Ga. App. 374, 626 S.E.2d 579 (2006).

After weighing the factors considered in determining whether the defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated, the appeals court agreed that denial of the defendant's plea in bar and demand for an acquittal alleging the violation was proper as the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from the delay in bringing the case to trial. Lackey v. State, 283 Ga. App. 139, 640 S.E.2d 717 (2006).

Although the state was negligent in failing to bring the defendant to trial in a timely fashion, that consideration was outweighed by the facts that the defendant suffered little actual prejudice from the delay and no unduly oppressive pre-trial incarceration, and the defendant waited a significant amount of time before asserting a speedy trial right; hence, the defendant's constitutional rights to a speedy trial were not violated. Christian v. State, 281 Ga. 474, 640 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

The trial court did not err in refusing to find a constitutional speedy trial right violation; although the 18-month delay between a remittitur and the defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal was presumptively prejudicial, and the delay was apparently caused by failure to schedule or by docket overcrowding, the delay in raising the claim weighed against the defendant, and the defendant had not shown that witnesses were unavailable or that the delay had prejudiced the defense. Oni v. State, 285 Ga. App. 342, 646 S.E.2d 312 (2007).

Prejudice not shown by lack of professional employment. — Court of appeals erred in affirming the trial court's order granting the defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment on the ground that the state violated the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial because the trial court erred in finding that the defendant suffered undue anxiety since the charges made it impossible for the defendant to get a professional job; that finding implied that the defendant had held a professional job at some point, had the ability to obtain one, or lost one as a result of the defendant's arrest, but there was no evidence concerning that point. State v. Pickett, 288 Ga. 674, 706 S.E.2d 561 (2011).

Passage of nine months between the date a speeding charge was made and the date of trial was not alone sufficient to establish a violation of the right to a speedy trial since there was no evidence that the state delayed the trial to gain a tactical advantage, five months passed between the charge and the defendant's assertion of the defendant's right to a speedy trial and, since the defendant was not incarcerated, there was no prejudice to the defendant. Nairon v. State, 215 Ga. App. 76, 449 S.E.2d 634 (1994).

Two-year delay between the commission of the crime and the beginning of trial is not unconstitutional since some of the delay was due to the separate trials of the codefendants, the defendant did not assert the defendant's speedy-trial right until just before trial, and the only prejudice due to the delay was to the state. Harrison v. State, 257 Ga. 528, 361 S.E.2d 149 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 982, 108 S. Ct. 1281, 99 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1988).

A 21-month delay between the commission of the crime and the trial date was not unconstitutional when there was no evidence of an intent to delay the proceedings on behalf of the state, no recording of the defendant's wishes for trial date, and no assertion of prejudice by the delay. State v. Smith, 209 Ga. App. 404, 433 S.E.2d 599 (1993).

A 25-month delay. — Presumption of prejudice raised by the state's 25-month delay in bringing defendant's case to trial was sufficiently rebutted as the loss of a witness did not prevent defendant from asserting an alibi defense and defendant was partially responsible for the loss of the witness as defendant waited 15 months after the indictment to assert defendant's speedy trial rights. Salahuddin v. State, 277 Ga. 561, 592 S.E.2d 410 (2004).

A 13-month delay. — Defendant did not carry defendant's burden of establishing that a 13-month delay between defendant's arrest and trial was "presumptively prejudicial," and accordingly the trial court did not err when it denied defendant's contention that defendant had been denied the constitutional right to a speedy trial; defense counsel was removed by the trial court three days before trial was scheduled to commence, and several murder convictions appealed to the court had featured pre-trial delays of 12 to 16 months. Williams v. State, 282 Ga. 561, 651 S.E.2d 674 (2007).

Trial court properly denied a murder defendant's motion to dismiss an indictment on speedy trial grounds. Although the court found that the 13-month delay was caused by the state's negligence, the court also found that the defendant had not timely asserted the defendant's speedy trial right and that the defendant had not shown that the delay impaired the defense. Hassel v. State, 284 Ga. 861, 672 S.E.2d 627 (2009).

A 17-month delay in defendant's trial did not violate the defendant's constitutional rights since the defendant failed to assert either the defendant's statutory or constitutional right to a speedy trial and there was no evidence of a lengthy pretrial incarceration. Jernigan v. State, 239 Ga. App. 65, 517 S.E.2d 370 (1999).

Trial court did not err in refusing to dismiss defendant's case for a speedy trial violation as: (1) five to six months of the 17-month delay was due to defendant's motion for a continuance; (2) the state gave reasons for the remaining 11 or 12 months of the delay and reasons for the decision to reindict defendant; (3) there was no proof that the state intentionally delayed prosecution to impair the defense; (4) defendant did not file a speedy trial demand until 14 months after defendant's arrest; and (5) defendant did not present any evidence that defendant's defense was impaired due to the delay, nor did defendant show that defendant had to endure some burden beyond those that necessarily attended imprisonment. Lopez v. State, 267 Ga. App. 178, 598 S.E.2d 898 (2004).

A 22-month delay. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by denying the defendant's motion to dismiss the charges for lack of a speedy trial because while the lengthy delay was attributable to the state, the defendant did not assert the right to a speedy trial in the 22 months after the defendant's current counsel was hired, and the defendant was not significantly prejudiced by the delay; the state's failure to produce the codefendant did not prejudice the defendant since the defendant could have subpoenaed the codefendant personally instead of relying on the state to produce the codefendant simply because the codefendant was included in the state's witness list. Ward v. State, 311 Ga. App. 425, 715 S.E.2d 818 (2011).

Three year delay. — There was no speedy trial violation under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a). Although the delay of over three years was presumptively prejudicial, the delay was primarily attributable to the defendant; the defendant delayed in asserting the constitutional right to a speedy trial; and the defendant's generalized statements, along with the fact that the record did not show that trial counsel attempted to locate the physician who examined the victim, did not suffice to show prejudice. Robinson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 164, 679 S.E.2d 383 (2009).

A 32-month delay. — With regard to charges of aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and rape, a trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal since although the 32 month passage of time between the defendant's arrest and the filing of the motion for discharge was presumed prejudicial and more than half of the delay was attributable to the state, the defendant waited 32 months to file the motion and failed to show any prejudice arising from the delay. The defendant failed to explain what physical evidence was affected by the passage of time and merely made a generalized statement that memories fade over time. Wofford v. State, 299 Ga. App. 129, 682 S.E.2d 125 (2009).

A 40-month delay was not prejudicial. — In a defendant's motion for acquittal based upon a speedy trial violation under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), although the delay of 40 months raised a presumption of prejudice, no evidence supported defendant's claim of anxiety and concern over the charges nor the defendant's claims that the defendant was unable to produce two witnesses who would have provided information material to the defendant's defense. In the absence of prejudice, the defendant's motion for acquittal was properly denied. Lynch v. State, 300 Ga. App. 723, 686 S.E.2d 268 (2009).

A 41-month delay. — Denial of the defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment against the defendant was not an abuse of discretion since the defendant suffered no impairment to the defendant's defense and the defendant waited 41 months before asserting the defendant's federal and state constitutional rights to a speedy trial. Coney v. State, 259 Ga. App. 525, 578 S.E.2d 193 (2003).

Four-year delay. — Although there was a presumption of prejudice due to the four-year delay with respect to a defendant's speedy trial rights under U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), there was no violation thereof upon analysis of the four factors; the reason for the delay was due to the defendant's counsel, the defendant did not file a timely demand for a speedy trial, and the defendant did not show prejudice. Brewington v. State, 288 Ga. 520, 705 S.E.2d 660 (2011).

A 54-month delay. — Trial court erred by denying a defendant's motion to dismiss the indictment on speedy trial grounds, which charged the defendant with the crimes of aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and cruelty to children, as the 54-month delay at issue was substantial and longer than delays that the Georgia Supreme Court has described as egregious and deplorable; the evidence showed that the delay resulted from a deliberate, strategic decision by the state since it chose to dead-docket the case; and the defendant asserted the right to a speedy trial in due course. The trial court erred in several respects in the court's legal analysis of the defendant's constitutional speedy trial claim, namely: by failing to weigh the length of the delay as part of the court's balancing analysis and by failing to adequately address the reasons for that delay; by abusing the court's discretion in finding that the defendant's three-to-four month delay in asserting the right to a speedy trial should be weighed against the defendant; and by finding that the defendant was required to present additional evidence of actual prejudice caused by the state's conduct. Hayes v. State, 298 Ga. App. 338, 680 S.E.2d 182 (2009).

A 45-month delay presumptively prejudicial. — For purposes of U.S. Const., amend. VI and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), a delay of three years and nine months from the date of the defendant's arrest and the date of the defendant's scheduled trial was presumptively prejudicial. State v. Reid, 298 Ga. App. 235, 679 S.E.2d 802 (2009).

Five year delay did not prejudice defendant. — A trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding that a defendant failed to show a constitutional violation of the defendant's right to a speedy trial and by denying the defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal with regard to the defendant's convictions for sexual assault as the defendant never filed a speedy trial demand; there was no evidence nor finding by the trial court that the state intentionally delayed the trial to impair the defendant's defense; the defendant's failure to assert either a statutory or constitutional right to a speedy trial was entitled to strong evidentiary weight against the defendant; and the fact that the defendant never filed a speedy trial demand suggested that the defendant was not suffering anxiety or stress from the delay. The reviewing court noted that the five year delay in bringing the defendant to trial was solely based on requests from defense counsel due to illness, death in the family, or death of an expert witness. Disharoon v. State, 288 Ga. App. 1, 652 S.E.2d 902 (2007).

Despite the state's five-year delay in bringing defendant's child molestation case to trial, defendant's motion to dismiss based on defendant's speedy trial right was denied because the defendant waited more than five years to assert defendant's statutory right under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-171 and the defendant failed to show any prejudice resulting from the delay. Arbegast v. State, 301 Ga. App. 462, 688 S.E.2d 1 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0630, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 348 (Ga. 2010).

Defendant was not entitled to the dismissal of an indictment based on a violation of the defendant's speedy trial rights because, while the delay of 63 months from the date of arrest to the dismissal was presumptively prejudicial, the delay was based on the state's neglect rather than any bad faith; the defendant also failed to assert the right to a speedy trial in a timely manner as the motion was filed more than 15 months after the defendant's indictment. State v. Hartsfield, 308 Ga. App. 753, 711 S.E.2d 1 (2011).

13-year delay. — Trial court's failure to conduct a hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial for roughly 13 years was excessive and improper but did not deny defendant due process since defendant suffered no prejudice as a result of the delay; the fact that the victim resided outside of Georgia at the time of the hearing, standing alone, neither prevented defendant from presenting an adequate appeal nor impaired a defense which would otherwise have been available to the defendant. Spradlin v. State, 262 Ga. App. 897, 587 S.E.2d 155 (2003).

15-year delay. — While the length of the delay in bringing the appeal, 15 years, was excessive, the delay did not violate the defendant's due process rights since the delay was largely attributable to the defendant, the defendant failed to show that the defendant asserted the defendant's appellate rights for much of the 15-year period at issue, and the defendant failed to show actual prejudice to the defendant's ability to assert arguments on appeal. Payne v. State, 289 Ga. 691, 715 S.E.2d 104 (2011).

19-year delay. — Because the trial court neglected to consider all of the Barker factors, including, the entire relevant pretrial delay of nearly 19 years that elapsed between defendant's arrest and the denial of defendant's plea in bar, a remand was required to determine if defendant's constitutional speedy trial rights were violated. Goddard v. State, 315 Ga. App. 868, 729 S.E.2d 397 (2012).

Two month delay. — Delay in scheduling the defendant's trial was measured not from the defendant's arrest nor from the defendant's second indictment, but from the remittitur to the trial court on an earlier case involving the same charges; the delay of two and a half months between the remittitur and the scheduling of trial was not presumptively prejudicial and the defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated. Roberts v. State, 279 Ga. App. 434, 631 S.E.2d 480 (2006), overruled on other grounds, DeSouza v. State, 285 Ga. App. 201, 645 S.E.2d 684 (2007).

Trial court miscalculated. — On remand, a trial court erred by denying defendant's motion for discharge and acquittal based on a speedy trial violation because it made a significant factual error in its calculation of the length of the delay by not including the time that had elapsed between the trial court's original and new orders addressing the speedy trial claim. Richardson v. State, 318 Ga. App. 155, 733 S.E.2d 444 (2012).

Reason for delay. — Because of extreme delay (seven years) in bringing the case to trial, the state's lack of any apparent, articulable reason for delay, and consequent impairment of the appellant's case, the appellant's Sixth Amendment due process right was violated by deprivation of a speedy trial. Lett v. State, 164 Ga. App. 584, 298 S.E.2d 541 (1982).

No violation of right when delay attributable to conduct of defendant. — There is no violation of due process in respect to a speedy trial, when substantially all of the delay in bringing the defendant to trial appears to be directly or indirectly attributable to the conduct of the defendant. Mays v. State, 229 Ga. 609, 193 S.E.2d 825 (1972).

Defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated although the delay was approximately 22 months, much of that was attributable to the defendant's hiring and discharging four different counsels prior to the final appointment, the defendant did not assert the defendant's demand for trial until almost a year after indictment, and the trial commenced ten months thereafter. Lynott v. State, 198 Ga. App. 688, 402 S.E.2d 747, cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 402 S.E.2d 747 (1991).

Because the delay in the appeal was caused by the defendant, the defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated. Smith v. State, 274 Ga. App. 568, 618 S.E.2d 182 (2005).

The trial court properly found that a defendant's right to a speedy trial was not violated since the defendant was responsible for at least seven months of the 18 months of delay and the defendant did not argue that the delay impaired the defendant's trial or affected the availability of witnesses or evidence; although the defendant claimed that there was damage to the defendant's private life, the defendant also testified that it was the arrest that affected the defendant's medical practice and family life and there was no evidence of any deliberate delay by the state intended to prejudice the defendant. Vyas v. State, 285 Ga. App. 467, 646 S.E.2d 692 (2007).

No violation when delay attributable to defendant and state. — Defendant's speedy trial rights were not violated since the total delay was equally attributable to the defendant and the state, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion as a matter of law in granting a continuance in the absence of a subpoena, there was no evidence the state deliberately attempted to delay the trial in order to hamper the defense, the defendant's assertion of the right to a speedy trial was untimely, the defendant failed to show prejudice, and any stress or anxiety that the defendant might have been experiencing was not undue. Carraway v. State, 263 Ga. App. 151, 587 S.E.2d 152 (2003).

Whether delay between indictment and trial violates constitutional right to speedy trial depends on circumstances. — The mere passage of time is not enough, without more, to constitute a denial of due process. Hughes v. State, 228 Ga. 593, 187 S.E.2d 135 (1972); Dansby v. State, 140 Ga. App. 104, 230 S.E.2d 64 (1976); Simpson v. State, 150 Ga. App. 814, 258 S.E.2d 634 (1979); Collins v. State, 154 Ga. App. 651, 269 S.E.2d 509 (1980).

When defendant was one of the people indicted in a multiple-murder case in which the state sought capital punishment, defendant did not show that a 38-month delay between defendant's indictment and trial was "presumptively prejudicial," because it was necessary for each co-indictee to be tried separately, and this triggered the state's statutory right, under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-4, to elect which defendant to try first; therefore, when the state elected to try defendant's co-indictee first, defendant's case was prosecuted with the promptness customary for death penalty cases involving multiple defendants, and the trial court did not have to balance the factors considered in deciding whether defendant's right to a speedy trial was violated, given the lack of presumptive prejudice. Wimberly v. State, 279 Ga. 65, 608 S.E.2d 625 (2005).

Dismissal of an indictment on speedy trial grounds was in error and remand was appropriate because the trial court erred in the court's key factual findings regarding the defendant's anxiety and concern and actual impairment to the defense and, additionally, the trial court attributed only eight months of delay to the State of Georgia, without addressing the reasons for the nearly eight additional years of delay, including a year of delay caused, apparently deliberately, when the defendant became a fugitive. Moreover, the trial court did not properly balance the factors so that the intermediate appellate court could not properly affirm the judgment. State v. Porter, 288 Ga. 524, 705 S.E.2d 636 (2011).

No violation of right when delay caused by hospitalization due to insanity. — The fact that, at the petitioner's trial, the petitioner is adjudged insane upon a special plea of insanity and committed to the state hospital does not constitute a violation of the petitioner's right to a speedy trial. While the petitioner is insane, the petitioner cannot be legally tried. Connelly v. Balkcom, 213 Ga. 491, 99 S.E.2d 817 (1957), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 934, 78 S. Ct. 415, 2 L. Ed. 2d 416 (1958).

In extradition hearing. — A trial court has no power to consider a claim of denial of speedy trial as to warrants issued in other judicial circuits. Garrett v. Arrington, 245 Ga. 47, 262 S.E.2d 808 (1980).

A defendant who is being held by one jurisdiction cannot force the officials of another judicial circuit in which the defendant is wanted to travel to the jurisdiction in which the defendant is incarcerated to test the continuing validity of their charges against the defendant by raising the claim that the defendant is being denied a speedy trial. Garrett v. Arrington, 245 Ga. 47, 262 S.E.2d 808 (1980).

Effect of assertion of or failure to assert right. — While an accused has no responsibility to assert the accused's right to a speedy trial, the assertion of or failure to assert that right is a factor to be considered in an inquiry into the deprivation of the right. The accused's assertion of that right would be entitled to strong evidentiary weight in determining whether the accused has been deprived of the right. The accused's failure to assert the right to a speedy trial would make it difficult to prove that the accused was denied that right. Powell v. State, 143 Ga. App. 684, 239 S.E.2d 560 (1977).

Defendant's direct appeal from the denial of a speedy trial motion to dismiss lay given the state of Georgia law; however, the motion was properly denied because defendant, who had been incarcerated in the interim period, was equally responsible for the pretrial delay, never asserted the right to trial, never requested disposition of the subject offenses, suffered no prejudice, and did not suffer oppressive pretrial incarceration. Lamar v. State, 262 Ga. App. 735, 586 S.E.2d 416 (2003).

Although the defendant was arrested 33 years after the victim's body was found, because the defendant's trial was scheduled within five months after the defendant's arrest and two months after defendant's indictment, there was no speedy trial violation; since the defendant did not assert the claims in the trial court, the claims were not addressed on appeal. Moore v. State, 278 Ga. 473, 604 S.E.2d 139 (2004).

Court of appeals erred in determining, apparently from the court's own review of the record, that the speedy trial factor of whether, in due course, the defendant asserted the defendant's right to a speedy trial would be weighed against the defendant based on the more than five year delay from the defendant's arrest to the defendant's assertion of the right; a delay of over five years typically would warrant the speedy trial factor of whether, in due course, the defendant asserted the defendant's right to a speedy trial being weighed heavily against the defendant, and if the factor is to be weighed differently based on the particular circumstances of the case, that exercise of discretion is committed to the trial court, not the appellate courts. State v. Pickett, 288 Ga. 674, 706 S.E.2d 561 (2011).

Trial court erred by dismissing the murder indictment against the defendant based on a speedy trial violation because although the over five year delay was presumptively prejudicial, the defendant failed to assert the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial until after five years had passed and on the eve of the rescheduled trial, thus, the trial court should have determined whether that factor weighed against the defendant. State v. Johnson, 291 Ga. 863, 734 S.E.2d 12 (2012).

No merit to claim of denial of speedy trial when no demand for trial was made. — Even if a demand for trial is made at the term an indictment is found, an accused is not entitled to a discharge for the failure to try the accused until the next succeeding regular term of court has passed without the accused being tried since no demand for trial was made and the accused was tried at the next succeeding regular term of court after the term at which the accused was indicted, the contention that the accused was denied a speedy trial is clearly without merit. Connelly v. Balkcom, 213 Ga. 491, 99 S.E.2d 817 (1957), cert. denied, 355 U.S. 934, 78 S. Ct. 415, 2 L. Ed. 2d 416 (1958).

Independent review of trial court record to insure compliance with constitutional dictates. — Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution combines with this paragraph to assure that every person charged with offending the laws of this state shall have a public and speedy trial by an impartial jury, and appellate courts must independently review the relevant trial court record in each case to insure compliance with these constitutional dictates. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), vacated on other grounds, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

Indictments generally. — There is no right to a speedy indictment. Griffin v. State, 282 Ga. 215, 647 S.E.2d 36 (2007), overruled on other grounds, Garza v. State, 284 Ga. 696, 670 S.E.2d 73 (2008).

Failure to make written findings in speedy trial demand. — Because the trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to dismiss the criminal charges against the defendant on the ground that the defendant's constitutional right to a speedy trial was violated contained no findings of fact or conclusions of law, the matter had to be remanded for a written order applying the speedy trial factors. Cawley v. State, 324 Ga. App. 358, 750 S.E.2d 428 (2013).

Right to appeal. — A defendant may directly appeal from the pre-trial denial of either a constitutional or statutory speedy trial claim. Mayfield v. State, 264 Ga. App. 551, 593 S.E.2d 851 (2003).

Refusal by judge to grant written motion is appealable judgment. — The refusal by a judge of a superior court to grant to a defendant in a criminal case not affecting a defendant's life, the defendant's written motion for a speedy trial pursuant to the defendant's constitutional right thereto is a judgment appealable to the Court of Appeals under former Code 1933, § 6-701 (see now O.C.G.A. § 5-6-34). Reid v. State, 116 Ga. App. 640, 158 S.E.2d 461 (1967).

Number of Jurors

Trial by 12 jurors essential. — As at common law, one accused of a crime was entitled to a trial by 12 upright men, so likewise it is essential that one accused of a crime shall in Georgia be accorded a trial before 12 men, upright and intelligent, if the right is to be preserved invio-late. Wright v. Davis, 184 Ga. 846, 193 S.E. 757 (1937) (decided under Ga. Const. 1877, Art. VI, Sec. XVIII, Para. I).

When the trial court does authorize a jury trial in an equity case, the composition of the jury is governed by the law which controls those cases in which there is a right to a jury trial, and when such a right is neither waived nor stipulated against, the trial court may not proceed with less than a twelve-person jury. Hague v. Pitts, 262 Ga. 777, 425 S.E.2d 636 (1993).

If juror excused with assent of defendant, no error when verdict by 11 jurors. — If the evidence in a criminal trial, though partly circumstantial, was sufficient to authorize a finding that at the time one of the original 12 jurors was excused by the court, and in the presence of the court, the accused was consulted by counsel, and expressly assented, as the accused had the right to do, no error was committed even though the verdict was rendered by 11 jurors. Coates v. Lawrence, 193 Ga. 379, 18 S.E.2d 685 (1942).

Waiver. — Defendant was properly tried by 11 jurors when defense counsel waived trial by 12 jurors in the defendant's presence, and the defendant stated no objection. Doomes v. State, 261 Ga. App. 442, 583 S.E.2d 151 (2003).

Superior Courts. — Under this state's Constitution and statutes, a jury in the superior courts must be composed of 12 members. First Fid. Ins. Corp. v. Busbia, 128 Ga. App. 485, 197 S.E.2d 396 (1973) (decided under Ga. Const. 1976, Art. VI, Sec. XV, Para. I).

General Assembly may now provide for trial by a jury of any number, not less than five, in any court other than the superior courts. Smith v. Clayton, 80 Ga. App. 21, 55 S.E.2d 171 (1949) (decided under Ga. Const. 1945, Art. VI, Sec. XV, Para. I).

Provision authorizing General Assembly to prescribe not less than five jurors not unconstitutional. — That portion of this paragraph which provides that "the General Assembly may prescribe any number, not less than five, to constitute a trial, or traverse jury, except in the superior (and city) court(s)," was not repugnant to the equal protection clause of U.S. Const., amend. 14 in that the state Constitution thus permitted the legislature to prescribe different and varying numbers of jurors in different courts in the same county for the same offense; and under former Code 1933, § 59-707 (see now O.C.G.A. § 15-12-125), misdemeanor defendants tried in a superior court have the right to a panel of 24 jurors and to challenge seven peremptorily, whereas under the Act controlling the trial of misdemeanors in the Criminal Court of Fulton County, defendant was deprived of any right to choose the court of the defendant's trial, and thus deprived of a chance to have 12 instead of five jurors decide unanimously on a verdict of guilty. McIntyre v. State, 190 Ga. 872, 11 S.E.2d 5 (1940), cert. denied, 312 U.S. 695, 61 S. Ct. 732, 85 L. Ed. 1130 (1941) (decided under Ga. Const. 1877, Art. VI, Sec. XVIII, Para. I).

A five-member jury does not satisfy jury trial guarantee of U.S. Const., amend. 6, as applied to the states through U.S. Const., amend. 14. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1978).

Unanimous vote needed to convict in criminal trial. — Irrespective of its size, the Georgia jury in a criminal trial, in order to convict, must do so by unanimous vote. Ballew v. Georgia, 435 U.S. 223, 98 S. Ct. 1029, 55 L. Ed. 2d 234 (1978).

Jurors1. Selection

Constitutional demand is for a jury list composed of upright and intelligent men, not that every upright and intelligent man be included in the list, and from this list grand jurors must be selected. Avery v. State, 209 Ga. 116, 70 S.E.2d 716 (1952), rev'd on other grounds, 345 U.S. 559, 73 S. Ct. 891, 97 L. Ed. 1244 (1953) (decided under Ga. Const. 1945, Art. VI, Sec. XV, Para. II).

Requirement that jury commissioners select most experienced from jury list to make up grand jury box does not necessarily result in rejection of young adults, contrary to the Constitution.

White v. State, 230 Ga. 327, 196 S.E.2d 849, appeal dismissed, 414 U.S. 886, 94 S. Ct. 222, 38 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1973) (decided under Ga. Const. 1945, Art. VI, Sec. XV, Para. II).

No guarantee of representative cross section of community. — There is no constitutional guarantee that grand or petit juries, impaneled in a particular case, will constitute a representative cross section of the entire community. Smith v. State, 151 Ga. App. 697, 261 S.E.2d 439 (1979).

Defendant's complaint that the panel of traverse jurors was not composed of a fair cross-section of the county's residents was without merit because the defendant was not constitutionally entitled, in a particular case, to a petit jury that was a representative cross-section of the entire community. Harris v. State, 272 Ga. App. 650, 613 S.E.2d 170 (2005).

Highly disproportional representation violates this paragraph. — When the evidence showed that in three major identifiable groups (sex, race, and age), women are 91.2 percent underrepresented in the grand jury pool and 69.7 percent in the traverse or petit jury pool; Negroes are 49.5 percent underrepresented in the grand jury pool and 61.7 percent in the traverse or petit jury pools, coupled with the uncontroverted evidence from the jury commissioners that proportionally there are as many upright and intelligent women as men, Negroes as whites, and young adults as those over 30 years of age, the inescapable conclusion is that as a matter of law the jury commissioners were remiss in the execution of their statutory duties in compiling a jury list composed of "a fairly representative cross section of the intelligent and upright citizens of the county." Gould v. State, 131 Ga. App. 811, 207 S.E.2d 519, aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 232 Ga. 844, 209 S.E.2d 312 (1974).

Constitutionality of method of selecting grand jurors upheld against charges that it results in exclusion of young adults ranging in age from 18 to 30 years old. Estes v. State, 232 Ga. 703, 208 S.E.2d 806 (1974).

Georgia's constitutional and statutory scheme for selecting its grand juries is not inherently unfair, or necessarily incapable of administration without regard to race; the federal courts are not powerless to remedy unconstitutional departures from Georgia law by declaratory and injunctive relief. Turner v. Fouche, 396 U.S. 346, 90 S. Ct. 532, 24 L. Ed. 2d 567 (1970).

Opposition to death penalty. — Trial court's disqualification of a juror for cause based upon the juror's opposition to the imposition of the death penalty was not an abuse of discretion as: (1) the juror initially indicated, although somewhat hesitantly, that under some circumstances the juror could perhaps seriously consider voting for a death sentence; (2) the juror went on to state that the juror believed the juror's reservations about the death penalty would interfere with the juror's ability to realistically consider it as a punishment option; and (3) the juror later indicated that, no matter what the circumstances, the juror would always choose either life without parole or life with the possibility of parole, but never death. Walker v. State, 281 Ga. 157, 635 S.E.2d 740 (2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 833, 128 S. Ct. 60, 169 L. Ed. 2d 50 (2007).

Defendant has burden of proving existence of systematic racial exclusion in selection of jurors. Sullivan v. State, 225 Ga. 301, 168 S.E.2d 133 (1969), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 935, 92 S. Ct. 2854, 33 L. Ed. 2d 749 (1972).

Burden shifts once prima-facie case of racial exclusion made. — Once a prima-facie case of racial exclusion in the selection of jurors is made, the burden shifts to the prosecution to disprove the existence of racial exclusion. Sullivan v. State, 225 Ga. 301, 168 S.E.2d 133 (1969), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 935, 92 S. Ct. 2854, 33 L. Ed. 2d 749 (1972).

Procedural statutes regarding juries not part of system to procure impartial jury. — The statutes for selecting jurors, drawing and summoning them, form no part of a system to procure an impartial jury to parties. Franklin v. State, 245 Ga. 141, 263 S.E.2d 666 (1980).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude minorities. — Trial court clearly erred in accepting the state's explanations for striking four of the five

African-American male jurors as race-neutral since: (1) the first juror was stricken for having an unstable job history, which was not supported by the record; (2) the second juror was stricken for wearing an earring, without an explanation as to how this affected the juror's ability to be impartial, and a caucasian juror wearing an earring was accepted; (3) the state mischaracterized the third juror's testimony that the juror intended to go to Panama City to have a good time, when the juror testified that the juror was going on a family vacation before returning to college; and (4) the fourth juror was stricken to reach other jurors, which could not defeat a Batson claim. George v. State, 263 Ga. App. 541, 588 S.E.2d 312 (2003).

In a Batson challenge, the trial court found that defendant made a prima facie showing of racial discrimination and proceeded to an evaluation of the state's explanations for its strikes against two African-American members of the jury venire, but the state's explanations that: (1) it struck the first prospective juror because that juror's answers did not relate to the questions asked of the juror and were not well articulated, leading the prosecutor to suspect that the juror possessed limited intelligence; and (2) it struck the second juror because the second juror's perceptions of an incident at a water fountain with another juror and the second juror's decision to report it indicated undue attention to issues of race, and that it would have struck any potential juror who reported such an incident, regardless of that juror's race, were race neutral and did not show any discriminatory intent; therefore, the trial court's ruling that defendant did not carry defendant's burden of proof to show a discriminatory purpose in the state's exercise of its peremptory strikes was not clearly erroneous. Roberts v. State, 278 Ga. 541, 604 S.E.2d 500 (2004).

Defendant did not show that a peremptory challenge to an African-American on a jury panel violated due process because the juror was challenged for the race-neutral reason that the juror had been arrested. Hernandez v. State, 274 Ga. App. 390, 617 S.E.2d 630 (2005).

Because the record did not support the defendant's Batson claim, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. Quillian v. State, 279 Ga. 698, 620 S.E.2d 376 (2005).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's Batson challenge since the state indicated that it struck one juror because the juror indicated that the defendants are sometimes required to prove their innocence, which might have favorably disposed the juror toward the defendant because of the perception that it was unfair; the state struck a second juror because the juror was either non-responsive to questions, or would say one thing and then immediately contradict it, because the juror also stated that the juror felt that a criminal offense which required a two-year jail term was a small thing, and because many of the juror's answers could not be comprehended. Scott v. State, 280 Ga. 466, 629 S.E.2d 211 (2006).

Strength of the state's prima facie case of discrimination in response to the reasons the defendant gave for striking four jurors based on race supported a finding that the reasons given for the strikes were a pretext for racial discrimination; hence, the trial court did not clearly err by reseating these four jurors. Hicks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 217, 635 S.E.2d 830 (2006).

The trial court's finding that the defendant failed to set forth a prima facie case of racial discrimination sufficient to support a Batson challenge was not clearly erroneous, as the defendant failed to show that the totality of the relevant facts gave rise to an inference of discriminatory purpose. Moreover, the number of strikes by the state exercised against African-American veniremen did not give rise to an inference of discrimination. Ludy v. State, 283 Ga. 322, 658 S.E.2d 745 (2008).

Because the defendant waived any objection regarding an unsummoned juror, and because evidence supported the trial court's finding that the state's reasons for striking the challenged jurors were race-neutral, the defendant did not show that counsel's failure to object constituted ineffective assistance. Allen v. State, 299 Ga. App. 201, 683 S.E.2d 343 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in ruling that the defendant failed to establish a prima facie case of discriminatory purpose based on gender by using seven of the prosecution's eight peremptory strikes against women. Watkins v. State, 289 Ga. 359, 711 S.E.2d 655 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in ruling that the defendant failed to establish a case of unconstitutional race-based discrimination by the prosecution using three of the prosecution's eight peremptory strikes against African-Americans. The reasons offered for the three strikes were race neutral and not pretextual. Watkins v. State, 289 Ga. 359, 711 S.E.2d 655 (2011).

Trial court failed to make discriminatory intent finding. — Case was remanded to the trial court for the required Batson findings as the trial court incorrectly stated that the state's explanation for the strikes was that a juror had been accused of a crime charged in the case; further, the trial court did not address the arguably similar situations of two jurors who were not stricken. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Trial court erred in failing to consider discriminatory intent. — Trial court erred in ruling that the state's strike of a juror for an admission of illegal underage drinking was a legitimate reason under Pickett v. State as Pickett related to step 2 of the Batson procedure; the trial court failed to consider whether the state had a discriminatory intent in striking the juror and the case was remanded for such a finding. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Finding of no discriminatory intent proper. — Trial court did not err in finding that the defendants failed to show discriminatory intent in the state's strike of a juror because the juror was a diabetic, did not appear to be in total command of the defendant's faculties, believed in witchcraft, was difficult to understand, and did not appear to understand questions. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Use of peremptory strikes to exclude males. — Defendant's Batson challenge was properly rejected because one venireman's perceived inattentiveness and mannerisms were gender-neutral reasons for exercising a peremptory strike; defendant failed to preserve the claim of error in another venireman's strike because defendant did not challenge the state's claim that the venireman had served in the military. Reed v. State, 279 Ga. 81, 610 S.E.2d 35 (2005).

Findings regarding discriminatory intent. — Trial court's finding of no discriminatory intent in striking a juror because the juror's father had been falsely accused of murder based on mistaken identity and the juror's brother had been accused of assault with a deadly weapon was not clearly erroneous; an issue of mistaken identity was raised in the armed robbery and aggravated assault case and a juror who was not stricken was not similarly situated as that juror's brother was convicted of manslaughter. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Juror properly disqualified for bias. — Because a prospective juror stated during voir dire that the juror did not know if the juror could set aside the juror's friendship with defendant and render a fair and impartial verdict based on the evidence and the law, the prospective juror was properly excused for cause. Paul v. State, 296 Ga. App. 6, 673 S.E.2d 551 (2009).

No error in refusal to strike for cause when prospective juror had not prejudged case. — When a prospective juror indicated that the prospective juror would expect a defendant to testify and would do the juror's best to follow the law if the court instructed the jury that no inference was to be drawn from the fact that the defendant chose not to testify, there was no error in the trial court's refusal to strike the prospective juror for cause, because nothing showed that the prospective juror had prejudged any issue in the case. Johnson v. State, 291 Ga. 621, 732 S.E.2d 266 (2012).

2. Qualifications

Editor's notes. — Some of the cases noted under this heading were decided under the 1976 Constitution (Art. VI, Sec. XV, Paras. I, II) and antecedent provisions, which provided that grand jurors were to be “experienced, intelligent and upright” and that traverse jurors were to be “intelligent and upright.”

Standards of intelligence, uprightness, and experience established for jurors in this paragraph do not violate the Constitution. White v. State, 230 Ga. 327, 196 S.E.2d 849, appeal dismissed, 414 U.S. 886, 94 S. Ct. 222, 38 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1973).

Jurors must be upright. — This paragraph, in preserving inviolate the right of trial by jury, guarantees that every person charged with a crime shall be tried by upright jurors; hence, one who has been convicted of or has pleaded guilty to an offense involving moral turpitude is disqualified from serving as a juror; and, unless the disqualification is expressly or impliedly waived by both parties to the case, a verdict rendered by such juror is void. Turnipseed v. State, 53 Ga. App. 194, 185 S.E. 403, later appeal, 54 Ga. App. 442, 188 S.E. 260 (1936).

Juror was not disqualified pending certiorari decision. — However, a person who has not pled guilty nor served a sentence, but has certiorated the case, the certiorari being still pending, would not be disqualified to sit on a jury; the effect of the certiorari would be to supersede the judgment of the lower court, and whether or not the juror was disqualified would depend upon the ruling on the certiorari and further proceedings in the premises. Turnipseed v. State, 53 Ga. App. 194, 185 S.E. 403, later appeal, 54 Ga. App. 442, 188 S.E. 260 (1936).

Juror not disqualified when verdict superseded by certiorari and ultimate question of guilt not determined. — When the verdict and judgment finding a juror guilty of cheating and swindling has been superseded in the proper and legal way by certiorari, and the ultimate question of the juror’s guilt has not been determined, the juror is not disqualified for the reason that the juror is not an upright juror. Turnipseed v. State, 53 Ga. App. 194, 185 S.E. 403, later appeal, 54 Ga. App. 442, 188 S.E. 260 (1936).

Refusal to excuse upheld. — Trial court did not err by refusing to excuse certain jurors, since the subject jurors indicated that the jurors would be able to base the jurors’ decision on the evidence presented, would keep an open mind, and could consider all three sentencing options that would be available. Rice v. State, 292 Ga. 191, 733 S.E.2d 755 (2012).

Criminal record and impersonation of proper juror by fraudulent juror sufficient to justify new trial. — When it appeared from the extraordinary motion for a new trial, that the name of one of the persons who served as a member of the jury which convicted the accused of rape and sentenced the accused to electrocution was not in the jury box, that such person obtained a place on the jury by fraudulently impersonating another, that before the trial this “juror” had twice been convicted of the offense of larceny of an automobile, and had served sentences under such convictions, that neither the movant nor any of the movant’s attorneys had knowledge of these facts until after the movant’s conviction and the affirmation of the judgment overruling the movant’s original motion for a new trial, that they could not have discovered the facts earlier by the exercise of reasonable diligence, and that on discovering the facts they acted promptly in presenting the extraordinary motion for a new trial, the facts alleged therein were such as to require the grant of a new trial, in the absence of any showing to the contrary. Wright v. Davis, 184 Ga. 846, 193 S.E. 757 (1937).

Jurors were clients of opposing counsel. — Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-12-134 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a), a trial court erred in failing to either grant a challenge for cause or to effectively rehabilitate two jurors who expressed a clear preference for opposing counsel because both were or had been clients of opposing counsel. Harper v. Barge Air Conditioning, Inc., 313 Ga. App. 474, 722 S.E.2d 84 (2011).

Judges of Law and Fact

Decision is “settled law” on principle that jurors are judges of law and fact. — Anderson v. State, 42 Ga. 9 (1871) is the “settled law” on the interpretation of the meaning of the principle that the jurors are the judges of the law and the facts, and earlier cases contradicting it, in particular, Holder v. State, 5 Ga. 441 (1848); McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 497 (1885); and McPherson v. State, 22 Ga. 478 (1857), are overruled. Harris v. State, 190 Ga. 258, 9 S.E.2d 183 (1940).

Court construes law and jury applies law to facts. — It is the province of the court to construe the law applicable in the trial of a criminal case, and of the jury to apply the law so construed to the facts in evidence; while the impaneled jurors are made absolutely and exclusively judges of the facts in the case, they are, in this sense only, judges of the law. Harris v. State, 190 Ga. 258, 9 S.E.2d 183 (1940); Hall v. State, 201 Ga. App. 133, 410 S.E.2d 448 (1991).

Defendant could not acquiesce in trial court’s preliminary statement and complain of it for the first time on appeal under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-24. The trial court’s preliminary instruction properly informed the jury that under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a): (1) it was absolutely and exclusively the judge of the facts in the case; (2) it was, in this sense only, the judge of the law; (3) it was the province of the court to construe the law and give it in the charge; and (4) it was the province of the jury to take the law as given, apply it to the facts as found by them, and bring in a general verdict. Whitehead v. State, 258 Ga. App. 271, 574 S.E.2d 351 (2002).

Jury has no right to make law. — The jurors are the judges of the law and the facts so as to enable the jurors to apply the law to the facts and bring in a general verdict, but jurors have no right to make law; the law is laid down in the Code and it is the province of the court to construe the law and give it in the jury’s charge, and of the jury to take the law as given, apply it to the facts as found by them, and bring in a general verdict. Harris v. State, 190 Ga. 258, 9 S.E.2d 183 (1940).

Jury determines under law given by court requirements for conviction. — The question as to the amount of the narcotic substance necessary to sustain a conviction is solely for jury determination under the law as given by the court in the court’s charge. Partain v. State, 139 Ga. App. 325, 228 S.E.2d 292 (1976), aff’d, 238 Ga. 207, 232 S.E.2d 46 (1977).

Jury are judges of law and facts, but judge may refuse to charge. — Despite the fact that Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI provides that the jury are to be the judges of law and facts in a given case, there exists no error when the judge refuses to expressly charge the jury to that effect. Drummond v. State, 173 Ga. App. 337, 326 S.E.2d 787 (1985).

Jury selects between two, mutually exclusive, defense theories. — While mutual combat and self-defense are mutually exclusive, if there is evidence of both, the jury, as trier of fact, must select between the two propositions. Simmons v. State, 172 Ga. App. 695, 324 S.E.2d 546 (1984).

Court must be requested to charge jurors that they are judges of law and facts. Reddick v. State, 11 Ga. App. 150, 74 S.E. 901 (1912).

New trial not required when omission to make charge that jurors are judges of law and facts. — In the absence of a request to charge the jurors in a criminal case that they are the judges of the law and the facts, a new trial is not required by the omission of the court to charge to that effect. Reddick v. State, 11 Ga. App. 150, 74 S.E. 901 (1912).

Harmless error in charge of judges of law and facts. — Error in charging the jury that “You will determine both the law and the facts” was harmless since the court properly instructed on the presumption of innocence, the elements of the charged offenses, and the state’s burden of proof, and also charged the jury appropriately in response to their inquiries. Young v. State, 225 Ga. App. 208, 483 S.E.2d 636 (1997).

Court’s charge that “You ladies and gentlemen will determine the law and the facts” was not erroneous and, when considered within the context of the entire charge, did not give rise to reversible error. Dasher v. State, 229 Ga. App. 41, 494 S.E.2d 192 (1997).

Jury must accept law as laid down by presiding judge. — The interpretation made by the Supreme Court of this paragraph is that, while jurors are the judges of the law as well as of the facts in criminal cases, the jurors must accept the law as laid down and expounded to them by the presiding judge. Moyers v. State, 58 Ga. App. 237, 198 S.E. 283 (1938).

Instructions should not have misled jury to reject law charged by court. — The mere use of the words, “except that” in an instruction that “the charge of the court is the law of the case, and by it you are bound, except that you are the judges of the law in applying it to the facts as you find them to be,” could not have misled the jury into conceiving that they would be free to reject the law charged by the court. Davis v. State, 190 Ga. 100, 8 S.E.2d 394 (1940).

Instruction should not have prevented jury from considering offense. — When the defendant was charged with aggravated assault with a knife and possession of a knife during the assault, an instruction that required the jury to find the defendant guilty of the possession charge if the jury found the defendant guilty of the assault was erroneous because the instruction prevented the jury from independently considering the possession charge. Johnson v. State, 223 Ga. App. 294, 477 S.E.2d 439 (1996).

Duty of jury to take law from court and evidence from witnesses. — In the trial of criminal cases it is the duty of the jury to take the law from the court, as it is their duty to take the evidence from the witnesses. Moyers v. State, 58 Ga. App. 237, 198 S.E. 283 (1938).

Counsel may read and comment on law to jury in criminal case. See Warmock v. State, 56 Ga. 503 (1876); Wiggins v. State, 139 Ga. App. 98, 227 S.E.2d 895 (1976).

Effectiveness of counsel in requesting charge. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to request a charge in the exact language of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI providing that, in criminal cases, the jury shall be the judges of the law and the facts; the trial court properly instructed the jury on its role. Whitehead v. State, 258 Ga. App. 271, 574 S.E.2d 351 (2002).

Waiver of Rights

Provisions of this paragraph may be waived by defendant. Fortson v. State, 96 Ga. App. 350, 100 S.E.2d 129 (1957).

Right to separate trial in capital case may be waived. Henderson v. State, 207 Ga. 206, 60 S.E.2d 345 (1950), commented on in 13 Ga. B.J. 230 (1950).

Right to waive trial by jury. — This paragraph does guarantee the right of trial by jury, but this right may be waived and trial held before a judge alone. Phillips v. Meadow Garden Hosp., 139 Ga. App. 541, 228 S.E.2d 714 (1976).

The right of civil litigants to a jury trial may be expressly waived by written stipulation filed with the court or by an oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the record, or impliedly waived by voluntary participation in a nonjury trial under O.C.G.A. § 9-11-39. Raintree Farms, Inc. v. Stripping Ctr., Ltd., 166 Ga. App. 848, 305 S.E.2d 660 (1983).

The right to a jury trial is impliedly waived by participating in a bench trial and by failing to protest or object to a bench trial. Goss v. Bayer, 184 Ga. App. 730, 362 S.E.2d 768, cert. denied, 184 Ga. App. 909, 362 S.E.2d 768 (1987).

A criminal defendant has the right to waive a defendant's constitutional right to be tried by a jury of 12. Baptiste v. State, 190 Ga. App. 451, 379 S.E.2d 165, cert. denied, 190 Ga. App. 451, 379 S.E.2d 165 (1989).

The power of municipal courts to try and dispose of misdemeanor traffic offenses is conditioned upon the defendant's waiver of the right to a jury trial. Kolker v. State, 260 Ga. 240, 391 S.E.2d 391 (1990).

The defendant waived the right to a jury trial after the defendant proceeded with a bench trial even though the defendant and the defendant's attorney knew that there had been no formal waiver of a jury trial, and asserted the right to a jury trial after conviction by the court, and then ignored the trial judge's order to remain in the courtroom until such time as a jury trial could be arranged. Slater v. State, 251 Ga. App. 620, 555 S.E.2d 8 (2001).

Trial court told defendant of the right to a jury trial and that the jury had to return a unanimous verdict in order to convict defendant on a charge, and the evidence showed that defendant then knowingly and intelligently waived the right to a jury trial in favor of having a bench trial before the trial court; accordingly, defendant waived the right to a jury trial and the convictions following the bench trial were affirmed. Young v. State, 273 Ga. App. 151, 614 S.E.2d 257 (2005).

Claim on appeal that the trial court erred by refusing to consider a request for a nonjury bench trial in a criminal matter was preserved for review despite the fact that the counsel did not state an exception or file an objection to the trial court's ruling, as the "bill of exceptions" requirement was abolished a long time ago pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 5-6-49(a); the trial court did not err, as there was no requirement that a defendant be given a nonjury trial upon a request and nothing prevented trial courts from ensuring that defendants were given their constitutional jury trial right pursuant to Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI. Lindo v. State, 278 Ga. App. 228, 628 S.E.2d 665 (2006).

Before a defendant could effectively waive the right to a jury trial and demand a bench trial, the state's consent had to be obtained, in addition to the trial court's agreement to conduct a bench trial pursuant to the defendant's demand. Zigan v. State, 281 Ga. 415, 638 S.E.2d 322 (2006).

Personal waiver by defendant of jury trial not necessary. — It is not necessary for the preservation of due process that a defendant personally waive the right to a jury trial. Little v. Stynchcombe, 227 Ga. 311, 180 S.E.2d 541 (1971).

While it may be a better practice, it is not necessary for an accused to personally waive the right to a jury of 12 and agree to be tried by a jury of less than 12. Counsel for the accused may validly waive this right for the accused if: (1) the waiver is made, without objection, in the accused's presence; or (2) the accused otherwise acquiesces in the waiver. Davis v. State, 192 Ga. App. 47, 383 S.E.2d 615 (1989).

Waiver of the right to a jury trial in open court is preferred, but it is not required. The record showed that the defendant personally, voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently participated in the decision to waive the right to a jury trial since the defendant and the defendant's appointed counsel, who was also the defendant's counsel on appeal, signed an affidavit waiving that right. Stanley v. State, 267 Ga. App. 379, 599 S.E.2d 331 (2004).

Failure to request a trial by jury is waiver thereof. Green v. Austin, 222 Ga. 409, 150 S.E.2d 346 (1966).

Waiver of the right to confrontation cannot be presumed from a silent record; the record must show a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary waiver made with the accused's consent. Aaron v. State, 172 Ga. App. 700, 324 S.E.2d 564 (1984).

Implied waiver permitted by statute of one trial issue not sufficient to presume waiver of jury trial as to other issues. — Since there can be no presumption of waiver of trial by jury when such trial is provided by law, and since statute contains nothing to indicate that failure to demand a trial by jury upon issues of fact arising upon exceptions to an examiner's report should be considered as a waiver of anything except a trial by jury upon issues of fact so arising, such implied waiver cannot be treated as consent for the trial judge to embrace the entire case and try issues of fact which did not arise upon exceptions to the examiner's report, but which, after the sustaining of exceptions and the annulment of the report, will exist only in the general pleadings and the evidence. Holton v. Lankford, 189 Ga. 506, 6 S.E.2d 304 (1939).

Case requiring express waiver of jury trial. — Exceptions of fact to an auditor's report in a law case must be decided by jury unless the jury trial is expressly waived. This does not mean an implied waiver but that there must be an express waiver. Simonton Constr. Co. v. Pope, 213 Ga. 360, 99 S.E.2d 216 (1957).

State bears burden of showing defendants waived rights. — Since the defendants' trial was not transcribed, and the record did not contain a written waiver of the defendants' right to a jury trial, the state bears the burden of showing the waiver was made both intelligently and knowingly, and, considering the record in its entirety, the state did not meet the state's burden of showing that the defendants were aware that the defendants waived their right to a jury trial and that the defendants personally and intelligently participated in that waiver. Capelli v. State, 203 Ga. App. 79, 416 S.E.2d 136 (1992), overruled on other grounds, Barnes v. State, 275 Ga. 499, 570 S.E.2d 277 (2002).

Defendant may revoke waiver of jury trial if timely and does not affect cause of justice. — While a defendant in a misdemeanor case on an accusation or indictment may waive trial by jury and cannot complain after trial and conviction of a denial of the right, nevertheless, at any time on or before trial, a defendant may revoke the waiver, provided a defendant acts timely and in such season as not substantially to delay or impede the cause of justice, especially when the state makes no point as to delay or prejudice. Wilson v. State, 60 Ga. App. 641, 4 S.E.2d 688 (1939).

Right to revoke waiver of jury trial subject to proof that it would delay or impede justice. — The right to revoke the waiver of the right to a jury trial is subject only to proof of special circumstances showing that its exercise would “substantially delay or impede the cause of justice.” Brumbalow v. State, 128 Ga. App. 581, 197 S.E.2d 380 (1973).

Proof needed to revoke waiver of right to jury trial. — The right to revoke the waiver of the right to a jury trial is subject only to proof of special circumstances showing that its exercise would “substantially delay or impede the cause of justice.” Brumbalow v. State, 128 Ga. App. 581, 197 S.E.2d 380 (1973).

Right to public trial may be waived by defendant by failure to make timely objection. Henderson v. State, 207 Ga. 206, 60 S.E.2d 345 (1950).

Entering guilty plea waives defense of right to speedy trial. — Having fully and voluntarily entered a plea of guilty, a criminal defendant cannot raise as a defense the defendant's right to a speedy and public trial because in the case of a plea of guilty, such plea waives any defense known and unknown. Mason v.

Banks, 242 Ga. 292, 248 S.E.2d 664 (1978).

Waiver of unanimous verdict permitted. — If the constitutional right to a jury may be waived, the right, if it exists, to a unanimous verdict, can also be waived. Phillips v. Meadow Garden Hosp., 139 Ga. App. 541, 228 S.E.2d 714 (1976).

Acceptance of verdict returned by bare majority possible. — If the parties to a civil case may validly agree to have their rights determined without any jury or with a jury of 11 or less members, it follows that they may with equal validity consent to accept a verdict arrived at by a specified number of jurors, even that of a bare majority. A party may waive constitutional rights designed for a party's benefit. Phillips v. Meadow Garden Hosp., 139 Ga. App. 541, 228 S.E.2d 714 (1976).

Counsel's advice to waive jury trial. — Counsel was not ineffective for advising a murder defendant to waive the right to a jury trial. This advice was based on reasonable trial strategy as the defendant testified that counsel believed that a judge, having been exposed to cases involving similar violence, would be more lenient than a jury; moreover, the defendant's acquittal of murder and conviction on the lesser offense of voluntary manslaughter strongly supported the conclusion that counsel was effective, and the defendant was advised by the trial court that the decision to waive a jury trial rested with the defendant. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 725, 662 S.E.2d 817 (2008).

Motion to withdraw guilty plea denied. — Despite the defendant's age of 17 years and the defendant's claim that the defendant had not knowingly entered a guilty plea, the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea to charges of child molestation and terroristic threats was properly denied because at a plea hearing the defendant testified that defense counsel explained the nature of the charges against the defendant and the possible defenses, the defendant testified that the defendant told defense counsel all the facts and circumstances known to the defendant about the charge, the trial court advised the defendant of the defendant's rights to a jury trial and all other rights that the defendant was waiving, and the defendant acknowledged that the defendant was waiving those rights, the trial court also advised the defendant of the minimum and maximum sentence the defendant could serve, and the defendant stated that the defendant had no response to the state's sentencing recommendation. Harland v. State, 262 Ga. App. 803, 586 S.E.2d 705 (2003).

Waiver not shown. — When the state submitted the affidavit of trial counsel who averred only that at arraignment counsel waived a jury trial but the defendant also submitted an affidavit in which the defendant stated that trial counsel never discussed with the defendant at any time during the defendant's representation the advantages and disadvantages of a jury trial and further asserted that the defendant did not "knowingly, intelligently, and willingly" waive the defendant's right to a jury trial, nor did the defendant "ask or permit" trial counsel to make such a representation at arraignment, the defendant was granted a new trial since the state had not met the burden of showing the waiver was made both intelligently and knowingly. Hill v. State, 181 Ga. App. 473, 352 S.E.2d 651 (1987).

Upon a withdrawal of opposition by the state, because an inmate was not advised of the constitutional right to a jury trial, and the court could find no extrinsic evidence in the record to conclude that the inmate knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived the right to a jury trial on the state drug charges at issue, an order denying habeas relief was reversed, and the case was remanded. Sutton v. Sanders, 283 Ga. 28, 656 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Waiver shown. — Defendant intelligently, knowingly, and voluntarily waived the right to a jury trial in a criminal matter because the trial court made a thorough inquiry to ensure that defendant understood the right to a jury trial, a Spanish interpreter was used, and defendant indicated that defendant wanted a judge to hear the case. Alvarado v. State, 271 Ga. App. 714, 610 S.E.2d 675 (2005).

The trial court properly determined that the 16-year-old defendant waived the right to a jury trial; after being informed that the defendant wanted a bench trial, the trial court addressed both the defendant and the defendant's mother directly, informed the defendant of the right to a jury trial, offered the defendant more time to discuss the issue with defense counsel, and confirmed that defense counsel had addressed the benefits and hazards of a jury trial with the defendant. Edwards v. State, 285 Ga. App. 227, 645 S.E.2d 699 (2007).

Because the record affirmatively showed that the defendant knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waived a right to a jury trial, remand for resolution of that issue was unnecessary. Portilla v. State, 285 Ga. App. 401, 646 S.E.2d 277 (2007).

A trial court did not err by finding that defendant made a personal, knowing, and intelligent waiver of the right to a jury trial with regard to defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation and two counts of child molestation after a bench trial because, before trial began, defense counsel stated that defendant wished to waive the jury trial right and proceed with a bench trial, and the trial court questioned defendant, who confirmed that defendant wanted a bench trial and that defendant understood the choice. Further, at the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant testified that defendant discussed the matter at length with defense counsel before trial and stated that defendant wanted the judge, not a jury, to decide defendant's fate. Brumbelow v. State, 289 Ga. App. 520, 657 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

In an auto dealer's suit against a car buyer, the buyer's waiver of the right to a jury trial under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI(a) and O.C.G.A. § 9-11-38 was implied by the buyer's failure to make a written demand for a jury trial or to object to the case being specially set for a bench trial at a hearing on the buyer's successful motion to vacate a judgment entered in favor of the dealer. Cole v. ACR/Atlanta Car Remarketing, Inc., 295 Ga. App. 510, 672 S.E.2d 420 (2008).

In a defendant's prosecution for criminal trespass, the defendant's waiver of the defendant's right to a jury trial was voluntary and intelligent because while the timing of the colloquy was unusual as a witness had already testified on direct, no indication was given that the trial court would not have honored the defendant's right to a jury trial and the defendant indicated that the defendant was comfortable with waiving that right. Thomas v. State, 297 Ga. App. 416, 677 S.E.2d 433 (2009).

Finding that the defendant voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently waived the right to a jury trial was supported by a signed waiver of the right and trial counsel's testimony that counsel explained to the defendant that the defendant had a right to a jury trial and that counsel believed a judge would be more receptive than a jury to the technical legal defense they had discussed. Seitman v. State, 320 Ga. App. 646, 740 S.E.2d 368 (2013).

Record showed that the defendant knowingly and intelligently waived the defendant's constitutional right to a trial by jury as immediately before the trial began, the trial court asked the defendant if the defendant understood that the defendant had a right to a jury trial and asked whether the defendant was "voluntarily and knowingly waiving" that right, and defendant responded affirmatively to both questions. Only after receiving the defendant's oral assurance that the defendant wished to waive trial by jury and proceed to trial before the court did the trial court accept the defendant's waiver. Simmons v. State, 321 Ga. App. 743, 743 S.E.2d 434 (2013).

JUDICIAL DECISIONSANALYSIS

GENERAL CONSIDERATION

SELF-REPRESENTATION

RIGHT OF ACCESS

RIGHT TO BE PRESENT

General Consideration

Lawsuits and workers' compensation cases. — Every party to a lawsuit or a workers' compensation proceeding must be afforded the opportunity to be heard and to present a claim or defense, i.e., to have that party's day in court. Hart v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 165 Ga. App. 681, 302 S.E.2d 701 (1983).

Reviewability of constitutionality claim. — Because the Court of Appeals of Georgia was bound by the Supreme Court of Georgia's order transferring a personal injury plaintiff's appeal and expressly held that the trial court did not rule on whether O.C.G.A. § 9-11-68(d) was constitutional, the Court of Appeals declined to consider the defendants' arguments that the statute was constitutional. Buchan v. Hobby, 288 Ga. App. 478, 654 S.E.2d 444 (2007).

This paragraph does not guarantee to citizen of this state any particular form or method of state procedure. —

Its requirements are satisfied if the citizen has reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard, and to present a claim or defense, due regard being had to the nature of the proceeding and the character of the rights which may be affected by it. Zorn v. Walker, 206 Ga. 181, 56 S.E.2d 511 (1949); State v. Sanks, 225 Ga. 88, 166 S.E.2d 19 (1969), appeal dismissed, 401 U.S. 144, 91 S. Ct. 593, 27 L. Ed. 2d 741 (1971).

The constitutional provision set forth in this paragraph is plainly subject to the inherent power of the court to prescribe the manner in which the business of the court shall be conducted and to preserve the order and decorum of the trial to the furtherance of justice; this discretion of the trial court in assuming the general superintendence and control of the litigation before it is a point of extreme delicacy with which the Court of Appeals is reluctant to interfere, and interference will not be had unless there appears in the case something to demand imperatively the corrective interposition of the Court of Appeals. Davis v. Barnes, 158 Ga. App. 89, 279 S.E.2d 330 (1981).

No requirement that prosecutor make evidence available before trial.

— There is no statute or rule of procedure of force in this state which requires a solicitor general (now district attorney) or other prosecuting officer to make evidence, documentary or otherwise, available to the accused or the accused's counsel before trial. Blevins v. State, 220 Ga. 720, 141 S.E.2d 426 (1965).

Argument of counsel to jury is a stage of trial. Pierce v. State, 47 Ga. App. 830, 171 S.E. 731 (1933).

Absence of counsel without consent of court will not prevent reception of verdict. Nowell v. State, 18 Ga. App. 143, 88 S.E. 909 (1916).

Argument of counsel may be limited. — Ruling of court limiting argument by counsel was not contrary to the constitutional rights of the defendant. Lindsay v. State, 138 Ga. 818, 76 S.E. 369 (1912).

Inquiry into counsel's failure to challenge jury arrays required. — When a defendant claimed ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to pursue the defendant's requests to challenge the arrays of the grand and traverse juries and to secure the presence of certain defense witnesses, the trial court's summary overruling of the defendant's motions for change of counsel without a hearing or any further inquiry was error. Heard v. State, 173 Ga. App. 543, 327 S.E.2d 767 (1985).

No abuse of discretion by court in refusing extension of time for further argument after counsel consumed the hour allowed. Port Wentworth Term. Corp. v. Leavitt, 28 Ga. App. 82, 110 S.E. 686 (1922).

Preclusion of right of nonresident contractor to bring action for payment on contract not unconstitutional. — O.C.G.A. T. 48, C. 13, Art. 2 does not abridge a litigant's right to prosecute a cause of action in this state, as the same attack might lie logically against innumerable provisions of law which define the rights of litigants. Gorrell v. Fowler, 248 Ga. 801, 286 S.E.2d 13 (1982).

Right to be present at civil trial. — In a medical malpractice case in which the trial judge received and answered a note from the jury without advising the parties or counsel, the plaintiffs were entitled to a new trial because the plaintiffs substantial rights to be present under due process and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII, had been infringed. Plaintiffs were unable to demonstrate harm because the note was destroyed and the trial judge and jurors disagreed on the note's contents, preventing supplementing the record under O.C.G.A. § 5-6-41. Phillips v. Harmon, 297 Ga. 386, 774 S.E.2d 596 (2015).

Right to testify not violated. — Defendant's constitutional right to testify in the defendant's own behalf had not been violated. The trial court established that the defendant knew that the defendant had the right to testify if the defendant wanted to but elected not to after consulting with defense counsel. Branford v. State, 299 Ga. App. 890, 685 S.E.2d 731 (2009).

Recovery of attorney's fees. — Trial court erred in finding that the Tort Reform Act of 2005, O.C.G.A. § 9-11-68, violated Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII, since it permitted the recovery of attorney's fees absent the prerequisite showings of either O.C.G.A. § 9-15-14 or O.C.G.A. § 13-6-11, because there was no constitutional requirement that attorney's fees be awarded only pursuant to § 9-15-14 or § 13-6-11; in Georgia, attorney's fees are recoverable when authorized by some statutory provision or by contract, and § 9-11-68, is such a statutory provision authorizing the recovery of attorney's fees under specific circumstances. Smith v. Baptiste, 287 Ga. 23, 694 S.E.2d 83 (2010).

Presentation of legitimate defense precludes awarding attorney's fees.

— Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII right to defend one's own cause in court is a privilege granted to the defendant as well as the plaintiff; after a motorist being sued in a personal injury case testified that the rear-end collision at issue was caused when the injured person's car swerved suddenly into the motorist's lane, the injured person's witness, the driver of the other car, was a long-time friend of the injured person and that witness's testimony could have been self-serving, the motorist's deposition was consistent with the trial testimony, and the only substantial variation in the motorist's versions of events was between the police report, of which the officer had no independent recollection, and the motorist's testimony, there was a bona fide dispute as to liability and a reasonable defense, which precluded the award of attorney fees and expenses under O.C.G.A. § 13-6-11. Anderson v. Cayes, 278 Ga. App. 592, 630 S.E.2d 441 (2006).

Right to counsel at restitution hearing. — Trial court erred in refusing to allow defendant's counsel, who was present in the defendant's absence at the restitution hearing, to cross-examine the victim, produce evidence, or present any argument on the defendant's behalf because a criminal defendant is entitled to representation by counsel at all critical stages of the proceeding, including sentencing, which included any hearing on restitution. Gibson v. State, 319 Ga. App. 627, 737 S.E.2d 728 (2013).

New trial warranted due to ex parte communication with jury. — In a medical malpractice case, the plaintiffs were entitled to a new trial because the communication between the court and the jury was not disclosed to the plaintiffs or plaintiffs' counsel until after the verdict, the note and response were not made a part of the record, recollections differed as to the nature and timing of the communication, and it was impossible for the appellate court to determine if a defense verdict would have been demanded regardless of the effect of the communication on the jury. Phillips v. Harmon, 328 Ga. App. 686, 760 S.E.2d 235 (2014), aff'd in part and rev'd on other grounds, 297 Ga. 386, 774 S.E.2d 596 (2015), vacated on other grounds, 335 Ga. App. 450, 780 S.E.2d 914 (2015).

Self-Representation

This provision was primarily intended to guarantee right of self-representation in courts of this state. Dobbins v. Dobbins, 234 Ga. 347, 216 S.E.2d 102 (1975).

Every citizen has a constitutional right to represent oneself in court. Levadas v. Beach, 119 Ga. 613, 46 S.E. 864 (1904).

Trial court's failure to engage in the required Faretta colloquy and failure to rule on the defendant's unequivocal request amount to a violation of the defendant's constitutional right to self-representation. Wiggins v. State, 298 Ga. 366, 782 S.E.2d 31 (2016).

Corporation does not have constitutional right to self-representation.

— A corporation is not a person for purposes of exercising a constitutional right to legal self-representation and is not permitted to have as its legal representative an individual who is not licensed to practice law in the courts of this state. Eckles v. Atlanta Tech. Group, Inc., 267 Ga. 801, 485 S.E.2d 22 (1997), overruling Universal Scientific, Inc. v. Wolf, 165 Ga. App. 752, 302 S.E.2d 616 (1983); Knickerbocker Tax Systems, Inc. v. Texaco, Inc., 130 Ga. App. 383, 203 S.E.2d 290 (1973); Dixon v. Reliable Loans, Inc., 112 Ga. App. 618, 145 S.E.2d 77 (1965).

Request in mid-trial. — Denial of defendant's request to represent oneself, a request made after the testimony of the state's third witness, could not serve as the basis for reversal since a defendant cannot frivolously change the defendant's mind in midstream by asserting the defendant's right to self-representation in the middle of the defendant's trial. Thaxton v. State, 260 Ga. 141, 390 S.E.2d 841 (1990).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's request for self-representation because the request was made in the middle of, not before, trial. Mason v. State, 325 Ga. App. 609, 754 S.E.2d 397 (2014).

Given the defendant's pre-trial equivocation, the defendant's outbursts during the trial, and the defendant's own statements indicating that the defendant never truly wished to finish the trial without the assistance of trial counsel, the defendant's decision to change the defendant's mind about counsel midstream and request to proceed pro se was, at best, a frivolous response to the introduction of evidence which disturbed the defendant; thus, the trial court did not violate the defendant's right to proceed pro se. Owens v. State, No. S16A0058, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 264 (Mar. 7, 2016).

Right of defendant to act as co-counsel abolished. — Georgia Const. 1976, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. IX has been superseded by Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII; thus, a person no longer has the right to represent oneself and also be represented by an attorney, i.e., the right to act as co-counsel. Jones v. State, 171 Ga. App. 184, 319 S.E.2d 18 (1984).

Defendant is not entitled to have counsel and also to represent oneself. The defendant is entitled to either, not both. Simmons v. State, 186 Ga. App. 886, 369 S.E.2d 36, cert. denied, 186 Ga. App. 919, 369 S.E.2d 36 (1988).

Defendant does not have a right to be represented by counsel and also to be self represented. Boyd v. State, 195 Ga. App. 758, 395 S.E.2d 7 (1990); Worley v. State, 201 Ga. App. 704, 411 S.E.2d 760 (1991).

No right to simultaneous representation by counsel and self-representation.

— Neither the state constitution nor the federal constitution provides a defendant with a right to simultaneous representation by counsel and self-representation. Loden v. State, 199 Ga. App. 683, 406 S.E.2d 103 (1991).

The trial court properly refused to accept plaintiff's pro se filings since the plaintiff was represented by counsel at the time of the filings. Jacobsen v. Haldi, 210 Ga. App. 817, 437 S.E.2d 819 (1993).

Representation by both counsel and self permitted.

— As the right to represent oneself does not evaporate when an attorney is hired, the court erred in barring a party from self representation because an appearance had been made for the attorney by other attorneys. However, the court is not required to accept random appearance and filings by both the client and the client's attorneys. If a party and the attorneys are unable to coordinate their efforts so that they speak with one voice, the court is empowered to appoint a leading counsel who shall be the spokesperson. Cherry v. Coast House, Ltd., 257 Ga. 403, 359 S.E.2d 904 (1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1060, 108 S. Ct. 1015, 98 L. Ed. 2d 981 (1988).

Refusal to permit co-counsel status constitutional. — Defendant was not deprived of the defendant's constitutional right of self-representation through the trial court's refusal to permit the defendant to serve as co-counsel in defendant's own defense. Cargill v. State, 255 Ga. 616, 340 S.E.2d 891 (1986), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 1101, 107 S. Ct. 1328, 94 L. Ed. 2d 180 (1987); overruled on other grounds, Manzano v. State, 282 Ga. 557, 651 S.E.2d 661 (2007).

Trial court's requiring lead counsel to conduct examination of witnesses does not evince denial of the defendant's right of self-representation. Powers v. State, 168 Ga. App. 642, 310 S.E.2d 260 (1983).

No error in requiring defendant to designate lead counsel. — It was not error to require the defendant in a criminal case to designate either the defendant or the defendant's attorney as lead counsel since the defendant was not denied the right to participate as co-counsel or required to elect whether the defendant wanted self representation or wanted to permit appointed counsel to defend the defendant. Garvey v. State, 176 Ga. App. 268, 335 S.E.2d 640 (1985).

Appointment of counsel when defendant refuses to cooperate not denial of right. — When the trial judge had originally given the defendant the right to self-representation but retracted that right and reappointed a public defender after the defendant refused to participate in the trial, the defendant was not denied the right to self representation. Spencer v. State, 176 Ga. App. 313, 335 S.E.2d 661 (1985).

Lawyer, but not lay person, may act as co-counsel. — A lay person does not have the right to self representation and also to be represented by an attorney, but a lawyer does have such a right, subject to the authority of the trial court to limit the exercise of that right in order to insure the orderly disposition of matters before it.

Seagraves v. State, 259 Ga. 36, 376 S.E.2d 670 (1989); Miller v. State, 219 Ga. App. 213, 464 S.E.2d 621 (1995); Vick v. State, 237 Ga. App. 762, 516 S.E.2d 815 (1999).

Right of attorney to represent self. — Attorney could not be disqualified from self representation in a pro se action even though the attorney had previously represented the defendant in defending similar allegations in another case. Johnston v. Aderhold, 216 Ga. App. 487, 455 S.E.2d 84 (1995).

Although rules of professional conduct preclude attorneys from engaging in certain behavior considered unethical when they are exercising their privilege of representing others, such prohibitions do not necessarily apply when attorneys exercise their right, either statutory or constitutional, to represent themselves as parties to litigation. Johnston v. Aderhold, 216 Ga. App. 487, 455 S.E.2d 84 (1995).

Voluntary, knowing, and intelligent waiver of right to counsel. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's pro se motion for new trial by failing to warn the defendant of the dangers of self-representation because the trial court's colloquy with the defendant supported a finding that the defendant voluntarily, knowingly, and intelligently waived the right to counsel; the defendant, who was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol to the extent that the defendant was a less safe driver, was a long-standing member of the Georgia Bar with experience in trying driving under the influence cases, and was assisted by a licensed member of the Bar sitting at counsel table. Davis v. State, 301 Ga. App. 484, 687 S.E.2d 854 (2009), cert. dismissed, No. S10C0633, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 339 (Ga. 2010).

Parent's right to represent themselves in appeal of child's delinquency adjudication. — Child's parents had the right to appeal the juvenile court's delinquency adjudication of their child, to participate in the appellate process, and to represent themselves. In the Interest of J.L.B., 280 Ga. App. 556, 634 S.E.2d 514 (2006).

No abuse of discretion to refuse to allow defendant to cross-examine witness. — Since leading counsel was conducting the cross-examination of a witness, the court did not abuse the court's discretion in refusing to allow the defendant (an attorney-at-law) also to conduct the cross-examination. Moyers v. State, 61 Ga. App. 324, 6 S.E.2d 438 (1939).

No right to address jury when pleading set up no defense. — When a person is sued, and the answer which the person makes sets up no defense, and under the person's own evidence the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict against the person, the person has no cause and no right to appear and address the jury to whom the case has been submitted. Gunn v. Head, 116 Ga. 325, 42 S.E. 343 (1902).

Judge has discretion to permit accused to conduct part or all of cause. — If a party is represented by counsel, it is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial judge upon timely request as to whether such party may or may not conduct part or all of the cause. Such limitation does not violate the constitutional right of an individual to defend oneself. Hiatt v. State, 144 Ga. App. 298, 240 S.E.2d 894 (1977).

Prohibition against deprivation of right to defend cause includes statutory rights of appeal. — Under the Constitution, no person may be deprived of the right to prosecute or defend a cause in any of the courts of the state. Although the right of appeal is wholly statutory, it is available to any party who comes within the statute granting the right, and cannot be denied or abridged by the courts except as authorized by the statute. Hearing v. Johnson, 105 Ga. App. 408, 124 S.E.2d 655 (1962).

Waiver of right to appellate counsel. — While a defendant has a right to pursue an appeal pro se under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, it must be preceded by an appropriate waiver of the right to appellate counsel. Costello v. State, 240 Ga. App. 87, 522 S.E.2d 572 (1999).

Right to self-representation on appeal. — Trial court erred in refusing to allow a defendant to represent oneself at the hearing for defendant's motion for new trial or on appeal because, while the federal constitution did not recognize a defendant's right to self-representation on appeal, Georgia case law and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII recognized a right to self-representation on appeal. Cook v. State, 296 Ga. App. 496, 675 S.E.2d 245 (2009).

Provision for self-representation incidentally recognizes right of court access. — This paragraph is intended to guarantee the right of self-representation in the courts of this state or by an attorney and as only incidentally recognizing the inherent right of access to the courts. Bloomfield v. Liggett & Myers, Inc., 230 Ga. 484, 198 S.E.2d 144 (1973).

Plaintiff has right to sign plaintiff's own petition. Lanier v. Lanier, 79 Ga. App. 131, 53 S.E.2d 131 (1949).

No violation of right if defendant admits inability to represent oneself. — When the defendant requested self-representation at trial but, upon hearing the trial court's warnings about self-representation admitted to being incapable of self-representation, the trial court did not err by proceeding with the trial with the existing appointed counsel representing the defendant. Lovelace v. State, 262 Ga. App. 690, 586 S.E.2d 386 (2003).

Failure to make unequivocal request for self-representation. — Defendant's conviction of theft by taking, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-2, was supported by sufficient circumstantial evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 and the trial court also did not violate the defendant's right to self-representation under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII, as the defendant made no unequivocal request for self representation. Crutchfield v. State, 269 Ga. App. 69, 603 S.E.2d 462 (2004).

Ineffective assistance of counsel. — When a criminal defendant elects self representation, either solely or in conjunction with representation or assistance by an attorney, the defendant will not thereafter be heard to assert a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel with respect to any stage of the proceedings wherein the defendant was counsel. Mullins v. Lavoie, 249 Ga. 411, 290 S.E.2d 472 (1982); Bole v. State, 178 Ga. App. 508, 343 S.E.2d 729 (1986).

Assertion of right to be represented by counsel does not constitute waiver of right of self-representation. Burney v. State, 244 Ga. 33, 257 S.E.2d 543, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 970, 100 S. Ct. 463, 62 L. Ed. 2d 385 (1979).

No waiver of right to self-representation. — Because there was no affirmative evidence that the defendant wavered or equivocated in the desire to proceed pro se, the defendant's mere silence at the start of trial was insufficient to establish a knowing and intelligent waiver of the defendant's already invoked right to self-representation. Wiggins v. State, 298 Ga. 366, 782 S.E.2d 31 (2016).

Denial of right to self representation not found. — Denial of a defendant's motion to participate at trial as co-counsel deprived the defendant of the defendant's state constitutional right of self-representation. However, when the evidence of guilt was overwhelming, in addition to the fact that the defendant was represented by two able counsel who conducted the defendant's defense in an extremely competent manner, denial of the motion constituted harmless error. Burney v. State, 244 Ga. 33, 257 S.E.2d 543, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 970, 100 S. Ct. 463, 62 L. Ed. 2d 385 (1979).

Defendant was not wrongfully denied the constitutional right to self-representation because inasmuch as the defendant's handwritten note sought to dismiss trial counsel and replace them with retained counsel, a public defender, or the defendant, the communication was not an unequivocal assertion of the defendant's right to self-representation. Danenberg v. State, 291 Ga. 439, 729 S.E.2d 315 (2012), cert. denied, U.S. , 133 S. Ct. 941, 184 L. Ed. 2d 726 (2013).

Trial court did not err by failing to allow the defendant to fire counsel mid-trial and proceed pro se as the trial court indicated that the court did so to protect the defendant's best interests and the defendant's decision to change the defendant's mind about counsel midstream was, at best, a frivolous response to the introduction of evidence which disturbed the defendant. Owens v. State, No. S16A0058, 2016 Ga.

LEXIS 264 (Mar. 7, 2016).

Right of Access

No general "right of access." — The sole purpose underlying the revision and adoption of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was to define and protect the right of an individual to self representation in the courts of this state, and not to afford a general "right of access." Nelms v. Georgian Manor Condominium Ass'n, 253 Ga. 410, 321 S.E.2d 330 (1984).

In a suit challenging a court's electronic filing fee system, the trial court did not err when the court granted the motion to dismiss the plaintiff's claims under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII and O.C.G.A. § 1-2-6(a)(6) because Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was never intended to provide a right of access to the courts and the Georgia Supreme Court has established that there is no express constitutional right of access to the courts under the Georgia Constitution. Best Jewelry Mfg. Co. v. Reed Elsevier Inc., 334 Ga. App. 826, 780 S.E.2d 689 (2015), cert. denied, 2016 Ga. LEXIS 286 (Ga. 2016).

Payment of damages into state treasury. — Paragraph (e)(2) of O.C.G.A. § 51-12-5.1, requiring that 75 percent of punitive damages awarded in a product liability action be paid into the state treasury, does not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII. State v. Moseley, 263 Ga. 680, 436 S.E.2d 632 (1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1107, 114 S. Ct. 2101, 128 L. Ed. 2d 663 (1994).

High-Voltage Safety Act, O.C.G.A. § 46-3-30 et seq., does not deprive injured persons of due process by abolishing a common law claim, since the legislature has the authority to abolish such claims prior to their accrual. Santana v. Georgia Power Co., 269 Ga. 127, 498 S.E.2d 521 (1998).

Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII is a right of choice between self-representation and representation by counsel provision, and not an access to the courts provision; thus, there is no express constitutional right of access to the courts under the Georgia Constitution. Couch v. Parker, 280 Ga. 580, 630 S.E.2d 364 (2006).

Trial court's dismissal of a driver's negligence lawsuit filed against an insured's insurer did not deprive the driver of any Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial or right of access to the courts under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII, given that the Seventh Amendment did not apply to suits in state courts and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII dealt with a litigant's choice of either self-representation or representation by counsel, not access to the courts. Crane v. Lazaro, 281 Ga. App. 127, 635 S.E.2d 319 (2006), cert. denied, 2006 Ga. LEXIS 907 (Ga. 2006); cert. dismissed, mot. denied, 549 U.S. 1200, 127 S. Ct. 1278, 167 L. Ed. 2d 69 (2007).

In an action which represented the tenth time a litigant had made the same argument that summary disposition of a prior state court case deprived the litigant of a federal Seventh Amendment right to a jury trial, a motion for a new trial was properly dismissed, given that: (1) the claims therein had been previously addressed and rejected; (2) Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was a right of choice provision, not a right of access provision; and (3) the motion was both untimely under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-40(a), and filed in the wrong county court, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 9-11-60(b). Crane v. Poteat, 282 Ga. App. 182, 638 S.E.2d 335 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 54 (Ga. 2007); cert. dismissed, 551 U.S. 1101, 127 S. Ct. 2912, 168 L. Ed. 2d 241 (2007).

Constitutional right to be heard in courts is granted defendants as well as plaintiffs. Traders Ins. Co. v. Mann, 118 Ga. 381, 45 S.E. 426 (1903).

Overbroad restrictions unconstitutional. — After the court required any future suits filed by the defendant to be certified as a prima facie case by an attorney, this condition compelled the defendant to incur an expense, albeit relatively minor, of hiring an attorney despite the constitutional right to self representation, and contravened constitutional bounds by its overbreadth. In re Carter, 235 Ga. App. 551, 510 S.E.2d 91 (1998).

Defendant should not be deprived of liberty without opportunity to be heard. — To deprive a defendant of liberty upon the theory that the defendant has violated any of the rules and regulations prescribed in a suspended or probated sentence without giving the defendant a notice and opportunity to be heard upon the question of whether or not the defendant has violated such rules and regulations would be to violate one of the fundamentals of our system of jurisprudence that a person shall not be deprived of liberty without due process of law, which includes notice and an opportunity to be heard. Lester v. Foster, 207 Ga. 596, 63 S.E.2d 402 (1951).

When defendant has right to present case though not on time. — Although defendant might have been in contempt of court for failing to appear at the time set forth in the subpoena, to deny the defendant the right to present the defendant's case when the defendant arrives prior to the close of the plaintiff's evidence or before the defendant's counsel has waived the right to present evidence would constitute a violation of the defendant's due process rights under the Constitution. Sawyer v. Dogwood Stables, Inc., 157 Ga. App. 534, 278 S.E.2d 115 (1981).

Law and Constitution require appointment of counsel for indigent and opportunity to consult client and prepare defense. — When the law of the state requires the appointment of counsel for indigent persons — and the law of Georgia does — certainly in a capital case when the defendant is unable to engage a lawyer and is incapacitated by ignorance, illiteracy, physical disability, or the like, to adequately make the defendant's own defense, due process of law requires that the court assign counsel for the defendant, competent to serve, and who shall give more than casual or perfunctory service to the prisoner. Lip service only will not do. Furthermore, the Constitution also requires that a fair opportunity shall be afforded such counsel to consult the client and to prepare a defense against the charge. Coates v. Lawrence, 46 F. Supp. 414 (S.D. Ga. 1942), aff'd, 131 F.2d 110 (5th Cir. 1942), cert. denied, 318 U.S. 759, 63 S. Ct. 532, 87 L. Ed. 1132 (1943).

Refusal of offer to appoint counsel in criminal case dispenses appointment. Stokes v. State, 73 Ga. 816 (1884).

Right of representation in court does not include layman inmate. — The right of a person to prosecute one's own cause in any court of this state, in person or by attorney, as guaranteed under this paragraph refers to an attorney-at-law in the commonly accepted meaning of the term and as defined by the laws of this state. It does not include a layman inmate of the Georgia State Prison. Green v. Caldwell, 229 Ga. 650, 193 S.E.2d 847 (1972).

Right to counsel does not guarantee representation by out-of-state counsel. — A defendant, although guaranteed the right to counsel by both the federal and state Constitutions, has no guarantee that the defendant can be represented by out-of-state counsel. Williams v. State, 157 Ga. App. 494, 277 S.E.2d 781 (1981).

Right to reasonably effective assistance of counsel, not errorless counsel. — The constitutional right to assistance of counsel ensures not errorless counsel, and not counsel judged ineffective by hindsight, but counsel reasonably likely to render and rendering reasonably effective assistance. Austin v. Carter, 248 Ga. 775, 285 S.E.2d 542 (1982).

Forum non conveniens could not be invoked because plaintiff chose to prosecute cause in Georgia courts. — Under the provisions of the Georgia Constitution, which provides that "No person shall be deprived of the right to prosecute or defend his own cause in any of the courts of this state," the trial courts are required to exercise jurisdiction of an action brought by a resident of Georgia, as administrator of a decedent who was a resident of Georgia, against a nonresident corporation having an office, agent, and place of doing business in Georgia, upon a cause of action arising in another state, and the rule of forum non conveniens could not be invoked by the defendant to oust the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Wiggins, 77 Ga. App. 756, 49 S.E.2d 909 (1948).

Exercise of right of access subjects one to court's power to control proceedings. — One having exercised one's inherent right of access and having pleaded one's case, in person, or by attorney, or both, subjects the person to the inherent power of the court to control its proceedings and to issue a stay in proceedings. Bloomfield v. Liggett & Myers, Inc., 230 Ga. 484, 198 S.E.2d 144 (1973).

Broad discretion of trial court to regulate conduct must not result in deprivation of right. — This paragraph is plainly subject to the inherent power of the court to prescribe the manner in which the business of the court shall be conducted and to preserve the order and decorum of the trial to the furtherance of justice. The discretion of the trial judge in regulating the conduct of counsel, parties, and witnesses, and in prescribing the manner in which the business shall be conducted, is broad and is ample to enable the judge in any case to effect the purposes for which is inherently the judge's; but the judge's discretion is not unlimited, for it must not be abused and it may not be exercised in such a way as to involve a deprivation of right. Loomis v. State, 78 Ga. App. 153, 51 S.E.2d 13 (1948); Jackson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 496, 254 S.E.2d 739 (1979), but see Vick v. State, 237 Ga. App. 762, 516 S.E.2d 815 (1999); Moody v. State, 153 Ga. App. 866, 267 S.E.2d 291 (1980); Jackson v. State, 154 Ga. App. 367, 268 S.E.2d 418 (1980).

Prisoner not denied right to prosecute cause in habeas corpus court. — Ga. L. 1961, p. 835, § 3 (see now O.C.G.A. § 9-14-42) is not unconstitutional since it does not violate this paragraph because a prisoner is not denied the prisoner's right to prosecute the cause in the habeas corpus court. Reed v. Hopper, 235 Ga. 298, 219 S.E.2d 409 (1975).

Right to be Present

Every person charged with offense has right to be present during every stage of trial. Frank v. State, 142 Ga. 741, 83 S.E. 645, 1915D L.R.A. 817, writ of error denied, 235 U.S. 694, 35 S. Ct. 208, 59 L. Ed. 429 (1914); Palmer v. State, 155 Ga. App. 368, 271 S.E.2d 24 (1980).

Although the state's counsel had been arguing the case only about two minutes and it did not appear that any waiver of the defendant's presence, express or otherwise, had been made either by the defendant or the defendant's counsel, the court could not say that the defendant's constitutional right was not violated. Pierce v. State, 47 Ga. App. 830, 171 S.E. 731 (1933).

The accused and the accused's counsel have the right to be present at every stage of the proceedings and personally see and know what is being done in the case. To say that no injury results when it appears that what occurred in their absence was regular and legal would, in effect, practically do away with this great and important right, one element of which is to see to it that what does take place is in accord with good law and good practice. Wilson v. State, 212 Ga. 73, 90 S.E.2d 557 (1955).

Although defendants who were tried together were not present when the trial court discussed the issue of whether it would dismiss a charge of aggravated assault against one of them, both defendants acquiesced in the proceeding when their counsel did not object and they thereafter remained silent when the subject was brought to their attention, and the Georgia Supreme Court rejected their claim that their convictions for malice murder and other crimes had to be reversed because their right to be present during critical stages of trial was abridged. Jackson v. State, 278 Ga. 235, 599 S.E.2d 129 (2004).

Right to be present during hearings. — Defendant had the right to be present at a hearing in the separate trial of the defendant's coindictor at which the court addressed issues concerning a possible conflict of interest caused by the fact that the defendant and the defendant's coindictor had retained the same attorney. Rice v. State, 226 Ga. App. 770, 487 S.E.2d 517 (1997).

Right to be present during sentencing hearing. — Because both the defendant and defense counsel were present for the entire sentencing hearing when the information relied upon by the court for its sentencing decision was admitted, and the defendant had the opportunity to present evidence and to object, but did neither, the defendant's constitutional right to be present under Ga. Const. 1983,

Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was not violated. Small v. State, 285 Ga. App. 445, 646 S.E.2d 292 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 876 (Ga. 2008).

No right to be present at sidebar conference. — Defendant's right to be present was not violated due to the defendant's absence from sidebar conferences. Smith v. State, 319 Ga. App. 590, 737 S.E.2d 700 (2013).

In-chambers hearing. — Defendant's right to be present at trial under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was violated when the trial court questioned a juror in chambers without defense counsel or the prosecutor present, dismissed the juror, and replaced the juror with an alternate; defendant did not acquiesce in the illegal proceedings and repudiated counsel's silent waiver of the rights at the first opportunity, the hearing on the motion for a new trial, when defendant was represented by new counsel. Sammons v. State, 279 Ga. 386, 612 S.E.2d 785 (2005).

No right to be present at discussion of whether character in issue. — Discussion between the trial court and counsel over whether the defendant's character had been placed in issue by questions from the defense regarding the defendant's service in Vietnam and the defendant's work with children was not a critical stage of the proceeding at which the defendant had the right to be present. Defendant was present when defense counsel made a motion to strike the character evidence and when the judge ruled on the motion. Lyde v. State, 311 Ga. App. 512, 716 S.E.2d 572 (2011).

Right to be present inapplicable to voluntary absence of accused. — Principle that a person accused of a crime has the right to be present at all stages of the trial is not applicable when the accused is voluntarily absent on bail. Wilson v. State, 212 Ga. 73, 90 S.E.2d 557 (1955).

Voluntary absence from trial. — When the defendant was out on bail and was voluntarily absent from the proceedings, the defendant waived the defendant's confrontation rights and the defendant's right to be present during the trial. Estep v. State, 238 Ga. App. 170, 518 S.E.2d 176 (1999).

Right of accused to be present at all stages of trial ranks among defendant's most substantial rights, and it ranks next in importance to, if not on a par with, the defendant's right to be presumed to be innocent until proven guilty. Pierce v. State, 47 Ga. App. 830, 171 S.E. 731 (1933).

Trial court erred in removing defendants from the courtroom during the testimony, out of the presence of the jury, or rebuttal witnesses for the state. Perry v. State, 216 Ga. App. 749, 456 S.E.2d 89 (1995).

Right to be present cannot be waived by attorney except by express authority of defendant. Palmer v. State, 155 Ga. App. 368, 271 S.E.2d 24 (1980).

Presence of defendant during voir dire of jury. — Defendant's absence during the voir dire of prospective jurors violated defendant's right to be present at trial and required reversal. Goodroe v. State, 224 Ga. App. 378, 480 S.E.2d 378 (1997), overruling Smith v. State, 182 Ga. App. 623, 356 S.E.2d 702 (1987).

Defendant was entitled to a hearing to determine whether the defendant knowingly acquiesced in the waiver by defense counsel of defendant's presence during the voir dire of certain jurors conducted in the judge's chambers. Russell v. State, 230 Ga. App. 546, 497 S.E.2d 36 (1998).

Objection to absence during voir dire waived. — Defendant waived error by the trial judge in questioning and dismissing a potential juror out of defendant's presence since the defendant was advised after the judge returned to the courtroom that the juror had been excused, yet made no objection until further voir dire was completed and the jury was selected and sworn. Harmon v. State, 224 Ga. App. 890, 482 S.E.2d 730 (1997).

Right to testify as witness is personal right and is an adjunct or portion of the fundamental concept of freedom and liberty protected by Ga. Const. 1945, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. III (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I) and Ga. Const. 1945, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. IX (see now Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII). Carter v. Seaboard Coast Line R.R., 392 F. Supp. 494 (S.D. Ga. 1974).

Presence of counsel is no substitute for that of man on trial; both should be present. Pierce v. State, 47 Ga. App. 830, 171 S.E. 731 (1933).

Defendant in this state may personally waive the right to be present or defense counsel may waive this right for the defendant when the waiver is made in the defendant's presence. Wilson v. State, 212 Ga. 73, 90 S.E.2d 557 (1955).

Waiver of right. — Defendant waived the right to be present at trial by choosing not to attend the first day of the sentencing phase after a medical expert examined the defendant, treated the defendant, and pronounced the defendant fit to proceed. Dawson v. State, 283 Ga. 315, 658 S.E.2d 755 (2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 169, 172 L.Ed.2d 122 (2008).

Defendant waived the right to be present during the bench conferences discussing the dismissal of a juror and the ultimate removal of the juror by failing to voice any objection regarding the defendant's absence from that portion of the trial until the proceedings before the Supreme Court of Georgia. Zamora v. State, 291 Ga. 512, 731 S.E.2d 658 (2012).

Requirements for effective waiver of right. — The right in a criminal trial to be present at all stages of the trial is an important right of the defendant, guaranteed by our Constitution, and in order for the waiver of counsel to be binding on the defendant, it must be made in the defendant's presence or by the defendant's express authority, or be subsequently acquiesced in by the defendant. Wilson v. State, 212 Ga. 73, 90 S.E.2d 557 (1955).

Deprivation of right to be present entitles defendant to new trial. — When the defendant was deprived of the right to be present at every stage and proceeding of the defendant's trial, the defendant is entitled to a new trial. Palmer v. State, 155 Ga. App. 368, 271 S.E.2d 24 (1980).

Because no evidence supported a finding that the defendants were aware of their right to be present in chambers during voir dire and jury selection, their convictions would be reversed and they would be granted a new trial. Russell v. State, 236 Ga. App. 645, 512 S.E.2d 913 (1999).

Because the defendant had a right to be present in the courtroom during voir dire of the jury, regarding some suspicious telephone calls that some had been receiving, in order to assist trial counsel in effectively examining the jurors regarding their abilities to be fair and impartial, and the defendant did not waive said right, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. Vaughn v. State, 281 Ga. App. 475, 636 S.E.2d 163 (2006).

Defendant was entitled to a reversal of the defendant's convictions for improper lane change, serious injury by vehicle while driving under the influence, and misdemeanor obstruction of an officer as the trial judge violated the defendant's right to be present at all stages of the proceedings by responding to a jury inquiry in writing that the jury should continue to deliberate and try to reach an unanimous verdict without contacting defense counsel and defendant. Given the necessary considerations and significant ramifications, instructions to the deliberating jury concerning its reported deadlocked status on several counts constituted a substantive communication at a critical stage in the defendant's criminal prosecution. Wells v. State, 297 Ga. App. 153, 676 S.E.2d 821 (2009).

Motion for new trial should have been granted based upon defendant's absence from courtroom. — When a statement by counsel that counsel would waive the right of the defendant to be present during the argument of the solicitor general (now district attorney), up to that time, was not in the presence of the defendant, was not authorized by the defendant, and was made during the defendant's involuntary absence from the courtroom, and this alleged waiver of the defendant's presence by defense counsel was repudiated by the defendant at the first opportunity, upon information received by the defendant subsequently to the verdict, it was error to overrule the ground of the motion for new trial based upon the defendant's involuntary absence from the courtroom during the part of the argument of the solicitor general (now district attorney). Wilson v. State, 212 Ga. 73, 90 S.E.2d 557 (1955).

Conflict with ruling that counsel waived irregularity of receiving verdict in involuntary absence of defendant. — Statement in Morris v. State, 177 Ga. 365, 369, 170 S.E. 217 (1933), indicating that it was the opinion of the court that the silence of the defendant's counsel would waive the irregularity of receiving a verdict in the involuntary absence of the defendant, is in direct conflict with rulings in older, full-bench decisions and the case was decided on other points. Wilson v. State, 212 Ga. 73, 90 S.E.2d 557 (1955).

Reversible error for jury to view truck in absence of defendant. — After the trial court granted a request that the jury be allowed to view a truck, and directed the bailiff to take the jury to see the truck, but permitted no lawyers, no witnesses, and no parties to go with the jury, despite the request of defense counsel to go with the jury, this was reversible error. Palmer v. State, 155 Ga. App. 368, 271 S.E.2d 24 (1980).

Harmless error for judge's contact with jury. — Even if the defendant's right to be present at all stages of a trial under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was violated, any error was harmless in a situation in which the trial judge, with the approval of defense counsel, entered the jury room alone to respond to the jury's note, was told by the jury that it had reached a verdict but was unsure if it was proper, told the jury to return the verdict in the courtroom, and left the jury room. Grimes v. State, 280 Ga. App. 65, 633 S.E.2d 401 (2006).

Prisoner should be present for hearing for resentencing. — In a hearing for resentencing when the prisoner would have substantial rights, the prisoner should be allowed to be present in the trial court for resentencing. Williams v. Ricketts, 234 Ga. 716, 217 S.E.2d 292 (1975).

Involuntary absence of defendant does not affect date set for execution of sentence. — The order of a trial judge fixing a new date for the execution of the sentence after the original date has passed is not void because the defendant is involuntarily absent and has not waived or authorized anyone else to waive the defendant's right to be present at the time and place of resentencing, and the passage of such order is not violative of the plaintiff's rights under the several provisions of the state and federal Constitutions. McBurnett v. Balkcom, 207 Ga. 452, 62 S.E.2d 180 (1950).

Proceeding in absence of accused does not always require new trial. — In some instances, because of the particular facts of the case, some proceedings in the trial of an accused in the accused's absence will not require the grant of a new trial. Wanzer v. State, 232 Ga. 523, 207 S.E.2d 466 (1974).

Although all persons accused of a crime in Georgia are guaranteed the right to be present at all stages of trial by Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII, and thus, the defendants on trial must be present when the court takes any action materially affecting their case, responding to a jury's request to see a transcript of testimony was held not to be prejudicial to the defendant, even though it was made outside the presence of the defendant, because the trial court simply denied the request in writing and told the jury to rely on their recollection of the evidence. Buckner v. State, 253 Ga. App. 294, 558 S.E.2d 823 (2002).

Because the defendant's right to be present at trial did not extend to any and all communications between the trial courts and potential jurors, the defendant had no right to be present for an out of court conversation between the trial judge and one of the jurors from the venire panel held while the judge was fulfilling the administrative duties as the presiding judge for the circuit. Thus, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial as a result. Payne v. State, 290 Ga. App. 589, 660 S.E.2d 405 (2008).

Trial court did not err by proceeding with the third day of trial in the defendant's absence because there was evidence that supported a finding that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily chose to be absent from the courtroom as jail personnel asked the defendant if the defendant wanted to go to court and the defendant responded in the negative. LaGon v. State, 334 Ga. App. 14, 778 S.E.2d 32 (2015).

Trial court committed no error by beginning the defendant's trial in the defendant's absence, given that the defendant was in custody and was informed of the right to be present and that the trial would proceed without the defendant, but the defendant made clear that the defendant would not enter the courtroom without a fight. LaGon v. State, 334 Ga. App. 14, 778 S.E.2d 32 (2015).

Provision for appearance by brief meets constitutional requirement of this paragraph. Finley v. Thompson, 100 Ga. App. 508, 112 S.E.2d 166 (1959).

Court's sua sponte declaration of a mistrial in the absence of defendant and defense counsel did not deprive the defendant of the defendant's right to be present when all events upon which the court would rule had occurred in the defendant's presence and only legal consideration, not further proceeding, was called for. Bishop v. State, 176 Ga. App. 357, 335 S.E.2d 742 (1985).

Communication with jury outside presence of defendant. — Trial court erred in communicating with the jury outside the presence of the appellant and appellant's counsel when the court denied the jury's request to see the transcript of an eyewitness' statements to police in writing without notifying or consulting either side. Burtts v. State, 269 Ga. 402, 499 S.E.2d 326 (1998).

Trial court committed reversible error by having a colloquy with a juror in the judge's chambers in defendant's absence and, since an attempted waiver by counsel was made without the knowledge or consent of defendant, it was not a valid waiver of defendant's right to be present at all stages of the trial proceedings. Pennie v. State, 271 Ga. 419, 520 S.E.2d 448 (1999).

Defendant failed to rebut the trial court's findings that no communication between the trial court and the jury regarding the return of a verdict by the jury occurred outside of the presence of defendant and the counsel and that the trial court did not in the case, or in any other case, call for the return of a verdict until the parties and their counsel were present in the courtroom; it could be inferred from the notation in the transcript cited by defendant only that the court reporter was not present, not the whereabouts of defendant and the counsel. Hall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 203, 614 S.E.2d 844 (2005).

Defendants' rights to be present under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII were violated because a trial court excused a juror during ex parte proceedings in the defendants' absence and without the defendants' knowledge or consent, and the defendants' absence was neither consented to nor waived; although neither counsel objected to the trial court's action, such inaction on the part of counsel did not constitute a waiver for the clients, and since the defendants were not informed of the ex parte excusal of the juror, the defendants' could not knowingly acquiesce to the waiver on the part of defense counsel. Ward v. State, 288 Ga. 641, 706 S.E.2d 430 (2011).

Bench conference. — Bench conference which took place when a bailiff informed the trial court that a juror thought that the juror might know the victim's parents, was not a critical stage of the proceedings at which the defendant had a right to be present since the juror was not actually present during this brief colloquy, since the judge asked the attorneys if they wanted to question this juror further and since, when defense counsel indicated that the counsel wanted to ask the juror some more questions, the conference ended. Bennett v. State, 279 Ga. App. 371, 631 S.E.2d 402 (2006).

Because, at the bench conference, the trial court resolved a purely legal question of whether a first-offender felon was qualified to serve on a jury, the defendant had no constitutional right to be present. Pack v. State, 335 Ga. App. 783, 783 S.E.2d 146 (2016).

Harmless error. — After a lunch break during the guilt phase of the trial, the trial court made a few remarks to the jury while awaiting the return of the defendant, and the trial judge later restated the judge's comments, as well as the judge could remember them, into the record, relating that the judge had told the jury that the trial would be slightly delayed because the defendant had eaten late and had congratulated one of the jurors for having been elected to the board of education, there was no violation of O.C.G.A. § 5-6-41 or O.C.G.A. § 17-8-5, and any possible constitutional error relating to the defendant's right to be present during all stages of the defendant's trial was clearly harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Westbrook v. State, 256 Ga. 776, 353 S.E.2d 504 (1987).

When, in a criminal trial, the trial court responded to a jury question during deliberations outside of the presence of defendant or defendant's counsel, this was an error, but the error did not require the reversal of defendant's conviction because it was not shown that anything about the communication was prejudicial or that the nature of the communication hastened the verdict finding defendant guilty or caused a juror to yield, as each juror affirmed that the juror arrived at the verdict freely and voluntarily, that the verdict remained the juror's own, and the trial court instructed the jurors to consult with each other during deliberations, but not to surrender an honest opinion to reach a verdict, so there was no reasonable probability that the trial court's erroneous communication contributed to the jury's verdict. Barnett v. State, 276 Ga. App. 238, 623 S.E.2d 136 (2005).

Because the trial transcript failed to support the defendant's claim that the trial court erroneously ordered the defendant be excluded from the courtroom during a critical stage of the proceeding, and in front of the jury, and given what transpired during the brief period that the defendant was absent from the courtroom, no due process violation occurred. Arnold v. State, 284 Ga. App. 598, 645 S.E.2d 68 (2007).

No ineffective assistance of counsel shown by waiver of arraignment. — Waiver of arraignment provides a basis for a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel only if the defendant can show the defendant was unaware of the charges against the defendant. Biggs v. State, 281 Ga. 627, 642 S.E.2d 74 (2007).

In the absence of any claim or evidence that the defendant was not aware of the charges against the defendant, the defendant failed to show that defense counsel's performance was deficient; therefore, the defendant's claim that the waiver of arraignment violated the defendant's right to be present at all critical stages of the proceedings against the defendant was rejected on appeal. Biggs v. State, 281 Ga. 627, 642 S.E.2d 74 (2007).

Failure to consult before responding to deadlocked jury. — A defendant's right to be present under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII was not violated by the trial court's failure to consult with the defendant and counsel prior to responding to the jury's communication that the jury was deadlocked. Lowery v. State, 282 Ga. 68, 646 S.E.2d 67, cert. denied, 552 U.S. 999, 128 S. Ct. 508, 169 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2007).

No right to be present at charge conference during jury deliberations. — There was no violation of the defendant's right to be present at all proceedings under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I,

Para. XII when the defendant was excluded from a charge conference that occurred during jury deliberations as that was not a stage of a criminal proceeding that invoked the right to be present. Milligan v. State, 307 Ga. App. 1, 703 S.E.2d 1 (2010).

Right to be present regardless of whether the party's physical or mental condition may evoke sympathy. — Party may not be excluded from the party's own trial simply because the party's physical and mental condition may evoke sympathy. Instead, trial courts can and should address the risk of undue sympathy using jury instructions and other common and time-tested means of ensuring that both parties receive a fair trial, without infringing on the parties' right to be present. Kesterson v. Jarrett, 291 Ga. 380, 728 S.E.2d 557 (2012).

Right of self-representation before probate court. — Since a court of ordinary (now probate court) is a court of this state, a person has a constitutional right to self representation therein. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. U73-66.

General Consideration

Implied consent provision unconstitutional. — Implied consent provision in O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55(a) is unconstitutional as violative of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, and the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution because it authorizes a search and seizure, chemical testing of a suspect's blood, without probable cause that the suspect had been driving while impaired when the suspect was involved in an accident involving serious injuries or fatalities. Cooper v. State, 277 Ga. 282, 587 S.E.2d 605 (2003).

Right of privacy is derived from natural law and embraced within the absolute right of personal security and liberty. The unlawful entry by an officer of the home, if it is such as to constitute an invasion of the right of privacy of the wife of the head of the family and results in fright and shock to her, is such a willful and intentional tort as to give her cause of action. Walker v. Whittle, 83 Ga. App. 445, 64 S.E.2d 87 (1951).

State must be able to point to facts which warrant intrusion on right of privacy. — The mere fact that an officer feels it is unlikely that an individual has regular business where the individual is found is not sufficient alone to authorize an intrusion into an individual's right of privacy. The state must be able to point to specific and articulable facts which, together with rational inferences drawn therefrom, reasonably warrant an intrusion. Howard v. State, 150 Ga. App. 847, 258 S.E.2d 652 (1979).

Public interest in privacy subordinated to public interest in law enforcement. — When the police have reasonable cause to believe that public toilet stalls are being used in the commission of crime, and when they confine their activities to the times when such crimes are most likely to occur, they are entitled to institute clandestine surveillance, even though they do not have probable cause to believe that the particular persons whom they may thus catch in flagrante delicto have committed or will commit the crime. The public interest in its privacy must, to that extent, be subordinated to the public interest in law enforcement. Mitchell v. State, 120 Ga. App. 447, 170 S.E.2d 765 (1969).

Commercial sexual activity. — The right of privacy conferred by the Georgia constitution, like that in the federal constitution, does not extend to commercial sexual activity. Morrison v. State, 272 Ga. 129, 526 S.E.2d 336 (2000).

Police agents' listening to conversations outside apartment door in public hallway to ascertain probable cause is proper. — Police agents' entry into a public hallway and listening to conversations inside an apartment by placing their ears to the front door was proper to ascertain if probable cause existed for the issuance of a search warrant. Cox v. State, 160 Ga. App. 199, 286 S.E.2d 482 (1981).

Looking through window unreasonable. — Police officer unreasonably invaded defendants' privacy by looking through their window before knocking on their door when executing an arrest warrant for a third party since: (1) there was insufficient evidence that the third party lived with defendants; (2) even if the police were authorized to enter defendants' home, looking through the window was unreasonable as the officer did not reach the window by traveling the route any visitor would travel to reach the front door; and (3) the officer did not have articulable facts which would warrant a reasonably prudent officer to believe that the third party was a danger. A police officer must have a reasonable belief that forewarning would jeopardize the officer's safety before actions, such as peering through a window, would be justified.

State v. Schwartz, 261 Ga. App. 742, 583 S.E.2d 573 (2003).

Use of “narcotics” dog authorized.

— Use of a “narcotics” dog, specially trained to detect marijuana and narcotics, is an authorized investigative technique. Lockhart v. State, 166 Ga. App. 555, 305 S.E.2d 22 (1983).

Use of choke-hold unauthorized in obtaining evidence.

— There is nothing in the text, history, or structure of the Fourth Amendment, or for that matter in Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, remotely suggesting that the right of the people to be free from unreasonable seizures also includes a concomitant privilege for state actors to use certain neck restraints or force (however reasonable) against the very people the right protects. Therefore, the police officer was properly suspended for using a choke-hold on a handcuffed suspect in an attempt to prevent the suspect from swallowing narcotics in violation of department rules. Mercure v. City of Atlanta Civil Service Board, 327 Ga. App. 840, 761 S.E.2d 393 (2014).

Standard of review. — Because a trial court credited a police officer’s testimony and decided the defendant’s suppression motion on an issue of law rather than on any issue of conflicting evidence, the Court of Appeals correctly used the de novo standard of review. Silva v. State, 278 Ga. 506, 604 S.E.2d 171 (2004).

When, in a hearing on a motion to suppress filed in a case in which a defendant was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol to the extent it was less safe for the defendant to drive, when the trial court found there was no evidence that the defendant was an impaired or “less safe” driver, the court’s ruling involved a mixed question of fact and law, and a de novo standard of review did not apply, and, as there was some evidence supporting the trial court’s factual findings made in granting the defendant’s motion to suppress, that ruling would not be disturbed. State v. Sanders, 274 Ga. App. 393, 617 S.E.2d 633 (2005).

Excessive force claim. — Sheriff’s deputies were entitled to summary judgment on a claim of excessive force when the plaintiff alleged that because the arrest was unlawful, any force used was unlawful, because the plaintiff did not present a discrete excessive force claim, and the claim failed as a matter of law. Bashir v. Rockdale County, 445 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir. 2006).

Claim of error raised for first time on appeal not reviewed.

— Because the defendant on appeal abandoned the “second-tier” argument raised at the suppression hearing, and instead argued that the evidence should have been suppressed because the state failed to show that the officer was in the lawful discharge of any official duty during questioning, the latter argument was not addressed, as it was raised for the first time on appeal. Harper v. State, 285 Ga. App. 261, 645 S.E.2d 741 (2007).

Const., amend. 4, and applies to all departments of government. Smoot v. State, 160 Ga. 744, 128 S.E. 909, 41 A.L.R. 1533 (1925).

Federal good-faith exception inap-plicable. — The good-faith exception to the exclusionary rule enunciated by the U.S. Supreme Court in United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897 (1984), is not applicable in Georgia in light of the legislatively-mandated exclusionary rule found in O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30. Gary v. State, 262 Ga. 573, 422 S.E.2d 426 (1992).

There is nothing inherent in “papers” which immunizes them from searches otherwise proper under the Fourth Amendment. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116, rehearing denied, 444 U.S. 975, 100 S. Ct.

Fourth Amendment Rights (Cont'd)

472, 62 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1979).

Searches by private persons not protected against. — Fourth Amendment, though textually not so limited, actually afforded protection only against unreasonable searches and seizures made by governmental officers, so however unreasonable a search by a private person may be, absent participation by governmental agents, the Fourth Amendment is totally uninvolved. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Upon a de novo review of the trial court's application of the law to the facts, because a warrantless search of the defendant's gym locker was conducted by private citizens, and not by law enforcement, those acts did not implicate the Fourth Amendment; hence, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of that search. Hobbs v. State, 272 Ga. App. 148, 611 S.E.2d 775 (2005).

Consensual and voluntary encounter. — Because the defendant's encounters with the police remained consensual and voluntary, and the defendant consented to a continued detention for further questioning, a motion to suppress the evidence seized based on an illegal detention by the police was properly denied. Smith v. State, 281 Ga. 185, 640 S.E.2d 1 (2006).

Legitimate expectation of privacy controls claims of Fourth Amendment protection. — The capacity to claim the protection of the Fourth Amendment depends not upon a property right in the invaded place but upon whether the person who claims the protection of the amendment has a legitimate expectation of privacy in the invaded place. Cuevas v. State, 151 Ga. App. 605, 260 S.E.2d 737 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 1338, 63 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1980); Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Right to be free from police intrusion. — In the absence of evidence to the contrary, there is a presumption that a co-occupant has waived the co-occupant's right of privacy as to other co-occupants when consenting to the search of a premises; but, when police are confronted with an unequivocal assertion of that co-occupant's Fourth Amendment right, such presumption cannot stand as the right involved is the right to be free from police intrusion, not the right to invite police into one's home. Randolph v. State, 264 Ga. App. 396, 590 S.E.2d 834 (2003).

With regard to the defendant being charged with driving under the influence based on a report received from an off-duty officer, a trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the arresting officer's entry into the defendant's garage was not authorized since the threat to public safety had ended and the entry was not supported by probable cause or exigent circumstances. Corey v. State, 320 Ga. App. 350, 739 S.E.2d 790 (2013).

Omission of county name in warrant had no effect on Fourth Amendment rights. — When a copy of a warrant which omits the name of the county which is used to be directed to the executing officers, and since "the affidavit" included the name of the county along with the other description, the "omission" of the name of the county does not affect the substantial Fourth Amendment rights. Cuevas v. State, 151 Ga. App. 605, 260 S.E.2d 737 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 1338, 63 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1980).

Consideration of property concepts along with totality of circumstances. — Although property concepts are no longer controlling in application of Fourth Amendment rights, property concepts should be considered in conjunction with the totality of all the circumstances surrounding claimed violations of Fourth Amendment rights. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Evidence seized as result of illegal police activity. — Because the State of Georgia failed to carry the state's burden of establishing exigent circumstances existed to justify the entry of the police into defendants' trailer to arrest persons for underage drinking, the trial court properly granted defendants' motion to suppress the evidence seized from the unlawful entry. State v. Ealum, 283 Ga. App. 799, 643 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

While non-custodial and custodial statements were properly admitted, as not vitiating the defendant's constitutional rights once defendant invoked the right to counsel, a subsequent interview initiated by police violated this right; as a result, cocaine seized through information obtained from the interview had to be suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree. Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress statements, drugs, paraphernalia, and cash the police found after searching the defendant's home as fruit of the poisonous tree because although the police had authority to enter the house for the purpose of apprehending the defendant, the subsequent reentry by the police was illegal since an officer reentered the house without a warrant, valid consent, or exigent circumstances; both before and at the time of the defendant's arrest, the defendant told the police not to enter the house, and it could not be assumed that the victim's need for assistance justified the officer's reentry because the exigent circumstances authorizing entry for the limited purpose of effecting the defendant's arrest had expired. State v. Driggers, 306 Ga. App. 849, 702 S.E.2d 925 (2010).

No Fourth Amendment violation when evidence discovered through reasonable search and inventory. — When police officers acting in good faith and while carrying out an inventory procedure without investigative intent, discovered and read "death note" contained in the defendant's open ended shopping bag, the search was deemed reasonable and, therefore, was not violative of the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116, rehearing denied, 444 U.S. 975, 100 S. Ct. 472, 62 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1979).

Restraint reasonable. — Neck restraint a narcotics investigator used in an effort to have the defendant spit out a baggy of suspected drugs was not unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment because the application of a neck restraint maneuver was reasonable under the circumstances; the investigator observed the defendant make a series of furtive attempts at concealing the clear plastic baggy, which the investigator believed contained drug contraband, from placing the baggy in the defendant's mouth to attempting to chew it up while the investigator sought to question the defendant. Lewis v. State, 317 Ga. App. 391, 730 S.E.2d 757 (2012).

Police custody of arrested person's property. — Fourth Amendment is not violated when police take custody of property of persons they arrest to store that property for safekeeping. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116, rehearing denied, 444 U.S. 975, 100 S. Ct. 472, 62 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1979).

Violation of rights by seizure and recording of telephone conversations unrelated to crime investigated. — A general and wide ranging search through all of the telephone conversations conducted on telephone lines during a period covering approximately 20 days, and seizure and recording of matters in no way related to the crime investigated, constituted a violation of the defendants' right to privacy guaranteed to them under the terms of U.S. Const., amend. 4 and by this paragraph. Cross v. State, 225 Ga. 760, 171 S.E.2d 507 (1969).

Arrest before investigation complete. — Janitorial service owner's 42 U.S.C. § 1983 claim against a police detective, a police chief, and a police department could not withstand summary judgment when the police detective properly relied upon a trustworthy source to establish probable cause to arrest the owner for a theft from a customer's spa without investigating; thus, there was no violation of the Fourth or Fourteenth Amendments. Means v. City of Atlanta Police Dep't, 262 Ga. App. 700, 586 S.E.2d 373 (2003).

No infringement of rights of individual aggrieved by illegal search and seizure of third party's property. — A person who is aggrieved by an illegal search and seizure only through the introduction of damaging evidence secured by search of a third person's premises or property has not had any of that person's Fourth Amendment rights infringed.

Fourth Amendment Rights (Cont'd)

Cuevas v. State, 151 Ga. App. 605, 260 S.E.2d 737 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 1338, 63 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1980).

When unannounced entry authorized. — Unannounced entry by Georgia Bureau of Investigation agents was authorized when evidence could have been otherwise easily destroyed and when agents requested of the judge who issued the search warrant to include a no-knock provision. Cox v. State, 160 Ga. App. 199, 286 S.E.2d 482 (1981).

Probable cause for warrantless arrest. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as: (1) the police personally heard an individual say to the informant on the telephone that the individual had a kilogram of cocaine in the individual's hotel room that the individual intended to sell to the informant if the informant would come to that certain hotel at a certain time, where that individual would be waiting on the third-floor balcony to throw the informant a key; (2) when the informant arrived at the designated hotel at the designated time, the police observed the defendant standing on the third-floor balcony and further observed the defendant respond favorably to the informant's request not to throw down the key and instead to come to the back door to let the informant in; (3) the police did not arrest the defendant until the defendant appeared at that back door; and (4) the information received from an untested informant might have been helpful and corroborating, but the personal observations and perceptions of the police alone more than sufficed to supply the probable cause needed for a warrantless arrest. Fleming v. State, 282 Ga. App. 373, 638 S.E.2d 769 (2006).

Because the trial court could have concluded that the state failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had been given the requisite notice to not return to a train station without facing the risk of an arrest, some evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that the arrest, which was based solely on the violation of an invalid criminal trespass warning, lacked probable cause; hence, the suppression order was not disturbed on appeal. State v. Morehead, 285 Ga. App. 320, 646 S.E.2d 308 (2007).

Upon a de novo review of the trial court's erroneous application of the law to the evidence presented on the defendant's motion to suppress, the appeals court found that because law enforcement had probable cause to suspect that the defendant possessed cocaine, a warrantless arrest of the defendant was lawful; thus, an order granting suppression was reversed. State v. Bryant, 284 Ga. App. 867, 644 S.E.2d 871 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 540 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress, as a stop by a police officer qualified as a first level police-citizen encounter, and that upon learning of an outstanding warrant for the defendant, the officer had probable cause to make an arrest and conduct a search incident thereto; further, the state was not required to introduce the warrant into evidence in order to establish its validity. Lucas v. State, 284 Ga. App. 450, 644 S.E.2d 302 (2007).

Probable cause authorized the defendant's arrest for criminal attempt to manufacture methamphetamine, despite no illegal drugs being found on the defendant, based on the similarities between the descriptions broadcasted in a be-on-the-look-out dispatch matched the defendant's truck and passengers, the items found in the truck coincided with the manufacturing, and the opinion of one of the arresting officers, who had experience as a narcotics agent. Kohlmeier v. State, 289 Ga. App. 709, 658 S.E.2d 261 (2008).

Waiver may not be condition of probation. — Although the trial court should not have imposed a waiver of defendant's Fourth Amendment rights as a condition of defendant's probation, the trial court's action in doing so was harmless since no warrantless search took place that cited defendant's Fourth Amendment waiver and the appellate court was unwilling to presume that such a search would take place in the future. Millsap v. State, 261 Ga. App. 427, 582 S.E.2d 568 (2003).

Waiver could be condition of drug court contract. — Under the terms of a drug court contract, the defendant waived any right to suppress evidence seized as a result of a warrantless search, and absent evidence to the contrary and bad faith on the part of law enforcement, that waiver remained enforceable. Wilkinson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 213, 641 S.E.2d 189 (2006).

Search proper after Fourth Amendment waiver. — Waiver by the defendant, while free on bond for drug offenses, of rights under U.S. Const., amend. 4 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII as a bond condition, was constitutional under U.S. Const., amend. 8 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XVII; it was a reasonable exercise of the trial court's function of balancing the rights of the accused with public safety interests; thus, the investigators and officers did not violate the defendant's rights when investigating information that the defendant was still involved in drug activity. Rocco v. State, 267 Ga. App. 900, 601 S.E.2d 189 (2004).

Roadblocks. — Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress in a case in which defendant was subsequently convicted of three offenses based on evidence that was obtained at a roadblock that a police officer working in the field had authorized; the trial court should have granted the motion because supervisory personnel, and not an officer in the field, were required to approve roadblocks given the fact that a roadblock involved a warrantless stop of a vehicle. Thomas v. State, 277 Ga. App. 88, 625 S.E.2d 455 (2005).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence obtained from a police roadblock with regard to the defendant's conviction for driving under the influence as the trial court properly determined that the roadblock was conducted for a legitimate primary purpose, namely to check for valid licenses, insurance, impaired drivers, and safety concerns, which were consistent with the purposes set forth in the initiation form. Further, a variance in the location of the roadblock to an intersection of a street instead of on the actual street was insignificant and did not invalidate the roadblock. Coursey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 476, 672 S.E.2d 456 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained during a roadblock because the evidence was sufficient to show that the decision to implement the roadblock was made by a supervisory officer, which prevented the field officers from exercising unfettered discretion in stopping the drivers since the lieutenant and corporal who implemented the roadblock testified that they were supervisors in the traffic unit of the county sheriff's office; the trial court was authorized to find that the purposes of the roadblock, which were to serve as a traffic safety checkpoint and to check driver's licenses and to identify drivers driving under the influence, were as stated by the lieutenant and corporal, and each of the identified purposes set forth in the order for the roadblock was a legitimate primary purpose. Rapple v. State, 306 Ga. App. 531, 702 S.E.2d 763 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained at a roadblock because, given the evidence presented, the trial court was authorized to conclude that the sergeant issued the order for the roadblock properly and initiated, authorized, and supervised the roadblock and that the sergeant's decision to implement the roadblock was made at the programmatic level for a legitimate primary purpose; the evidence supported the trial court's findings of fact that the information on the roadblock approval form, which stated the reasons for the roadblock, did not conflict with any evidence presented as to when the roadblock was to be conducted or by whom the roadblock was authorized. Owens v. State, 308 Ga. App. 374, 707 S.E.2d 584 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1036, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized at a roadblock because the state met the state's burden of establishing the legitimate purpose of the roadblock by introducing a certified copy of a department of public safety roadblock approval form; the programmatic purposes set out in the roadblock form were supported by the other evidence at the suppression hearing, and the police officers' actions at the scene were in line with those pur-

Suppression of evidence from sobriety checkpoints. — Appellate court erred by reversing a trial court decision granting the appellant's motion to suppress evidence resulting from a traffic safety checkpoint stop of the appellant's vehicle because the checkpoint at which the appellant was stopped was unconstitutional since it did not meet the case law requirement that supervisory personnel made the decision to implement the checkpoint. The Georgia Supreme Court adheres to the holding that the decision to implement a particular sobriety checkpoint may be made by any authorized supervisor. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. 787, 750 S.E.2d 148 (2013).

Sobriety checkpoints. — Georgia Supreme Court holds that traffic safety checkpoints can be a valid and important means of law enforcement but that police checkpoint programs must have an appropriate primary purpose other than general crime control, and each checkpoint must be implemented and operated so as to control the risks of unconstrained discretion that would be abused by some officers in the field, and of oppressive interference by enforcement officials with the privacy and personal security of individuals. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. 787, 750 S.E.2d 148 (2013).

DNA sample collection from convicted felons. — Former O.C.G.A. § 24-4-60 (see now O.C.G.A. § 35-3-160) did not violate the Fourth Amendment, the search and seizure provisions of the Georgia Constitution, or a convicted felons' rights to privacy under the United States or Georgia Constitutions. Quarterman v. State, 282 Ga. 383, 651 S.E.2d 32 (2007).

Statement by juvenile questioned by school official, who was state's agent. — Juvenile court properly suppressed one incriminating statement made by a juvenile, regarding the robbery of two students in a bathroom during a basketball game, as the juvenile was questioned by an agent of the police with the involvement and participation of the school resource officer. Further, the juvenile was in custody and, thus, entitled to Miranda warnings, which had not been given. In the Interest of T.A.G., 292 Ga. App. 48, 663 S.E.2d 392 (2008).

Searches and Seizures1. In General

Same protection as provided by United States Constitution. — The protection against unreasonable searches provided in the Georgia Constitution is the same as that provided by the United States Constitution. Wells v. State, 180 Ga. App. 133, 348 S.E.2d 681 (1986).

Expression of common-law rights. — This paragraph, being the constitutional provision under reasonable searches and seizures, is but an expression of common-law rights. Hollinshead v. Shadrack, 95 Ga. App. 88, 97 S.E.2d 165 (1957).

Constitution prohibits only searches which are unreasonable, and reasonableness is to be decided on its own facts and circumstances. Gugliotta v. State, 117 Ga. App. 212, 160 S.E.2d 266 (1968).

General searches are prohibited. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

The officer cannot use a warrant as a pretext for launching a full scale investigation as to the origins of an item which is not incriminating on its face. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

Sheriff not permitted to violate rights against unlawful search and seizure. — The office of sheriff carries with it the duty to preserve the peace and protect the lives, persons, property, health, and morals of the people. But in the exercise of these duties, the sheriff is not permitted to violate the constitutional guaranties against unlawful search and seizure. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

Right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures extends to all persons, including probationers. Adams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 41, 264

S.E.2d 532 (1980), overruled on other grounds, State v. Thackston, 289 Ga. 412, 716 S.E.2d 517 (2011).

Defendant has standing to challenge searches. — When the defendant was charged with an offense, the essential element of which is possession, the defendant is endowed with automatic standing to challenge the validity of the searches of which the defendant complains. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Defendant lacked standing. — Trial court erroneously granted a motion to suppress, concluding that: (1) police had no particularized objective basis for seizing the men, including the defendant; (2) the officer had no reason to pat down the first man and did so as a pretext to search for drugs; and (3) the defendant did not voluntarily consent to the search; the defendant lacked standing to object to the search, the defendant had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the bag which contained the contraband, and the stop, which led to the seizure, as a first tier encounter, was reasonable. State v. Robinson, 278 Ga. App. 511, 629 S.E.2d 509 (2006).

A defendant lacked standing to contest the seizure of cocaine that was found abandoned in a wooded area. Maldonado v. State, 284 Ga. App. 26, 643 S.E.2d 316 (2007).

In a prosecution for, inter alia, felony murder, a defendant did not have standing to suppress the evidence of a gun recovered from a hotel room pursuant to a search warrant as the defendant was not the registered guest at the hotel but merely visited the guest on three occasions and, thus, had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the room. Watkins v. State, 285 Ga. 107, 674 S.E.2d 275 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence an officer seized from the defendant's vehicle because the evidence undisputedly showed that the defendant had abandoned the vehicle, and since the defendant abandoned the defendant's car, the defendant had no standing to assert the claim that the search was invalid as a warrantless search incident to an arrest; the defendant abandoned the defendant's vehicle when the defendant fled to escape police, leaving the vehicle parked in a stranger's driveway with the door open, and before searching the open vehicle, an officer even confirmed with the landowner that the defendant's vehicle was not parked there with the owner's permission. Johnson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 635, 700 S.E.2d 612 (2010).

Defendant's motions to suppress were properly denied because the defendant did not show that the defendant had standing to challenge the search of the apartment where the defendant was apprehended as the evidence showed that the apartment was leased to a third party; there was no evidence of how long the defendant had been in the apartment or whether the defendant was an overnight guest; there was no evidence of any of the defendant's personal belongings in the apartment; and the mere presence of miscellaneous papers in the apartment bearing the defendant's name, without any further evidence connecting the defendant to the apartment, was insufficient to create a legitimate expectation of privacy for the defendant to contest the search. Brown v. State, 295 Ga. 695, 763 S.E.2d 710 (2014).

Encounter with police officer not a seizure. — Fact that officer activated blue lights when parking behind the defendant, whose car was parked in front of a closed business with its motor running and its headlights on, did not turn the encounter into a seizure requiring reasonable suspicion; given the late hour, darkness, officer's intention to offer assistance, and fact that both the officer and defendant were parked in the travel lane, it could not be said that the defendant was not free to leave. Darwicki v. State, 291 Ga. App. 239, 661 S.E.2d 859 (2008).

Officer had reasonable suspicion warranting investigation. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress, as the officer who stopped the defendant possessed sufficient reasonable suspicion to warrant further investigation of the defendant, based on: the number of burglaries in the area; the early morning hour; the closed business; the posted no trespassing signs; and the defendant's attempt to drive away as the police vehicle pulled in behind the defendant. Cox v. State, 263 Ga. App. 266, 587 S.E.2d 205 (2003).

Motion to suppress was properly denied when an officer, who pulled over a van on a traffic stop for following too closely, had justification to investigate the driver and the passenger since a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity accompanied the totality of the facts on the stop: (1) the officer noticed an unusual amount of activity when the officer turned the officer's lights on to pull the car over; (2) the van did not pull over for a mile or two after the officer turned the officer's lights on, which was highly unusual; and (3) the driver and the passenger were extremely nervous when questioned and they gave conflicting reports on why they were traveling in the area. Rucker v. State, 266 Ga. App. 293, 596 S.E.2d 639 (2004).

Because police officers saw a vehicle matching a dispatcher's description shortly after receiving the dispatch, and the vehicle attempted to elude them, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-395(a), the officers had a specific and articulable reason to stop the vehicle; consequently, the trial court properly denied defendant's motions to suppress, in limine, and for a new trial. Francis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 164, 620 S.E.2d 431 (2005).

Defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence found in a vehicle search was properly denied because the trial court was authorized to reject the testimony of an expert for the defendant that a state trooper could not have seen whether the defendant was wearing a seat belt and to believe the trooper's testimony that the trooper had a clear and unobstructed view of the defendant through the car's windshield; the expert based the opinion on a re-enactment which did not exactly match the conditions of the observation because the driver in the test was wearing a dark rather than a light shirt, the expert did not park in the median perpendicular to oncoming traffic, and the expert did not observe the test driver through the front windshield. Bailey v. State, 283 Ga. App. 365, 641 S.E.2d 548 (2006).

Defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence found in a vehicle search was properly denied because a state trooper did not impermissibly exceed the scope of an original traffic stop when, after stopping the defendant's vehicle, the trooper smelled marijuana smoke in the vehicle, asked the defendant about it, and soon thereafter requested that a K-9 unit be dispatched; the testimony of an expert for the defendant that the trooper could not have smelled the unburned marijuana found in the defendant's vehicle did not necessarily overcome the trooper's testimony because the trial court could have concluded that the trooper smelled marijuana smoke rather than unburned marijuana in the vehicle, which gave the trooper a reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity warranting continued detention of the defendant. Bailey v. State, 283 Ga. App. 365, 641 S.E.2d 548 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's suppression motion, as the arresting officer was authorized to conclude that in turning off a roadway to evade a roadblock, the defendant committed a possibly illegal backing maneuver, upon which the officer was permitted to investigate; moreover, the officer's honest belief that a traffic violation was committed, even if ultimately proven incorrect, could nevertheless demonstrate the existence of at least an articulable suspicion and reasonable grounds for a traffic stop. Terry v. State, 283 Ga. App. 158, 640 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

The trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress cocaine seized after a valid traffic stop had essentially concluded, as a state trooper's objective observations, when combined with the extensive experience the trooper possessed in drug interdiction and knowledge of drug smuggling patterns, supplied sufficient facts to conclude that the defendant might have been engaged in criminal activity. Giles v. State, 284 Ga. App. 1, 642 S.E.2d 921 (2007).

Because a police officer possessed sufficient information regarding both the defendants via a police dispatcher, who was relaying information from a 9-1-1 caller, and after signaling for the defendants to pull the vehicle over, the officer observed both the defendants switch places, the officer observed sufficient and particular facts to investigate both men for driving under the influence; hence, the trial court erroneously ordered suppression of the evidence obtained from the resulting traffic stop. State v. Bingham, 283 Ga. App. 468, 641 S.E.2d 663 (2007).

Because a detective's suspicions were raised by the defendant's odd behavior and the detective thought that something might be hidden in the defendant's shoes, the detective was permitted to detain the defendant in order to maintain the status quo while obtaining more information concerning that suspicion; thus, when combined with the defendant's valid consent, suppression of the evidence seized was unwarranted. Lane v. State, 287 Ga. App. 503, 651 S.E.2d 798 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0187, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 185 (Ga. 2008).

Because an officer was authorized to: (1) detain the defendant for investigatory purposes based on a 9-1-1 call reporting a domestic disturbance; (2) pat the defendant down for weapons; (3) seize the cocaine from the defendant's pocket under the plain feel doctrine; (4) search the defendant's vehicle; and (5) seize the contraband found during that search, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Lester v. State, 287 Ga. App. 363, 651 S.E.2d 766 (2007).

It was error to suppress evidence obtained from a warrantless search of a defendant's truck; information from a reliable informant, much of whose information had been confirmed before officers stopped the truck, provided officers with reasonable suspicion to make an investigative stop of the truck, after which the alerting of a drug dog further corroborated the source's information and provided probable cause for the search of the truck. State v. Jones, 287 Ga. App. 259, 651 S.E.2d 186 (2007).

Given that an officer, responding to a disturbance call in a remote location of the precinct involving the defendant, had a reasonable safety concern, and because the call described the defendant as loud, belligerent, and possibly intoxicated, the officer had a sufficient basis to conduct a pat-down search of the defendant; hence, the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of a concealed weapon and drugs found following a search was properly denied. Walker v. State, 289 Ga. App. 657, 658 S.E.2d 207 (2008).

Because law enforcement officers were given permission to enter a landowner's land in order to investigate the presence of possible trespassers for engaging in other illegal activity on the landowner's property, the officers gained a reasonable and articulable suspicion that the two individuals were involved in some form of criminal activity, the very least of which was criminal trespass, and therefore had the authority to detain the defendant and a cohort in a brief investigative stop; thus, suppression of the evidence seized as a result of the encounter was properly denied, after the cohort ran, and the defendant failed to comply with the officers' orders, given that those actions amounted to probable cause to support a warrantless arrest and a search thereafter. Burgess v. State, 290 Ga. App. 24, 658 S.E.2d 809 (2008).

Trial court order suppressing drug evidence seized after a Terry stop of the defendant for parking in the middle of the road was error because O.C.G.A. § 40-6-200(a) made it improper to park in the middle of a two-way roadway, and provided a sound basis for the officer's decision to stop the defendant; as a result, the stop of the defendant was proper. Stafford v. State, 284 Ga. 773, 671 S.E.2d 484 (2008).

An officer had reasonable suspicion to stop the defendant's vehicle, which matched the description of one the officer had been told to be on the lookout for, as it was connected with previous suspicious activity and with a suspect who was wanted by police, and it was described with great particularity. Furthermore, as the officer was justified in detaining the defendant long enough to determine whether an outstanding warrant was valid, the extent of the stop did not exceed the permissible scope of the investigation; having already effected a valid stop, the officer could request consent to search the vehicle. Edmond v. State, 297 Ga. App. 238, 676 S.E.2d 877 (2009).

Because a concerned citizen reported that a suspected drunk driver was driving a specific vehicle in a specific location, a police officer had a reasonable, articulable suspicion to justify an investigative traffic stop; accordingly, defendant did not show a basis for reversing the trial court's order denying defendant's motion to suppress. Adcock v. State, 299 Ga. App. 1, 681 S.E.2d 691 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for trafficking in cocaine and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were appropriate because an officer testified that the officer detected the odor of burnt marijuana coming from inside the defendant's vehicle; that the officer retrieved the dog to conduct a free-air sniff; and that after the dog alerted at the vehicle, the officer noticed tears pouring down the defendant's face. The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the defendant had knowledge of the cocaine in the car and that the defendant was guilty of trafficking in cocaine. Perkins v. State, 300 Ga. App. 464, 685 S.E.2d 300 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to exclude evidence obtained as a result of the defendant's detention, specifically the defendants' responses to an officer's questions and the victim's identification of defendant at the scene, because the investigatory stop of the defendant was based on reasonable suspicion arising from a particularized and objective basis for suspecting the defendant of criminal activity. While the victim's description of the assailants was not very specific, the defendant matched the description in build, height, race, and clothing color; with the assistance of a tip from a concerned citizen, the defendant was found at 3:00 or 4:00 A.M. within walking distance of the crime shortly after the crime was committed, within the perimeter law enforcement officials had established; there were no other pedestrians or traffic in the area; the defendant was out of breath and sweaty despite being underdressed for the weather; and the defendant gave conflicting accounts of where the defendant was coming and going. Hall v. State, 309 Ga. App. 179, 710 S.E.2d 146 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress after finding that the excessive-window-tinting statute, O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73.1(b), was unconstitutional because an officer had a reasonable articulable suspicion to justify the traffic stop; the officer observed that the defendant's vehicle had darkly tinted windows and reasonably believed that to be in violation of § 40-8-73.1, and the fact that the statute was later found to be unconstitutional did not render the stop invalid. Christy v. State, 315 Ga. App. 647, 727 S.E.2d 269 (2012).

Officer had reasonable suspicion to conduct an investigatory stop of the defendant based on the report of a concerned citizen, who described a suspect involved in illegal drug activity the citizen witnessed and the suspect's location; the officer immediately identified the defendant as matching the description reported by the citizen. Durden v. State, 320 Ga. App. 218, 739 S.E.2d 676 (2013).

Police lacked reasonable suspicion for stop. — Defendant's motion to suppress suspected cocaine was properly granted as: (1) police officers lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant for obstruction of justice upon the defendant's flight; (2) an initial uncoercive encounter with the police did not constitute a seizure, and defendant was free to leave at any time; and (3) the record was devoid of any evidence about the details of an anonymous tip that defendant was seen selling drugs in the area of the encounter; moreover, given the tip's lack of detail and failure to predict future behavior, observation of defendant's conduct might have warranted further investigation, but it did not rise to the level of reasonable suspicion needed to briefly detain or even arrest. State v. Dukes, 279 Ga. App. 247, 630 S.E.2d 847 (2006).

In a prosecution for driving under the influence, the trial court erroneously denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of traffic stop made by an officer armed with only a "be on the lookout" warning, as the officer lacked a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in any criminal activity, but admitted to possessing only scant information about the driver, the year and make of the vehicle being driven, and the vehicle's direction of travel; moreover, the mere fact that the defendant's gold Ford truck was located in the vicinity of the alleged crime did not necessarily give rise to articulable suspicion. Murray v. State, 282 Ga. App. 741, 639 S.E.2d 631 (2006).

Because: (1) an investigating officer did not have a particularized and objective reason to suspect the defendant of any criminal activity before stopping the defendant's vehicle; (2) the act of driving at night, lawfully, on a public road, and in a high crime area, did not justify the stop in the absence of additional circumstances; and (3) the state failed to provide any evidence of any such additional circumstances, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Young v. State, 285 Ga. App. 214, 645 S.E.2d 690 (2007).

The trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress, as the investigating officer lacked any particularized basis to suspect the defendant of any criminal activity, and information contained in a "be on the lookout" alert for a certain vehicle failed to supplant the officer's belief that the defendant was involved in a reported burglary, given that: (1) the description of the vehicle being driven and the suspect were inadequate; (2) no information was provided about the lapse of time between the crime occurring and the traffic stop; (3) no information was provided about the number of persons about in the area; and (4) the defendant was not engaged in any activity which would have otherwise authorized a traffic stop. State v. Dias, 284 Ga. App. 10, 642 S.E.2d 925 (2007).

Because a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle was not based on the commission of a traffic violation or illegal act, but instead was based on the unreliable information provided by a concerned citizen to a police sergeant which amounted to hearsay gleaned from an overheard conversation, and did not provide the officer with the type of "inside information" that would not have been known to the public at large, the defendant's motion to suppress the marijuana seized as a result of the traffic stop was properly granted. State v.

An officer who stopped the defendant's vehicle because the officer saw the defendant and a passenger "flailing their arms around pretty aggressively" and thought that the two were having a heated argument did not have a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity that justified the stop. The officer did not testify that the officer saw any blows being struck, that the officer observed any potential traffic infraction, that either the defendant or the passenger was making threatening gestures, or that the argument was impairing the defendant's ability to drive. State v. Martin, 291 Ga. App. 548, 662 S.E.2d 316 (2008).

Denial of suppression was error since there was no valid basis for initiation of a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle, the further detention of the defendant without evidence of criminal activity was improper, and the defendant's consent to a search was invalid because the consent was not sufficiently attenuated from the taint of the unreasonable stop. Adkins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 229, 679 S.E.2d 793 (2009).

Officer lacked a reasonable articulable suspicion to conduct a traffic stop because the officer did not see the defendant engage in any drug transaction at the motel, talk to anyone who was a known drug dealer, or commit a traffic offense as the defendant left the motel. Adkinson v. State, 322 Ga. App. 1, 743 S.E.2d 563 (2013).

Officer never said to stop running.

— Defendant, upon seeing a police officer, ran away. As the officer never told the defendant to stop running, there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant for obstruction. State v. Fisher, 293 Ga. App. 228, 666 S.E.2d 594 (2008).

Vehicle stops. — A traffic stop was not "pretextual" when an officer saw a traffic offense occur, even if the officer had ulterior motives in initiating the stop, and even if a reasonable officer would not have made the stop under the same circumstances. Clark v. State, 243 Ga. App. 362, 532 S.E.2d 481 (2000).

Police dispatcher who reports a crime at a specified location gives police an articulable suspicion to investigate and detain individuals at the scene. When a police officer received a dispatch on suspicion of drunk driving describing the defendant and the defendant's vehicle, and the officer saw the defendant in the defendant's vehicle matching that description immediately after receiving the dispatch, the officer had a reasonable, articulable suspicion to justify a Terry stop and it was error to grant the defendant's motion to suppress the stop even though the stop was made without the officer observing any traffic violations. State v. Harden, 267 Ga. App. 381, 599 S.E.2d 329 (2004).

When law enforcement received two anonymous tips that the defendant would be traveling from another state with cocaine in a certain model car licensed in the other state, would be taking a certain route, and would be staying in a certain hotel, the tips' range of details relating to future acts not easily predicted allowed police to conduct an investigatory stop of the defendant. Solis v. State, 268 Ga. App. 493, 602 S.E.2d 166 (2004).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied; the stop of the defendant was reasonable because the defendant was exceeding the speed limit and crossed the center line twice. Morrison v. State, 272 Ga. App. 34, 611 S.E.2d 720, aff'd, 280 Ga. 222, 626 S.E.2d 500 (2006).

After a police officer validly stopped the defendant's vehicle for speeding, and the defendant got out of the vehicle, and informed the police officer that there was a lawful gun with a permit in the vehicle, the defendant's rights were not violated by the officer's entry into the vehicle in order to seize the gun for safety purposes. Megesi v. State, 277 Ga. App. 855, 627 S.E.2d 814 (2006).

Because the trial court had ample evidence to support the court's conclusion that the reason police officers supplied as the basis to stop the defendant's vehicle, specifically, an alleged computer insurance inquiry, was "suspect and insufficient," the court did not clearly err in disbelieving the evidence; hence, the court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the vehicle as a result of the stop. State v. Starks, 281 Ga. App. 15, 635 S.E.2d 327 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress, as the search was valid under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII; the officer stopped the defendant based on a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was driving with an invalid drive-out tag in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-8, and the defendant's tag was suspicious because the tag did not have a strip on the bottom to prevent tampering with the expiration date. Green v. State, 282 Ga. App. 5, 637 S.E.2d 498 (2006).

Because an officer had probable cause to arrest a vehicle's occupants, including the defendant, after encountering a truck matching the description in a be-on-the-lookout bulletin, with the same number of occupants as advised therein, traveling on the road and in the direction identified, and from a location known by the officer to be the scene of an armed robbery, a search based on the lawful arrest was upheld; as a result, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of a search incident to the arrest. Boone v. State, 282 Ga. App. 67, 637 S.E.2d 795 (2006).

Because the defendant committed two traffic violations, an ensuing stop of the defendant's vehicle was not unjustifiably extended, the defendant voluntarily granted the officers consent to search, and a canine free-air search was undertaken immediately and as a result of the defendant's consent, the trial court properly denied suppression of the evidence seized as a result of the stop. Noble v. State, 283 Ga. App. 81, 640 S.E.2d 666 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the methamphetamine seized as a result of a traffic stop on the vehicle the defendant was a passenger in as sufficient evidence supported the trial court's finding that an officer's stop of that vehicle was justified by the officer's reasonable articulable suspicion of a crime, specifically, a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-8-20. Richardson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 89, 640 S.E.2d 676 (2006).

Trial court erred in granting the suppression motions filed by both the first and second defendant, who occupied the vehicle stopped, as a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-41 provided a sufficient reason for the traffic stop; moreover, the trial court erred in ruling that some portions of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-41 did not apply to the out-of-state license plate on the subject vehicle and by ruling that even though the word “Carolina” on the license plate was not legible, and hence, there was no violation of the statute because the police officer testified about an inability to recognize it as a South Carolina license plate. State v. Davis, 283 Ga. App. 200, 641 S.E.2d 205 (2007).

There was probable cause to stop and search a drug defendant’s car based on recorded conversations between the defendant and an informant detailing plans for a drug exchange, a call from the informant’s wife telling an officer that two males had arrived with drugs and would be following the informant to a prearranged destination, corroboration of this information by an agent, and the defendant’s evasion of a roadblock. Maldonado v. State, 284 Ga. App. 26, 643 S.E.2d 316 (2007).

Despite the defendant’s claim that a sheriff’s deputy lacked a specific and articulable suspicion of criminal activity necessary to execute a traffic stop of the defendant’s vehicle, and thus that the evidence seized thereafter had to be suppressed, the appeals court found otherwise, as sufficient facts were conveyed to the deputy prior to the stop for the deputy to have a reasonable belief that the defendant was involved in a domestic dispute, and might be under the influence of alcohol thereby justifying a finding that the resulting stop was valid; hence, suppression was properly denied. Lacy v. State, 285 Ga. App. 647, 647 S.E.2d 350 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1514, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 620 (Ga. 2007).

A traffic stop was justified when officers noticed that a defendant’s car had a ten-inch “starburst” crack in its windshield; under O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73(e), a vehicle was not to be operated with a windshield or rear window having a starburst or spider webbing effect greater than three inches by three inches. Glenn v. State, 285 Ga. App. 872, 648 S.E.2d 177 (2007).

When an officer received a call from an off-duty police captain who stated that the captain was following a white pickup truck with dual rear tires that was weaving, and the officer went on the road and in the direction indicated and found such a truck illegally parked in an intersection, the officer was warranted in stopping the truck; that the manufacturer of the truck was not the same manufacturer named by the captain did not, in light of the other circumstances, demonstrate that the intrusion was not reasonably warranted. Ingram v. State, 286 Ga. App. 436, 649 S.E.2d 576 (2007).

The trial court did not err in denying the defendant’s motion to suppress, despite a claim that an informant used to apprehend the defendant was not previously known to police and had never provided any information until helping in the prosecution of the defendant, because the informant’s tip predicted some aspects of the defendant’s future behavior and contained information not available to the general public that was corroborated by the observations of officers; moreover, the defendant’s reckless driving and flight from a congested parking lot, which caused a short high-speed chase to ensue, and the fact that the police learned that the defendant often carried a gun, provided the officers with an additional basis to stop the defendant and make an arrest. Patton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 18, 650 S.E.2d 733 (2007).

Drugs were lawfully seized because the defendant’s commission of a traffic offense pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-2-6.1 allowed an officer to make a valid traffic stop of the defendant’s vehicle and thus allowed the officer to ask for consent to search and use a drug-sniffing dog to sniff the exterior of the vehicle. Thus, the defendant’s motion to suppress was properly denied. Thomas v. State, 289 Ga. App. 161, 657 S.E.2d 247 (2008), cert. dismissed, No. S08C0959, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 491 (Ga. 2008).

Because an officer was authorized to stop vehicles for traffic violations under both the Fourth Amendment and the Georgia Constitution, it was proper for the officer to stop the defendant, whose vehicle bore the license plate of another vehicle in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-2-6. Thompson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 661, 658 S.E.2d 122 (2007).

Because the defendant committed a traffic violation by crossing a solid yellow line in the roadway, and was not legitimately faced with an obstruction, despite claiming that it was undoubtedly convenient to pass the slow moving van driving ahead, a police officer had a reasonable and articulable suspicion to initiate a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle; thus, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of that stop. Przyjemski v. State, 290 Ga. App. 22, 658 S.E.2d 807 (2008).

Traffic stop of defendant was justified when an officer saw defendant's car hit a large pothole, which the officer testified a car could not hit if it were entirely within its lane; even if the officer's honest belief that a traffic violation had occurred was incorrect, the officer's decision to stop defendant was made in good faith and was not unreasonable or harassing. Camacho v. State, 292 Ga. App. 120, 663 S.E.2d 364 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1769, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 872 (Ga. 2008).

In a driving under the influence case, there was no merit to the defendant's argument that an officer lacked articulable suspicion to stop the defendant's vehicle. Testimony that the defendant was swerving showed that the defendant was not stopped because of mere inclination, caprice, or harassment, and the trial court accepted the officer's testimony that the full extent of the defendant's actions was not reflected on a video shown to the jury. Hann v. State, 292 Ga. App. 719, 665 S.E.2d 731 (2008).

An officer in an unmarked car who had been following the defendant based on a tip that the defendant was transporting methamphetamine was authorized to stop the defendant under the Fourth Amendment and the Georgia Constitution after the officer saw the defendant illegally cross the center line. Sapp v. State, 297 Ga. App. 218, 676 S.E.2d 867 (2009).

There was reasonable suspicion to stop the defendant's vehicle. The defendant was the only person who had been in physical contact with a drug dealer whom police were watching; the defendant took a package from the dealer; and a search of the dealer's car indicated that the dealer no longer had the drugs, giving rise to a reasonable suspicion that the defendant possessed the drugs. Garza v. State, 298 Ga. App. 332, 680 S.E.2d 175 (2009).

When the only evidence to support a traffic stop was that defendant's car was in front of a residence that had been previously raided by the police, this did not constitute an objective manifestation that defendant was, or was about to be, engaged in criminal activity sufficient to warrant the intrusion of a traffic stop. Pritchard v. State, 300 Ga. App. 14, 684 S.E.2d 88 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendants' motions to suppress drug evidence because the defendants failed to establish that the actions of the arresting officer unreasonably expanded the scope or duration of the traffic stop; because the officer's suspicions were piqued by observations of a truck's condition, the strong scent of perfume emanating from the cab, the demeanor of one the defendants, and the other defendant's responses to the officer's brief questioning, the officer was then prompted and authorized to request a K-9 unit and to run criminal histories on both defendants, and there was no evidence to suggest that the officer delayed in making either query. Young v. State, 310 Ga. App. 270, 712 S.E.2d 652 (2011).

Officer was permitted to continue initial authorized detention while the officer verified the defendant's license, insurance, and registration, completed paperwork, and checked for outstanding warrants, and the defendant's own actions, including exhibiting extreme nervousness, prevented the officer from completing the citations earlier; thus, the scope and duration of the stop were not impermissibly expanded. Moore v. State, 321 Ga. App. 813, 743 S.E.2d 486 (2013).

Roadblock stop is reasonable within requirements of Georgia Constitution when the decision to implement the roadblock is made by supervisory personnel rather than the officers in the field, all vehicles are stopped as opposed to random vehicle stops, the delay to motorists is minimal, the roadblock operation is well identified as a police checkpoint, and the screening officer's training and experience is sufficient to qualify the officer to make an initial determination as to which motorists should be given field tests for intoxication. Brent v. State, 270 Ga. 160, 510 S.E.2d 14 (1998); Boyce v. State, 240 Ga. App. 388, 523 S.E.2d 607 (1999).

Primary purposes for roadblock. — A roadblock was constitutional when its primary purposes were to check for driver's licenses, insurance, and impaired drivers and when its secondary purposes were to check tags, observe seat belt use, and check the safe condition of vehicles. The fact that officers were checking for multiple violations did not make the primary purposes invalid. Kellogg v. State, 288 Ga. App. 265, 653 S.E.2d 841 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0458, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 229 (Ga. 2008).

Testimony about implementation and purposes of roadblock established by multiple agencies. — To show the constitutionality of a roadblock set up by city police, county police, and the state highway patrol, it was not necessary that officers from all three jurisdictions testify about its implementation and primary purpose. Testimony from a city officer that the officer was the primary supervisor at the roadblock and in which the officer addressed these matters sufficed to meet the evidentiary requirements. Kellogg v. State, 288 Ga. App. 265, 653 S.E.2d 841 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0458, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 229 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court properly denied suppression motions filed by two defendants because a well-identified roadblock initiated to conduct vehicle safety checks was constitutional, stopped every vehicle, and was authorized by supervisory personnel at the programmatic level; further, when an officer detected an odor of marijuana from the inside of the defendant driver's vehicle, continued detention of the defendant and the defendant's passenger was authorized. Harwood v. State, 262 Ga. App. 818, 586 S.E.2d 722 (2003).

The trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress on grounds that a roadblock was unlawful, as the state presented sufficient evidence that the checkpoint was set up for a legitimate purpose and the decision to implement the roadblock was made by law enforcement supervisory personnel. Wright v. State, 283 Ga. App. 393, 641 S.E.2d 605 (2007).

A roadblock implemented by a lieutenant in a city police department as part of a statewide safety campaign was not unconstitutional; the lieutenant testified that the lieutenant was a supervisor with the authority to order a roadblock, the fact that policy was set at a statewide level did not mitigate the lieutenant's independent authority to implement a roadblock for a permissible purpose, and the purposes of the roadblock, to check for seatbelt infractions and to check for intoxicated drivers, were permissible. Furthermore, although the lieutenant stated that implementation of the roadblock would depend upon the number of officers available to support the roadblock, this practical consideration did not transform a pre-planned checkpoint into a roving patrol. Bennett v. State, 283 Ga. App. 581, 642 S.E.2d 212 (2007).

Stop based on be-on-the-lookout bulletin. — Motion to suppress was properly denied in a defendant's trial for driving under the influence of alcohol and violating the open container law, as an officer's be-on-the-lookout (BOLO) bulletin provided reasonable suspicion of criminal activity sufficient to authorize the stop of defendant's vehicle; the BOLO provided particularized information describing the color, manufacturer, and model of the vehicle, the number and race of its occupants, and its location and direction of travel. Faulkner v. State, 277 Ga. App. 702, 627 S.E.2d 423 (2006).

Continued detention after traffic stop. — A deputy who asked to search the defendant's vehicle had a reasonable suspicion to warrant the defendant's continued detention after a warning citation was issued pursuant to a traffic stop; the deputy testified that both the defendant and the defendant's sibling were extremely nervous, especially the sibling while reaching into the glove compartment to get the vehicle's registration, and the two gave conflicting stories as to their destination. Medvar v. State, 286 Ga. App. 177, 648 S.E.2d 406 (2007).

On appeal from a conviction for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, the court held that despite the fact that the police were authorized to conduct a brief investigatory stop of the defendant's vehicle, the resulting detention beyond that authorized as a Terry stop evolved into an illegal arrest. Hence, the evidence seized thereafter became the fruit of the poisonous tree and should have been suppressed. Grandberry v. State, 289 Ga. App. 534, 658 S.E.2d 161 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained at a roadblock after finding that the defendant's detention by the officers was not excessive because the trial court was authorized to conclude that the brief detention of the defendant was neither unreasonable nor illegal; the trial court's findings that the arresting officer detained the defendant for 20 minutes after the initial portable breath test to conduct an additional test and that the 20 minute delay was for the defendant's benefit to insure that the portable alcohol test was not affected by residual alcohol due to the defendant's recent consumption of alcoholic beverages were supported by the evidence. Owens v. State, 308 Ga. App. 374, 707 S.E.2d 584 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1036, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2011).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence deputies seized from the defendant's car because the deputies did not have reasonable grounds upon which to continue to detain the defendant after the deputies called for a drug dog; the state offered no evidence that the deputies still were investigating the defendant's failure to properly signal a right turn when the deputies called for a canine unit to come to the scene and detained the defendant until the dog arrived or that the deputies had a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was involved in some criminal activity besides the traffic violation when the deputies called for the drug dog and continued to detain the defendant until the dog arrived and sniffed the car. Dominguez v. State, 310 Ga. App. 370, 714 S.E.2d 25 (2011).

Police officer impermissibly extended a traffic stop without specific and articulable facts to warrant the detention; while the officer observed nervousness in the defendant, that was not sufficient to extend the stop and there was no other evidence from which the officer could have formed reasonable and articulable suspicion of illegal activity. Weems v. State, 318 Ga. App. 749, 734 S.E.2d 749 (2012), overruled on other grounds, State v. Allen, 298 Ga. 1, 779 S.E.2d 248 (2015).

Stop of vehicle not unreasonably prolonged. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer recovered from the defendant's vehicle because the evidence supported the trial court's finding that the officer did not unreasonably prolong the stop of the vehicle, and once the drug dog alerted to the vehicle, the officer had probable cause to search the vehicle; a brief detention was authorized because it was reasonable for the officer to be suspicious in light of the defendant's furtive movement at the initial point of the stop, and that suspicion was heightened when the defendant attempted to explain that the defendant was looking for the defendant's wallet but then retrieved the defendant's license from a different part of the car, and when the defendant revoked the defendant's consent to search. Hardaway v. State, 309 Ga. App. 432, 710 S.E.2d 634 (2011).

Passenger in car owned by another has no interest in car and no standing to object to search. Autry v. State, 150 Ga. App. 584, 258 S.E.2d 268, overruled on other grounds, Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Objection to search not available to one who makes no claim to ownership. — Objection that an automobile was illegally searched without a warrant is not available to one who makes no claim to the ownership or possession of the automobile or its contents and who was not present at the time of the search.

Gugliotta v. State, 117 Ga. App. 212, 160 S.E.2d 266 (1968).

There is nothing unlawful in government's appropriation of abandoned property, which does not constitute a search or seizure in the legal sense. Marshall v. State, 153 Ga. App. 198, 264 S.E.2d 718 (1980).

Stolen items in plain view but not mentioned in warrant. — Seizure of items in plain view suspected to have been derived from recent area burglaries while executing a search warrant for documents proving theft of services was valid when the incriminating character of the items was immediately apparent and the officer had a lawful right to visual and physical access of the objects themselves. Nichols v. State, 210 Ga. App. 134, 435 S.E.2d 502 (1993).

Invalid arrest warrant. — Because a search yielding evidence used against the defendant was incident to the execution of an arrest warrant which was later invalidated, and no good faith exception existed, the evidence seized against the defendant should have been suppressed, as the arresting officer had no other basis to search the car in which the defendant was a passenger. Register v. State, 281 Ga. App. 822, 637 S.E.2d 761 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 216 (Ga. 2007).

Nature of offense has bearing on objects seized as incidental to arrest. — The nature of the offense for which the accused is arrested has an important bearing upon what objects may be seized as incidental to the arrest. Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967).

Inapplicability of constitutional inhibition to confiscation of illegally kept devices. — The constitutional inhibition against unlawful searches and seizures has no application to a confiscation of illegally kept devices for the hazarding of money in a place of business open to the general public. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

The protection afforded by this paragraph will not prevent a seizure and confiscation by a proper legal officer of "slot machines" for evidence or destruction when such machines are found unlawfully kept by a person, and when their seizure does not involve a search of private premises. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

No aid from court to owner seeking to retain implements of crime. — Regardless of the nature of the place where a portion of illegal instrumentalities was seized, the court did not err in granting the interlocutory injunction and in continuing in force the writ of prohibition, sought by the sheriff and the solicitor general (now district attorney) against the owner who was suing to regain possession of the seized devices, since the courts will not lend their aid to assist or protect an owner seeking to retain implements of crime such as gaming or lottery paraphernalia. Elder v. Camp, 193 Ga. 320, 18 S.E.2d 622 (1942).

"Mere presence" rule not applicable to accused's residence. — Rule that "mere presence" of individual in area where contraband is seized will not support conviction has no application when the area involved is the accused's permanent residence. McDade v. State, 175 Ga. App. 204, 332 S.E.2d 672 (1985).

"Equal access" rule application to permanent residence of accused. — "Equal access" rule, precluding conviction where contraband is found in a common area to which many people have access, had no application if the contraband was discovered in the permanent residence of the three accuseds (father, mother, and son), all three were alleged to be in joint constructive possession of the contraband, and the three had had no visitors during the period after the search warrant was issued and before it was executed. McDade v. State, 175 Ga. App. 204, 332 S.E.2d 672 (1985).

Voluntary consent of head of household. — The voluntary consent of the head of a household to the search of premises owned or controlled by such head of the household is sufficient to authorize a search of the premises without a search warrant, and such search does not violate the constitutional prohibition against unreasonable searches and seizures. Crawford v. State, 181 Ga. App. 454, 352 S.E.2d 635 (1987).

Because the defendant's grandfather, as the head of household, possessed the authority over the entire house, including the defendant's bedroom where the defendant lived rent-free, the trial court properly found that the consent given by the grandfather was properly granted, and hence served as the proper basis to deny the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized in the bedroom; as a result, the defendant's armed robbery conviction was upheld on appeal. Rhone v. State, 283 Ga. App. 553, 642 S.E.2d 185 (2007).

Defendant's appearance and a cut in defendant's jacket shoulder, defendant's proximity to the burglary site. — the observation of a running person believed by the officer to be the same one stopped pursuant to the description by the other officer a few minutes later, the short time between the report of the burglar alarm and the apprehension of defendant, the absence of anyone else in the area matching the suspect's description, defendant's nervousness, and the deputy's knowledge of defendant's prior record of burglary and escape, added up to probable cause to arrest the defendant. State v. Wilson, 179 Ga. App. 334, 346 S.E.2d 111 (1986).

Coercion not established by mere fact of arrest. — The mere fact that an accused is under legal arrest when the consent to a search is given does not establish the consent was made involuntarily or by coercion. Wright v. State, 189 Ga. App. 441, 375 S.E.2d 895 (1988).

Recent possession justified search. — Upon the defendant's arrest for simple battery, and after the arresting officer had been told that the defendant was known to carry a gun, a search of a bag within the defendant's immediate possession was lawful as a search incident to the defendant's arrest; it did not matter that the defendant was in handcuffs at the time the police searched the bag; the decisive factor was whether the defendant was, at the time of arrest, in recent possession of the item being searched. Hill v. State, 263 Ga. App. 365, 587 S.E.2d 843 (2003).

Detention reasonable after officer noticed sawed off shotgun in defendant's vehicle. — Because a police officer noticed that a shotgun in defendant's vehicle had been sawed off, the officer acted reasonably in further detaining defendant to determine whether defendant had, in fact, violated O.C.G.A. § 16-11-122. Castleberry v. State, 275 Ga. App. 37, 619 S.E.2d 747 (2005).

Guilty plea waives suppression issue on appeal. — Because the defendant pled guilty to the charges of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, the defendant waived any claim that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence of said firearm found in the defendant's residence. Stuart v. State, 267 Ga. App. 463, 600 S.E.2d 629 (2004).

Pretrial detainees. — When the search of a pretrial detainee's cell is instigated or conducted by the prosecution solely for the purpose of uncovering incriminating evidence which could be used against the detainee at trial, rather than out of concern for any legitimate prison objectives, the detainee retains a limited but legitimate expectation of privacy that the detainee would be protected in such circumstances from an unreasonable search. State v. Henderson, 271 Ga. 264, 517 S.E.2d 61 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1083, 120 S. Ct. 807, 145 L. Ed. 2d 680 (2000).

Prisoners. — The ruling in Hudson v. Palmer, 468 U.S. 517, 104 S. Ct. 3194, 82 L. Ed. 2d 393 (1984), making the Fourth Amendment of the United States Constitution inapplicable to searches of convicted prisoners' cells, reflects the proper interpretation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII. State v. Henderson, 271 Ga. 264, 517 S.E.2d 61 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1083, 120 S. Ct. 807, 145 L. Ed. 2d 680 (2000).

Equal access rule inapplicable. — Because the defendant was not charged with possessing cocaine and no presumption of ownership of the premises arose, the equal access rule was not applicable. Jackson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 278, 609 S.E.2d 207 (2005).

Tipster. — Trial court erred in failing to suppress evidence seized in the wake of an invalid stop of the defendant's car; although a police officer was able to corroborate a tipster's description of the vehicle, the vehicle's location, and the fact that there was a black male driver and female passenger, the tip did not provide any information concerning the defendant's future behavior. Rucker v. State, 276 Ga. App. 683, 624 S.E.2d 259 (2005).

Because the trial court found that officers acting on an anonymous tip that marijuana was being grown at the defendant's residence were within their rights when they saw marijuana from the adjoining property, when they smelled marijuana from the driveway, and when they went to both the front and the back doors of the house in an attempt to make contact with someone, and the grounds given in the affidavit supporting a search warrant application were wholly unconnected with the defendant's arrest and the two protective sweeps, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Padgett v. State, 287 Ga. App. 789, 653 S.E.2d 102 (2007), cert. denied, No. S08C0415, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 209 (Ga. 2008).

Because the information provided by a confidential informant was reliable and substantially corroborated by police officers, probable cause to search the defendant existed; accordingly, because the warrantless search was authorized with or without defendant's consent, there was no basis to suppress the drug evidence found on the defendant's person. Hall v. State, 310 Ga. App. 397, 714 S.E.2d 7 (2011).

Exigent circumstances found. — Because evidence of sufficient exigent circumstances were presented to law enforcement officers to justify a warrantless search of the defendant's home, and if a warrant would have been obtained, many of those individuals, if left to their own devices, could have attempted to drive home, placing both themselves and the general public at risk, the warrantless search of the defendant's residence was justified; moreover, if a warrant would have been obtained, evidence of the crime of furnishing alcohol to minors could have easily been destroyed when the minors left the scene of the crime. Burk v. State, 284 Ga. App. 843, 644 S.E.2d 914 (2007).

Because sufficient exigent circumstances existed to authorize a sheriff's deputy to enter the defendant's backyard and seize a number of animals the officer observed were malnourished and mistreated, and given the harsh weather conditions and impending holiday, obtaining a warrant would have been unreasonable, the defendant's motions to suppress and in limine seeking to preclude admission of the evidence seized were properly denied. Moreover, the evidence seized after the defendant's lawful arrest, and observed in plain view by the officer upon being allowed to enter the defendant's residence, was also properly admitted. Morgan v. State, 289 Ga. App. 209, 656 S.E.2d 857 (2008).

Contrary to the defendant's argument, the trial court did not err in failing to grant the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal in the defendant's trial for obstruction of a law enforcement officer, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-24(a), based on the defendant's claim that the defendant was entitled to resist an unlawful search of the defendant's premises; among other things, exigent circumstances existed to justify the officers' warrantless entry onto the defendant's property because officers observed that the defendant's dogs did not have their required rabies tags, and further investigation, including the capturing of the animals, was necessary to protect the public against a risk of rabies. Jarvis v. State, 294 Ga. App. 482, 669 S.E.2d 477 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress photographs obtained subsequent to police officers' entry into the defendant's home because the officers' entry was authorized by the exigent circumstances exception to the warrant requirement of the Fourth Amendment; the trial court was authorized to find that the age of the defendant's children, the children's undisputed inability to care for themselves, and the lack of adult supervision due to the defendant's absence and their father's arrest constituted an exigent circumstance that authorized the officers' entry into the residence for the purpose of temporarily supervising the children until a responsible adult arrived to relieve the officers, and once the officers were legally in the house pursuant to the exigent circumstances, the officers were authorized to photograph items of potential evidentiary significance that were in plain view, specifically, the family's living conditions. Staib v. State, 309 Ga. App. 785, 711 S.E.2d 362 (2011).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence the murder weapon and photographs of the crime scene because the search of the defendant's residence was authorized due to the exigent circumstances; officers arrived at the residence to conduct a welfare check and knocked on the door, which caused the door to open slightly, allowing the officers to see the victim lying motionless on the couch, and after the victim failed to respond to the officers' calls, the officers were authorized to proceed into the residence immediately to come to the victim's aid. Gibson v. State, 290 Ga. 6, 717 S.E.2d 447 (2011).

Warrant supported by probable cause. — Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as to an arrest warrant as the warrant was supported by probable cause since a witness identified the defendant and stated that the defendant was present at the murder scene and another witness confirmed the identification through a photo lineup and testified to observing the defendant carry out the actual crime; even if the affidavit contained allegedly misleading information that one witness was the victim's cousin and that the defendant was identified by witnesses via a six-photo lineup was redacted, the remaining information was still sufficient to support the probable cause finding. Waters v. State, 281 Ga. 119, 636 S.E.2d 538 (2006).

There was probable cause supporting a warrant to arrest the defendant for a homicide; although the defendant claimed that the victim had committed suicide, evidence pointed to a homicide, and the defendant had been found kneeling over the victim in an apparent attempt to stage a suicide. Hulsey v. State, 284 Ga. App. 461, 643 S.E.2d 888 (2007).

Probable cause shown. — There was probable cause for a murder defendant's arrest since police officers had been informed by other residents in the home where the defendant was living that the defendant had admitted killing the victims and that the defendant had shown the residents a tooth from one of the victims. Stinski v. State, 281 Ga. 783, 642 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

The trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized by a state trooper who was lawfully investigating a serious injury accident the defendant was involved in, as evidence the trooper found, specifically, some steel wool and prescription drugs, when coupled with other information the trooper possessed concerning the nature and cause of the crash, provided sufficient probable cause for the trooper to believe that the defendant was driving under the influence; further, the appeals court agreed that the evidence would have been inevitably discovered. Cunningham v. State, 284 Ga. App. 739, 644 S.E.2d 878 (2007).

Given the evidence that the defendant was unable to offer a credible explanation for being on the grounds of a housing project, and failed to provide a law enforcement officer with a clear answer when asked about the ownership of a car the defendant had been leaning on, the officer had probable cause to make a warrantless arrest of the defendant for loitering; thus, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of that arrest. Boyd v. State, 290 Ga. App. 34, 658 S.E.2d 782 (2008).

There was no merit to a defendant's argument that the trial court should have suppressed evidence because police lacked probable cause for the defendant's arrest. Officers knew that within minutes of a carjacking, three people matching an eyewitness's description were seen in the vicinity of the crime driving vehicles also matching the eyewitness's description; the suspects were followed by police until the suspects abandoned their vehicles and fled across a highway and through a muddy, overgrown area; almost immediately, the officers found the defendant on the other side of the highway, at a closed business, with muddy shoes and debris on the defendant's clothes, sweating profusely; the defendant generally matched the description given of one of the fleeing suspects; and the defendant could not give a logical explanation for the defendant's presence at that location. Daugherty v. State, 291 Ga. App. 541, 662 S.E.2d 318 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 792 (Ga. 2008).

2. Searches

Plain view. — No abuse of discretion resulted from the admission of similar transaction evidence because the state established a sufficient similarity between the crimes charged and the similar transaction; and the defendant failed to show that the evidence in the similar transaction was obtained as a result of an illegal search and seizure, as the officer involved in the seizure did so through a lawful non-search plain view situation. Sherrer v. State, 289 Ga. App. 156, 656 S.E.2d 258 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 391 (Ga. 2008).

Photographs of items in plain view. — Juvenile court did not err by admitting photographs of a parent's home during deprivation proceedings because pretermittting whether a purported violation of the Fourth Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para XIII would preclude the admission of photographs in a child deprivation action, police officers were authorized to take photographs of items observed in plain view as long as the officer was in a place where the officer was entitled to be; even assuming that the admission of the photographs was erroneous, the parent failed to show that the parent was harmed thereby in light of the remaining evidence supporting the juvenile court's determination that the children were deprived. In the Interest of R. C. H., 307 Ga. App. 774, 706 S.E.2d 686 (2011).

Warrant required to search curtilage. — It is the general rule that a warrant is required to search the curtilage, and the yard immediately surrounding one's dwelling is well within the curtilage. Black v. State, 119 Ga. App. 855, 168 S.E.2d 916 (1969).

Public safety exception. — When the "public safety" exception allowed a police officer to ask the defendant about the location of a knife prior to giving the Miranda warnings, the trial court did not err in admitting the defendant's statements and the knife into evidence. Martin v. State, 277 Ga. 227, 587 S.E.2d 650 (2003).

Prima facie search made within curtilage of owner without warrant is unconstitutional and void. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

"Curtilage" defined. — "Curtilage" includes the yards and grounds of a particular address, its gardens, barns, buildings, etc. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Enclosure is unnecessary to mark boundary of curtilage. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Search of curtilage. — Defendant's consent to search the defendant's house impliedly included consent to search the curtilage, in which a "hobo," or garbage can, was located. Woods v. State, 258 Ga. 540, 371 S.E.2d 865 (1988).

It is confusing to combine the concepts of "common area" and "curtilage" in deciding whether a particular area adjoining an apartment building is entitled to protection. The test should be the reasonableness of the resident's expectation of privacy and the officer's reasons for being in the yard. Espinoza v. State, 265 Ga. 171, 454 S.E.2d 765 (1995).

Evidence was not within the curtilage shared by two units in a duplex since the evidence was not found in the hallway leading to both units or in the front yard between two driveways leading to the dwelling. Evidence located in the yard outside the driveway leading to the defendant's unit, an area where the defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy, i.e., a part of the curtilage of the defendant's unit, for which police did not have a search warrant, should have been suppressed. Espinoza v. State, 265 Ga. 171, 454 S.E.2d 765 (1995).

Trial court properly granted defendants' motions to suppress evidence of drugs and drug paraphernalia found at the residence owned by one defendant as officers had already learned that the person they were looking for stayed at a trailer next door, and thus officers engaged in impermissible search of the curtilage when officers found a bag of drugs 45 feet from the defendants' house; as a result, all evidence seized in course of subsequent searches of the property was obtained as a direct result of the impermissible intrusion into the curtilage and had to be suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree. State v. Gravitt, 289 Ga. App. 868, 658 S.E.2d 424 (2008).

Vehicles parked within the curtilage of a dwelling to be searched pursuant to a warrant may also be searched pursuant to that warrant. Midura v. State, 183 Ga. App. 523, 359 S.E.2d 416 (1987).

Continued detention when driver unable to produce driver's license. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress when a police officer was authorized to stop the vehicle the defendant was driving because of a perceived traffic violation and to continue the officer's investigation because the defendant did not have a driver's license; the particularized and objective basis for the initial stop was the information from the Georgia Crime Information Center that the male owner of the registered vehicle defendant was operating had a suspended driver's license, and once the stop was made, and it was ascertained that the defendant was not the owner of the car, the officer had a duty to further investigate only because defendant could not produce a driver's license. Humphreys v. State, 304 Ga. App. 365, 696 S.E.2d 400 (2010).

Search of passengers on commercial bus. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress evidence of drugs found in a bag that the defendant acknowledged belonged to the defendant during a bus search conducted by the Motor Carrier Compliance Division of the Georgia Department of Motor Vehicle Safety as the defendant was not in custody when the defendant answered an officer's questions that the bag belonged to the defendant and that the officer could search the bag. As a result, no seizure under the Fourth Amendment occurred, and it was not necessary for the officer to advise the defendant of the defendant's Miranda rights since no arrest or seizure took place. Solano-Rodriguez v. State, 295 Ga. App. 896, 673 S.E.2d 351 (2009).

Marijuana field not in curtilage. — Marijuana patch was not within the curtilage of the defendant's home since the patch was between 30 feet and 30 yards from the house, no fences or enclosures surrounded the patch and the home, and officers had legally viewed the patch from the air and knew before entering the area that it was used to grow marijuana and not for an intimate domestic activity; the marijuana plants were not growing inside a structure of any kind or shielded by any covering, but were located in a 30 to 40 acre kudzu field and surrounded by a mesh hog-wire fence. Gordon v. State, 277 Ga. App. 247, 626 S.E.2d 214 (2006).

Apartment renter or owner in Georgia has reasonable expectation of privacy in curtilage surrounding the apartment. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Seizure invalid when intrusion into curtilage without probable cause. — An intrusion by police officers into curtilage, without probable cause to search or arrest, without a warrant, and without exigent circumstances, renders the subsequent seizure invalid. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980).

Because the seizure of cash found on the defendant's person was conducted based on a lawful arrest for a domestic violence act of assault, given information by the defendant's girlfriend, the girlfriend's obvious injuries, and the defendant's attempt to flee, the trial court properly denied suppression of the evidence; however, because the defendant maintained a reasonable expectation of privacy in the curtilage surrounding the defendant's residence, absent a warrant or exigent circumstances, suppression of cocaine found in that area was erroneously denied. Rivers v. State, 287 Ga. App. 632, 653 S.E.2d 78 (2007).

Evidence connecting vehicle with premises required before authorized search pursuant to warrant. — In order to authorize a search of a vehicle parked within the curtilage of the premises which are to be searched pursuant to a warrant, there must be some evidence to connect the vehicle with the premises. Albert v. State, 155 Ga. App. 99, 270 S.E.2d 220 (1980).

Probable cause for belief that certain articles subject to seizure are in dwelling cannot of itself justify search without warrant. Black v. State, 119 Ga. App. 855, 168 S.E.2d 916 (1969).

Person's presence at suspect place. — A citizen does not, by mere presence at a suspect place, lose the constitutional right from unreasonable search of the citizen's person and the citizen's property to which the citizen otherwise would be entitled. Collins v. State, 187 Ga. App. 430, 370 S.E.2d 648 (1988).

Warrant usually required before search of luggage seized from automobile. — In the absence of exigent circumstances or some exception to the warrant requirement other than that applicable to automobiles, a warrant must be obtained before searching personal luggage seized from a lawfully stopped automobile. Buday v. State, 150 Ga. App. 686, 258 S.E.2d 318 (1979).

Consent to search invalid. — Trial court did not err in granting defendant's motion to suppress evidence of cocaine found during a search incident to a traffic stop because defendant's consent to search was not valid since the defendant was under arrest for loud music; the fact that defendant was nervous after being stopped by a state trooper was not in and of itself sufficient articulable suspicion which would result in probable cause to search defendant's vehicle. State v. McCloud, 261 Ga. App. 37, 581 S.E.2d 679 (2003).

Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized by law enforcement which showed that the first officer on the scene lacked a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in criminal activity, and after a back-up officer arrived, neither officer was placed in fear of their safety by the defendant's actions; thus, the first officer's acts of detaining the defendant and asking for consent to search were unlawful. State v. Lanes, 287 Ga. App. 311, 651 S.E.2d 456 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 85 (Ga. 2008).

Search of visitor's bag. — Trial court properly suppressed evidence gathered in connection with a warrantless search of a bag owned by the defendant after the defendant's arrest at a friend's house. The search was not incident to the defendant's arrest under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1, as the defendant was already secured in a patrol car and there was no contention that the bag was related to the outstanding warrant on which the defendant had been arrested; the consent given by the defendant's friend to the search of the friend's home did not override the privacy interest that the defendant, a visitor, had in the bag; and there was no testimony that the bag was searched as part of an inventory of the defendant's personal effects. State v. McCarthy, 288 Ga. App. 426, 654 S.E.2d 239 (2007).

Search of lost wallet. — A trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress the drug evidence found in defendant's wallet, which defendant lost at a concert, and the shell of a plastic pen in defendant's pocket after being searched, since by losing the wallet and not abandoning the wallet, the defendant never lost the expectation of privacy regarding the wallet. Wolf v. State, 291 Ga. App. 876, 663 S.E.2d 292 (2008).

Search of purse during booking process. — Upon the defendant's arrest based on a warrant for failure to appear, the defendant was subject to being transported to jail for booking and the trial court did not err in concluding that the contents of the defendant's purse would have been inevitably discovered as part of the booking process associated with the defendant's lawful arrest. Schweitzer v. State, 319 Ga. App. 837, 738 S.E.2d 669 (2013).

Search of desk at work. — A trial court erred by failing to suppress the evidence seized by the police from defendant's desk at work and concluding that no warrant was required for the search of the desk because it was unlocked and was in a workspace shared by numerous co-workers. A warrant was required for the search of the desk and, since the warrant authorizing the search was issued without a showing of probable cause based on the tip of an unidentified caller, and there was no exception to the warrant requirement shown, the fruits of the search of the desk had to be suppressed. Harper v. State, 283 Ga. 102, 657 S.E.2d 213 (2008).

Search of vehicle of corrections officer in prison parking lot. — Trial court properly denied a motion to suppress filed by the defendant, a corrections officer, whose car was searched after a drug-detecting dog alerted in the parking lot of the prison where the defendant worked. Signs posted outside the prison informed those entering that they would be subject to search once inside the guard line; by driving onto the premises, the defendant consented to such a search. Bradley v. State, 292 Ga. App. 737, 665 S.E.2d 428 (2008).

Breath test admissible in DUI. — Defendant's breath test was admissible because the defendant consented after being read an implied consent warning as required by O.C.G.A. § 40-5-67.1(b)(2), and there was no evidence that the officers used fear, intimidation, threat, or lengthy detention to obtain the defendant's consent, although the defendant was arrested and in handcuffs when the notice was read. Kendrick v. State, 335 Ga. App. 766, 782 S.E.2d 842 (2016).

Roadblocks. — Police roadblock for driving under the influence (DUI) was proper, and defendant's motion to suppress evidence collected at the roadblock was properly denied, since: the decision to set up the roadblock was made by a supervisory officer who also approved the time and the place of the roadblock; the roadblock served a legitimate purpose; all vehicles were stopped at the roadblock; the screening officer had prior training and experience with respect to field sobriety testing, police checkpoint implementation, and DUI detection; the delay to motorists was minimal; and the roadblock was well-identified by several signs, an emergency vehicle, a police car with flashing lights, and officers at the scene. Carson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 501, 629 S.E.2d 487 (2006).

Despite the defendant's claim on appeal that evidence was obtained by police conducting an illegal roadblock and that an arbitrary desire to keep officers busy was not a sufficient purpose to justify the roadblock, the trial court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence seized from the roadblock, as its primary purpose was to check for drivers' licenses, seat belts, and vehicle registrations, and not general law enforcement. Cater v. State, 280 Ga. App. 891, 635 S.E.2d 246 (2006).

Roadblock, implemented by a lieutenant in the police department with 19 years of experience in order to check for drunk drivers and drivers without a license or insurance, was valid under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII; the lieutenant was a supervisor authorized to plan a roadblock, and the roadblock had a valid purpose. Giacini v. State, 281 Ga. App. 426, 636 S.E.2d 145 (2006).

Because a form document, entitled the "Henry County Police Department Roadblock & Safety Checkpoint Record," introduced at a motion to suppress hearing by the state was properly admitted as a business record under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-8-803), and the testimonial evidence regarding the primary purpose of the roadblock passed constitutional muster, in that it was legitimately conducted as part of a statewide "zero tolerance" campaign, the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result was properly denied. Yingst v. State, 287 Ga. App. 43, 650 S.E.2d 746 (2007).

Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence obtained during a traffic stop because there was some evidence that the defendant attempted to avoid a roadblock; the defendant made an immediate, sudden turn into a driveway, reversed course, and drove away from the checkpoint at the same time that the police officer noticed the defendant's headlights. Blakely v. State, 316 Ga. App. 213, 729 S.E.2d 434 (2012).

Motion to suppress evidence obtained at a highway roadblock was properly denied because the supervisory officer did not lose supervisory status while assisting subordinates when traffic was backed up, and the officer's uncontradicted testimony that the officer was expressly authorized to plan and implement roadblocks was sufficient to establish supervisory authority. Williams v. State, 317 Ga. App. 658, 732 S.E.2d 531 (2012).

Articulable suspicion insufficient to validate warrantless search. — An articulable suspicion is not sufficient in and of itself to validate an otherwise invalid warrantless search of a stopped or detained automobile. McKinney v. State, 155 Ga. App. 930, 273 S.E.2d 888 (1980).

Absence of articulable suspicion. — When an officer had the defendant put the defendant's hands on the truck during a traffic stop and began to frisk the defendant, a seizure occurred, and since there was no articulable suspicion of criminal activity, the detention and search were illegal; the evidence belied any supposed threat, so the officer's frisk of the defendant was not a justified Terry stop and frisk. Debord v. State, 276 Ga. App. 110, 622 S.E.2d 460 (2005).

Failure of the police to knock and give verbal notice may be excused if the police have reasonable grounds to believe that forewarning would either greatly increase their peril or lead to the immediate destruction of the evidence. Martin v. State, 165 Ga. App. 760, 302 S.E.2d 614 (1983).

Van parked in adjoining lot not subject to search authorized of house. — Since the defendant's van was parked in the driveway of a vacant lot adjoining the residence mentioned in the search warrant, the search of the van was not conducted within the dwelling described in the warrant or the dwelling's curtilage and was therefore unauthorized. Landers v. State, 250 Ga. 808, 301 S.E.2d 633 (1983).

Search held contemporaneous to arrest. — When the defendant's arrest was lawful, the fact that the arresting officer took the time to write out two traffic tickets before searching the defendant's vehicle did not render the search noncontemporaneous to the arrest. Oswell v. State, 181 Ga. App. 35, 351 S.E.2d 221 (1986).

Search of the defendant's clothes, during which crack cocaine was found in the defendant's pocket, was proper as it was incident to a lawful arrest. Finney v.

State, 270 Ga. App. 422, 606 S.E.2d 637 (2004).

Since an officer had probable cause to arrest a juvenile from the time that a cellophane bag, still warm to the touch and filled with marijuana, was found near where the juvenile had been standing, a search of the juvenile's pocket, which yielded a bag of methamphetamine powder, was permissible as a search incident to lawful arrest, even though arrest formalities had not yet occurred. In the Interest of J.D.G., 278 Ga. App. 672, 629 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Warrantless arrest of the defendant was authorized on the ground that a sale of cocaine was committed in the officers' presence, and after the defendant retreated into a motel room, the exigencies of the situation demanded and excused an immediate entry into the room for the officer to arrest the defendant without a warrant; hence, suppression of the evidence seized thereafter would not have been granted. Fortson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 120, 640 S.E.2d 693 (2006).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to move to suppress evidence found on the defendant's person because any motion to suppress would have been without merit; when the officers lawfully approached and questioned the defendant, the smell of alcohol on the defendant's person and emanating from a cup, and the officers' earlier observations of the defendant staggering and stumbling in the middle of the roadway, gave the officers probable cause to arrest the defendant for unlawfully walking upon the roadway while under the influence of alcohol, O.C.G.A. § 40-6-95, and the cocaine and digital scales subsequently found in the defendant's pockets were discovered pursuant to a lawful search incident to an arrest. White v. State, 310 Ga. App. 386, 714 S.E.2d 31 (2011).

Search of vehicle following arrest not improper. — Although there may have been technical violations of former O.C.G.A. § 40-5-121(b)(1) in an officer's arrest of a driver for driving with a suspended license, the driver's statement that the driver's license was suspended provided the officer with probable cause to arrest, and any violation of

§ 40-5-121(b)(1) did not render the subsequent search of the van improper. Agnew v. State, 298 Ga. App. 290, 680 S.E.2d 141 (2009).

Use of a trained drug detection dog. in a location where the dog is entitled to be, to sniff the exterior of a container, is not an unreasonable search. O'Keefe v. State, 189 Ga. App. 519, 376 S.E.2d 406 (1988), cert. denied, 189 Ga. App. 519, 376 S.E.2d 406 (1989); State v. Montford, 217 Ga. App. 339, 457 S.E.2d 229 (1995).

"Free air search" by a drug sniffing dog around the exterior of a vehicle stopped during a purportedly valid traffic stop in which the police did not have an articulable, reasonable suspicion of any illegal drug activity was valid under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII. Bowens v. State, 276 Ga. App. 520, 623 S.E.2d 677 (2005).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's suppression motion, as the evidence showed that once an officer obtained the defendant's consent to conduct a free air search around the vehicle the defendant was driving, a drug dog alerted to contraband that would be contained therein, and once this occurred, the officer had probable cause to believe the defendant was transporting drugs. Garvin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 242, 641 S.E.2d 176 (2006).

A urinalysis constitutes a search and seizure. Smith v. City of E. Point, 183 Ga. App. 659, 359 S.E.2d 692 (1987), rev'd on other grounds, 258 Ga. 111, 365 S.E.2d 432 (1988).

City's urinalysis testing of employees with police powers was constitutionally reasonable since a compelling need for the use of urinalysis was demonstrated by reports of marijuana use, the interest the city had in preventing that use, and the fact that the city first attempted to solve the problem by conventional means. City of E. Point v. Smith, 258 Ga. 111, 365 S.E.2d 432 (1988).

Taking saliva samples for DNA testing not unconstitutional. — Former O.C.G.A. § 24-4-60 (see now O.C.G.A. § 35-3-160) did not violate the Fourth Amendment or Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XII, as Georgia's legitimate interest in creating a permanent identification record of convicted felons for law enforcement purposes outweighs the minor intrusion involved in taking prisoners' saliva samples and storing DNA profiles, given their reduced expectation of privacy in their identities. Padgett v. Donald, 401 F.3d 1273 (11th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 820, 126 S. Ct. 352, 163 L. Ed. 2d 61 (2005).

Terry search of auto passenger. — A Terry pat-down search is authorized when the officer reasonably believes that it is necessary to protect the officer from attack, including the search of passengers in vehicles omitted from the original police notifications. Dowdy v. State, 209 Ga. App. 311, 433 S.E.2d 293 (1993).

Passenger had standing to contest seizure and detention. — Because the passenger had standing to contest the passenger's own allegedly illegal seizure and detention in connection with a traffic stop, and because evidence or contraband discovered in a search of the car during the traffic stop could be considered the fruits of the passenger's illegal detention, the passenger could move to suppress the evidence or contraband and could thus indirectly challenge the search of the car. State v. Menezes, 286 Ga. App. 280, 648 S.E.2d 741 (2007).

Pat-down search held proper. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized by law enforcement, given the totality of the circumstances presented, including: (1) an anonymous tip; (2) the two responding officers' personal observations of the defendant's actions at the scene; and (3) their brief investigative detention of the defendant; thus, a pat-down of the defendant's outer clothing was reasonable. Carter v. State, 287 Ga. App. 597, 651 S.E.2d 759 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 172 (Ga. 2008).

An officer was justified in being concerned for the officer's safety and in conducting a pat-down search of the defendant based upon the officer's observations of the defendant's earlier behavior of repeatedly tugging at the defendant's waistband to pull up the defendant's sagging pants, the bulge in the defendant's waistband that appeared to be a pistol grip, and the defendant's actions of raising the defendant's left hand and reaching toward that bulge when the officer approached the defendant. Davis v. State, 290 Ga. App. 1, 658 S.E.2d 788 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the search of the defendant's pockets was valid; the officers had a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in criminal activity, and because the pat-down was brief, yielded no evidence, and was not a basis for the further investigative detention, it did not taint the defendant's subsequent consent to the search of the pockets. Mwangi v. State, 316 Ga. App. 52, 728 S.E.2d 729 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the initial encounter was a first-tier encounter requiring no suspicion since the defendant was already stopped and the officer did not block the defendant's vehicle, activate the blue lights, or otherwise indicate that the defendant was unable to leave; the subsequent pat-down was proper because the pat-down was performed pursuant to the defendant's consent, which the defendant freely gave when requested by the officer. Kirkland v. State, 316 Ga. App. 310, 728 S.E.2d 907 (2012).

Pat-down search held improper. — Trial counsel was ineffective for not seeking to suppress evidence; before conducting a pat-down, officers had not obtained any information that would support a reasonable belief that the defendant was armed or dangerous, and there was prejudice in that the evidence supporting the convictions all resulted, directly or indirectly, from the search. Perez v. State, 284 Ga. App. 212, 643 S.E.2d 792 (2007).

When a defendant was asked to leave a car and was patted down while a warrant was being served on the driver, the Terry pat-down was unconstitutional when the officer who conducted the pat down acknowledged that the officer had no reason to believe that the defendant was armed but that it was the officer's general practice to pat down anyone the officer asked to leave a car. Accordingly, drugs discovered as a result of the pat-down should have been suppressed. Teal v. State, 291 Ga. App. 488, 662 S.E.2d 268 (2008).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress a gun police officers found on the defendant's person because although the officers had a sufficient basis for a brief initial Terry stop since the defendant partially fit the description given by the victim of the person who attacked the victim, the officers had no authority to conduct the pat-down that discovered the weapon on the defendant's person; the fact that the officers suspected that the defendant could have been the one that assaulted the victim did not reasonably give rise to a belief that the defendant was armed and a threat to the officers, and because the record revealed no proof of other circumstances known to the officers when the officers commenced the frisk that would lead a reasonable officer to conclude that the defendant had a weapon or instrument capable of being used as a weapon on the defendant's person, the state did not carry the state's burden of proving the propriety of the search. Daniels v. State, 307 Ga. App. 216, 704 S.E.2d 466 (2010).

Pat-down search exceeded permissible scope. — Because the state introduced no evidence that the defendant consented to an officer's opening of a matchbox retrieved from the defendant's pants, the officer was not concerned that a weapon was hidden in the box, and the box was not readily identifiable as contraband, the search of the defendant's person exceeded the permissible scope of a pat-down for weapons, requiring suppression of the cocaine found inside the matchbox. Mason v. State, 285 Ga. App. 596, 647 S.E.2d 308 (2007).

Third-tier detention. — Trial court erred in finding that a narcotics investigator only escalated an encounter to a second-tier detention by using a neck restraint maneuver and ordering the defendant to spit out what was in the defendant's mouth because by placing the defendant in a neck restraint and ordering the defendant to spit out the baggy, the investigator escalated the encounter to a third-tier detention requiring a showing of probable cause; thus, the trial court erred in treating the encounter as a second-tier detention requiring only a showing of reasonable suspicion. Lewis v. State, 317 Ga. App. 391, 730 S.E.2d 757 (2012).

Pat-down of pocket of coat found hanging in hotel. — Marijuana was properly seized from the pocket of a coat hanging outside the bathroom door in the defendant's hotel room; the officer who needed to enter the closed bathroom was justifiably concerned for safety and was worried if a bulge in the coat was a gun. A pat-down of the coat pocket was a reasonable step, and the officer was authorized to seize a baggie found in the pocket. Johnson v. State, 285 Ga. 571, 679 S.E.2d 340 (2009).

Search incident to arrest. — Defendant's Fourth Amendment rights were not violated when drug agents searched the bag defendant was carrying after defendant got off a train in a Georgia city and defendant fit the profile of a drug courier who a confidential informant told one drug agent would be on the train; defendant's actions in attempting to flee after defendant consented to speak with another drug agent and the totality of the circumstances in general showed that the drug agents had probable cause to search the bag and, thus, the search was part of a valid arrest. Higdon v. State, 261 Ga. App. 729, 583 S.E.2d 556 (2003).

When evidence showed that the first defendant's cell phone was an instrumentality of the crime of cocaine trafficking and that the details of the drug transaction were arranged by telephone, the trial court did not err in denying the motion to suppress the search of the defendant's cell phone because the defendant's cell phone was confiscated during a lawful search incident to the defendant's arrest and because it was an instrumentality of the crime that was probative of criminal conduct. Lopez v. State, 267 Ga. App. 532, 601 S.E.2d 116 (2004).

Officer's search of the defendant's vehicle incident to the defendant's arrest was lawful because the crime of arrest was the possession of bagged marijuana in the defendant's pocket, and it was reasonable to believe that evidence relevant to the offense could be found in the vehicle from which the defendant exited. Kirkland v. State, 316 Ga. App. 310, 728 S.E.2d 907 (2012).

Probable cause existed to search passenger. — It was error to suppress evidence seized pursuant to a search of the car in which the defendant had been a passenger on the ground that the driver had not voluntarily consented to the search; an officer was authorized to make a traffic stop because of a traffic violation, and after the stop, the occupants' behavior and visible drug paraphernalia gave the officer probable cause to search the car. State v. Menezes, 286 Ga. App. 280, 648 S.E.2d 741 (2007).

Search after stop for seat belt violation authorized. — Because sufficient evidence existed to support a finding that the arresting officer had a clear and unobstructed view of the defendant not wearing a seat belt as required by O.C.G.A. § 40-8-76.1(f), the officer's subsequent stop of the defendant's vehicle was supported by probable cause, making suppression of the evidence thereafter seized unwarranted. Schramm v. State, 286 Ga. App. 156, 648 S.E.2d 392 (2007).

Motion to suppress properly denied. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress items that were found in the trunk of defendant's car after defendant was apprehended on suspicion of shoplifting despite defendant's claim that defendant did not consent to the search of the car, as the trial court weighed the credibility of the testimony and the record supported the trial court's finding that defendant freely and voluntarily consented to the search; moreover, even if defendant did not consent to the search, the search was valid under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement, which allows a warrantless search of a vehicle when there is probable cause, because the police had probable cause to search the vehicle in light of information from a store manager who saw the defendant place store items in the defendant's trunk without paying for them and in light of defendant's subsequent conduct of shoplifting at another store down the road 30 minutes later. Horne v. State, 260 Ga. App. 640, 580 S.E.2d 644 (2003).

Driving under the influence of alcohol conviction was upheld as the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress breath test results taken from an officer posted at a secondary roadblock since the evidence supported the fact that the officer was part of the primary roadblock, and thus had legitimate authority to stop the defendant; the fact that the officer may have served as the chase car was irrelevant as the chase car was also part of the primary roadblock. Fischer v. State, 261 Ga. App. 44, 581 S.E.2d 680 (2003).

Appellate court's finding that O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73.1 was unconstitutional as no rational connection existed between the residence of the driver of a vehicle and the goal of improving law enforcement officer safety during traffic stops, did not warrant suppression of evidence seized during a traffic stop of the defendant's vehicle, because the investigating officer had reason to believe that the vehicle's windows were tinted darker than that permitted by the statute. Ciak v. State, 278 Ga. 27, 597 S.E.2d 392 (2004).

When a police officer learned that defendant's license was suspended and the officer had just seen defendant driving a car, the officer had probable cause to arrest defendant for driving without a license; because the officer could thereafter search defendant incident to arrest, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress. Edge v. State, 269 Ga. App. 88, 603 S.E.2d 502 (2004).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as an officer did not exceed the scope of the officer's initial traffic stop since officer had a reasonable and articulable suspicion when the officer smelled the "very" strong odor of marijuana coming from the truck; the conflict between defendant's answers to the officer's questions and the strong odor of burnt marijuana detected by the officer constituted probable cause to search defendant's truck for marijuana; the search was not based upon the traffic violation that caused the initial stop and defendant's attempt to distinguish between the odor of "burnt" marijuana and "burning" marijuana was also rejected. Williams v. State, 273 Ga. App. 637, 615 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as the totality of the circumstances gave rise to an articulable suspicion, justifying the police officers' detention of the defendant. O'Neal v. State, 273 Ga. App. 688, 616 S.E.2d 479 (2005).

Defendant was not in custody simply from being pulled over and temporarily detained; since the defendant was not in custody at the time that the officer pulled the defendant over, there was no need for the officer to give a Miranda warning prior to asking the defendant about drugs found in the defendant's car, and the defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied. Connell v. State, 279 Ga. App. 413, 631 S.E.2d 456 (2006).

Because officers had probable cause to arrest the defendant, based on the officers' awareness of the defendant's prior arrest following an explosion at a methamphetamine lab and that the defendant was subject to bond requirements related to such arrest, and, at the time of the search, the defendant was in the company of an individual who was driving on a suspended license and carrying methamphetamine, which was in violation of the defendant's bond conditions, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized pursuant to the search incident to a valid arrest. Collins v. State, 281 Ga. App. 240, 636 S.E.2d 32 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress marijuana seized as a result of a pat-down search conducted by an investigating officer as: (1) the officer observed sufficient, articulable facts to believe that an aggravated assault suspect might be leaving town; and (2) upon smelling burnt marijuana, and the possibility that weapons might be present, a pat-down of those individuals present, including the defendant, was supported by the totality of the circumstances known to the officer at the time. Brown v. State, 283 Ga. App. 250, 641 S.E.2d 551 (2006).

Because the totality of the circumstances known to the law enforcement officers participating in the drug investigation and the undercover purchase of narcotics supplied sufficient probable cause that contraband would be found inside the vehicle the defendant was driving, suppression of the drug evidence seized during the search of this vehicle was properly denied. Stroud v. State, 286 Ga. App. 124, 648 S.E.2d 476 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress as officers could lawfully search the interior of the defendant's car. A sergeant who had received a report of a speeding car had a reasonable and articulable suspicion of criminal activity having occurred, and after the defendant fled and disobeyed an order to stop, a second officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant for obstruction following which the car interior could be lawfully searched under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-1. Spence v. State, 295 Ga. App. 583, 672 S.E.2d 538 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress cocaine a detective found in the defendant's pocket because the defendant's presence on the premises being searched and defendant's apparent attempt to flee from the premises provided probable cause for the detective to believe that the defendant possessed or was, at least, a party to the crime of possessing, the unlawful contraband specified in the warrant, which authorized the detective to detain defendant and to conduct a warrantless search of the defendant's person. Sheats v. State, 305 Ga. App. 475, 699 S.E.2d 798 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress marijuana a police officer found in a vehicle in which the defendant was a passenger because the defendant was legally detained when the officer sought the driver's consent to search, and the officer made the officer's request shortly after completing the officer's check of the occupants' identification, which was within six minutes of initiating the stop; having found that the defendant was not subject to an illegal detention, the trial court did not err in further concluding that the defendant lacked standing to challenge the search on other grounds. Baker v. State, 306 Ga. App. 99, 701 S.E.2d 572 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendants' motion to suppress evidence police officers seized pursuant to search warrants for a residence and vehicles and a traffic stop because all of the facts, taken together, justified the stop based on a reasonable articulable suspicion that the occupants of the vehicles were involved in an active marijuana growing operation; a search warrant for the residence was pending based on probable cause to believe that an active marijuana growing operation was being conducted inside, the officers had information from multiple sources that the residence was a marijuana grow house, the house exhibited the physical characteristics of other grow houses that had been recently discovered, and the officers observed the defendants driving away from the residence in tandem with a truck and large recreational trailer, which had been obscured in the backyard behind a privacy fence. Prado v. State, 306 Ga. App. 240, 701 S.E.2d 871 (2010).

Because an inventory search of a codefendant's vehicle after impoundment was reasonable, and because the search was performed incident to the codefendant's lawful arrest, there was no basis to suppress the evidence seized from the search. Williams v. State, 308 Ga. App. 464, 708 S.E.2d 32 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer obtained through a traffic stop of a driver's vehicle because the stop of the defendant and the driver was valid since the officer's observation that the vehicle was traveling 40 miles per hour in a 35-mile-per-hour zone authorized the officer to initiate the traffic stop, and the officer was on the lookout for the vehicle based on information relayed by the county drug squad; the stop was not illegally extended because it did not matter whether the request to search came during the traffic stop or immediately thereafter, and there was no illegal detention since the questioning was almost instantaneous, all indications were that the search of the vehicle was by consent of the driver. Hammont v. State, 309 Ga. App. 395, 710 S.E.2d 598 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because an officer did not extend the duration of a traffic stop; the officer's testimony supported the conclusion that the officer asked for consent to search during the time that the officer was issuing citations, and the officer's questioning did not extend the duration of the defendant's detention. Arroyo v. State, 309 Ga. App. 494, 711 S.E.2d 60 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the evidence provided sufficient reasonable articulable suspicion to support a brief detention of the defendant; an officer had a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was involved in criminal activity when the officer told the defendant to leave a residence because the officer was aware that the owner of the residence was known for dealing narcotics from a number of prior cases the officer had personally worked on, and the officer believed that the defendant was at the residence to buy marijuana. Hilbun v. State, 313 Ga. App. 457, 721 S.E.2d 656 (2011).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress, as the officer was authorized to initiate the traffic stop after observing the defendant's seat belt violation and was thereafter authorized to make a reasonable inquiry and investigation. After learning that the defendant did not have a valid driver's license, the officer had probable cause to arrest the defendant and after observing the defendant reach into a pocket, retrieve a plastic bag, and attempt to conceal the bag, the officer had probable cause to search the vehicle for contraband. Horne v. State, 318 Ga. App. 484, 733 S.E.2d 487 (2012).

Defendant's motion to suppress was properly denied when the officer's stop of the defendant was based on the officer's reasonable articulable suspicion that the defendant was operating a bicycle in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-296(a), and marijuana was discovered in a bag on the handlebars of the bicycle during the stop, which was not unreasonably prolonged.

Bolen v. State, 320 Ga. App. 3, 739 S.E.2d 11 (2013).

Harmless error. — When the defendant was subjected to a pat-down search and the defendant's wallet was removed from the defendant's pocket, after which the defendant fled, leaving the wallet behind, any error in failing to suppress the wallet was harmless because its contents only showed the defendant's identity, which was not an issue. Ramirez v. State, 279 Ga. 569, 619 S.E.2d 668 (2005), cert. denied, 546 U.S. 1217, 126 S. Ct. 1435, 164 L. Ed. 2d 138 (2006).

Probable cause for arrest. — When the defendants were convicted of trafficking in cocaine, the trial court did not err in finding that there was probable cause to arrest the two defendants because after the codefendant met the two defendants in a nearby apartment complex, the defendant returned with the package of cocaine to sell to the undercover agent, and the second defendant parked that defendant's truck facing the area of the anticipated exchange, apparently so that the second defendant and the first defendant could watch the drug deal; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying the first defendant's motion to suppress. Lopez v. State, 267 Ga. App. 532, 601 S.E.2d 116 (2004).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied, even though an officer lacked a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity to support a first investigatory stop, as the defendant's flight after the officer's general questions, the defendant's suspicious claim that the defendant was biking home from a job 10 miles away, and the defendant's proximity to a car with flashing lights consistent with a triggered car alarm, supported a second investigatory stop; the evidence the defendant sought to suppress was obtained after the second investigatory stop. Crowley v. State, 267 Ga. App. 718, 601 S.E.2d 154 (2004).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as the arresting officer radioed in and was told that there was an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant; whether the information later proved incorrect or invalid was immaterial. Howard v. State, 273 Ga. App. 667, 615 S.E.2d 806 (2005).

Trial court did not err in denying a motion to suppress, as the defendant's presence at the scene of an ongoing robbery, coupled with the defendant's flight from police, supplied sufficient probable cause justifying an arrest, and police thereafter conducted a lawful Terry pat-down. Vega v. State, 285 Ga. App. 405, 646 S.E.2d 501 (2007).

Trial court did not err in failing to suppress all the evidence discovered as a result of the defendant's arrest because the arresting officer had probable cause to make an arrest for DUI. Caraway v. State, 286 Ga. App. 592, 649 S.E.2d 758 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 686 (Ga. 2007).

A deputy had probable cause to arrest a defendant for DUI independent of field sobriety tests; when the deputy arrived on the scene and before the deputy conducted the tests, the deputy was told by another officer that the defendant had been driving on the wrong side of the road and had been drinking, the deputy noticed that the defendant was unsteady and nervous and smelled strongly of alcohol, and the defendant admitted to having been drinking two or three hours before. Tune v. State, 286 Ga. App. 32, 648 S.E.2d 423 (2007).

Officer had probable cause to believe that, by lying about whether weapons were in a vehicle, the defendant had violated O.C.G.A. § 16-10-20 because, at the time the defendant produced the rental agreement for the vehicle, the officer saw a firearm in the center console of the rental car, which the defendant apparently tried to conceal by quickly closing the console; when the officer asked the defendant whether any weapons were in the car, the defendant denied it, and that was a reason for the officer to detain the defendant and to secure the firearm for the officer's own safety. Culpepper v. State, 312 Ga. App. 115, 717 S.E.2d 698 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer recovered from a rental car because the officer had reasonable grounds for detaining the defendant since the officer found the defendant and a friend in the parking lot of a closed business late at night, knew that several burglaries and thefts had occurred in the area recently, and observed that the defendant and the friend appeared to be nervous when the officer spoke with them; in the course of securing a firearm the officer saw a firearm in the center console of the rental car, the officer saw in plain view a digital scale with white residue, affording the officer probable cause to effect a custodial arrest of the defendant. Culpepper v. State, 312 Ga. App. 115, 717 S.E.2d 698 (2011).

Motion to suppress improperly denied. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence, as the evidence that the police officer either observed or seized as a result of entry into the defendant's apartment without consent and without the existence of exigent circumstances violated the defendant's constitutional right to be free from unreasonable searches. Leon-Velazquez v. State, 269 Ga. App. 760, 605 S.E.2d 400 (2004).

Motion to suppress improperly granted. — Trial court erroneously granted suppression of the evidence seized in a traffic stop involving two defendants in which an officer, after arresting the first defendant for obstruction, searched the car and found a substance which a field test showed to be cocaine, as the stopping officer was authorized to make the stop based on a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-202 and because the officer could search the passenger compartment of the car incident to the arrest of the first defendant. State v. Stafford, 288 Ga. App. 309, 653 S.E.2d 750 (2007), aff'd, 284 Ga. 773, 671 S.E.2d 484 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for trafficking in methamphetamine, the defendant failed to establish that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to pursue a motion to suppress the evidence found in the defendant's room as the evidence showed that a preliminary motion to suppress was filed and that trial counsel concluded that, based on the Fourth Amendment waivers of the defendant and others involved, pursuit of the motion would have been fruitless. Corn v. State, 290 Ga. App. 792, 660 S.E.2d 782 (2008).

Trial court erred in granting a defendant's motion to suppress crack cocaine police officers found in the defendant's pants' pocket during a pat-down search because the officers made a valid Terry stop, and the defendant was not free to leave; the undisputed testimony from the officers was that based on the officers' experience, outside window tinting was often performed on stolen cars, defendant and other men were working on a car in a vacant lot, the car had no tag, and the men were gathered around the car in a way that could be construed as trying to conceal a stolen automobile. State v. Miller, 300 Ga. App. 55, 684 S.E.2d 80 (2009).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress evidence resulting from a police officer's search and seizure because, although the defendant was subjected to a tier-two Terry-type investigative detention, the defendant was not in custody, and the defendant was detained for a reasonable time to investigate in conjunction with the valid stop, and the officer's question regarding whether the defendant was in possession of contraband occurred within a few seconds of the stop, such that no reasonable person could believe that they were under arrest and that they were not free to leave after the officer had been afforded a reasonable time to finish conducting a traffic investigation. State v. Hammond, 313 Ga. App. 882, 723 S.E.2d 89 (2012).

Reentry not justified by earlier arrest. — On review, the court agreed with the plaintiff that the sheriff's deputies violated the Fourth Amendment when they unlawfully entered the house and arrested the plaintiff; a reasonable police officer in the deputies' positions could not show that their presence in the home was justified, either by exigent circumstances or consent or that the reentry was a lawful extension of the initial entry 20 minutes earlier to arrest the plaintiff's wife. Bashir v. Rockdale County, 445 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir. 2006).

Probable cause for stop. — Trial court erred in granting the defendants' motion to suppress the drug evidence seized following a traffic stop for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-8-73.1, as an officer's observations of a vehicle's dark tinted windows, and belief that such violated the statute were sufficient to justify the stop; moreover, a free air search by a drug-sniffing dog did not violate the defendants' Fourth Amendment rights. State v. Simmons, 283 Ga. App. 141, 640 S.E.2d 709 (2006).

Proper basis existed for an investigative stop as a police officer was given a description of the vehicle used by the perpetrators of an armed robbery, which matched that of the defendant's vehicle; a protective sweep of the vehicle, which revealed, inter alia, a handgun, was justified as the crime was committed at gunpoint. Billingsley v. State, 294 Ga. App. 661, 669 S.E.2d 699 (2008).

No justification for stop. — Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a deputy sheriff obtained in the course of a traffic stop because the court found that the deputy did not really believe at the time of the stop that the absence of side view mirrors supplied proper grounds for a stop and that the deputy did not, in fact, see anyone toss anything from the car were not clearly erroneous; the factual findings were based not only upon a video that was absent from the record on appeal but also upon an assessment of the credibility of the deputy. State v. Reid, 313 Ga. App. 633, 722 S.E.2d 364 (2012).

No probable cause when defendant could not identify owner of vehicle. — An officer improperly arrested a defendant for sitting in a car, the owner of which the defendant could not identify. As the officer had no report of a stolen vehicle, nor was there any evidence that the vehicle had been broken into, the officer had no probable cause to remove the defendant from the vehicle and arrest the defendant; therefore, evidence consequently discovered in the vehicle was illegally obtained and properly suppressed. State v. Fisher, 293 Ga. App. 228, 666 S.E.2d 594 (2008).

Entry into car upheld after officer saw object in plain view. — Based on an unusual metal pipe an officer saw through a defendant's window after the officer made a traffic stop, its resemblance to other pipes the officer knew to be used to smoke marijuana, the officer's experience in a drug interdiction unit, and the defendant's nervous behavior, the officer was authorized to enter the defendant's vehicle based on the officer's viewing of the metal pipe; the officer was then lawfully in a position to observe in plain view a glass pipe containing methamphetamine. Glenn v. State, 285 Ga. App. 872, 648 S.E.2d 177 (2007).

Consent given by outbuilding owners and property deemed abandoned.

— With regard to a defendant's convictions for sexual abuse of a child, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress various items found in an outbuilding that the defendant, the victim, and the victim's parent had been living in as the owners of the outbuilding consented to the entry by the police as well as had brought certain items to the police themselves. The defendant's failure to retrieve the items for over three months, despite repeated requests on the part of the owners to get the items, as well as the defendant moving out of state sufficiently established that the defendant had abandoned the property, thus, no illegal search and seizure was possible. Driggers v. State, 295 Ga. App. 711, 673 S.E.2d 95 (2009).

Officers had no knowledge of bond order when conducting search. — Defendant's drug-related convictions were reversed on appeal as the trial court erred by taking judicial notice of a bond order against the defendant to justify the search of the defendant's person by two officers on patrol in a high crime area when the officers had no knowledge of the bond order at the time the search was conducted. The trial court should have conducted a hearing to determine the validity of the defendant's waiver of the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights and the reasonableness of imposing such a waiver as a condition of the defendant's pretrial release on the bond. Cantrell v. State, 295 Ga. App. 634, 673 S.E.2d 32 (2009).

Search of vehicle after illegal detention not justified despite probable cause for initial stop. — Trial court erred by denying two defendants' motion to suppress the drug evidence found in the vehicle in which one defendant was driving, and the other defendant was a passenger, because the search of the vehicle was conducted after the defendants were illegally detained after a traffic stop. The officers were justified in stopping the vehicle upon observing the vehicle speeding but by only observing nervousness and an expandable baton, the officers exceeded the scope of a permissible search by continuing to detain the defendants without any cause to believe the defendants were dangerous; thus, the search was not justified. Bell v. State, 295 Ga. App. 607, 672 S.E.2d 675 (2009).

Search of vehicle in parking lot of closed gas station proper.

— Officers were authorized to search the defendants' vehicle for weapons to ensure the officers' safety under circumstances in which an officer investigating a burglary call found the defendants parked in the dark lot of a closed gas station, the defendants claimed that the defendants had mechanical difficulty but there were other open gas stations nearby, the defendants were unduly nervous and appeared to have been hiding the interior of the vehicle while the defendants kept moving in and out of the vehicle, and the officer saw bags in the vehicle; additionally, the officer's concern increased when the men separated and one of them "got around behind" the officer's patrol car. The fact that the defendants were outside the vehicle when the search was conducted did not change the result because a suspect re-entering a suspect's car after an investigative detention would have had access to any weapon therein. Kennedy v. State, 298 Ga. App. 372, 680 S.E.2d 478 (2009).

Unlawful search of vehicle in apartment complex.

— Trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress all evidence seized after the vehicle the defendant was driving was stopped because the defendant did not abandon the car or lose any reasonable expectation of privacy with regard to the car; when the defendant ran away after the traffic stop, the police officer had just observed the defendant park the car within a parking space of an apartment complex, where the person to whom the car's registered owner had entrusted the vehicle lived, and because the evidence from which the officer ascertained the defendant's identity derived from documents found during the unlawful search of the car, the trial court did not err in rejecting the state's argument that the items retrieved from the sidewalk were admissible in a trial against the defendant. State v. Nesbitt, 305 Ga. App. 28, 699 S.E.2d 368 (2010).

Search of hotel room. — Contraband found by police officers in the defendant's hotel room was properly seized under the Fourth Amendment because the hotel manager had the authority to terminate the defendant's rental agreement without prior notice on the ground the defendant was selling drugs from the room and creating a disturbance at the hotel, and did so before the officers went to the room; thus, the defendant no longer had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the room. The officers had to determine if anyone was in the room before the clerk could lock the door and effectuate the eviction, and thus properly entered the room to search in places where someone could be hiding and properly seized marijuana found on a table in plain view, as well as marijuana located under the bed. Johnson v. State, 285 Ga. 571, 679 S.E.2d 340 (2009).

Trial court erred in granting the defendants' motion to suppress evidence found in a hotel room and by assuming that the defendants had a continuing expectation of privacy in a hotel room because a guest services agent had the authority to evict the defendants from the room once the agent learned that the defendants had checked into the hotel using a fraudulent credit card, and because the defendants had obtained the room through a fraudulent credit card that would not be honored by the credit card company, the defendants were not paying a fee for the room and were not guests within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 43-21-1(1); therefore, the defendants could be evicted from the room for cause, and if the defendants were being evicted from the hotel for cause, under O.C.G.A. § 43-21-3.1(b), the defendants were not entitled to notice of the eviction. State v. Delvechio, 301 Ga. App.

Search of commercial establishment. — Night club and owner's U.S. Const., amends. IV and XIV and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII claims against two police officers survived summary judgment after the club and the owners alleged that the officers entered the club without a warrant, probable cause, or exigent circumstances, ordered the lights turned on and the music stopped, frisked the club's patrons and handcuffed some of the patrons without making any arrests, and acted in an intimidating manner. Illusions of the South, Inc. v. City of Valdosta, No. 7:07-cv-6 (HL), 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27154 (M.D. Ga. Mar. 30, 2009).

Items in plain view seen through open door to residence. — In a cocaine trafficking prosecution, though the defendant testified that an officer kicked in the door to the defendant's residence, as the defendant's landlord testified that there was no damage to the front door, and the trial court was entitled to believe the officer's testimony that the door was open, the officer was entitled to seize drugs seen in plain view through the open door. Therefore, the defendant's motion to suppress the drugs was properly denied. Reid v. State, 298 Ga. App. 889, 681 S.E.2d 671 (2009).

3. Consent Searches

a. In General

Test as to whether or not consent to search was freely given is "totality of the circumstances". Schneckloth v. Bustamonte, 412 U.S. 218, 93 S. Ct. 2041, 36 L. Ed. 2d 854 (1973) United States v. Scott, 578 F.2d 1186 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 870, 99 S. Ct. 201, 58 L. Ed. 2d 182 (1978); Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Impact of alcohol on consent to search. — Based on the United States Supreme Court decision in Missouri v. McNeely, in which the court rejected a per se rule that the natural metabolization of alcohol in a person's bloodstream constitutes an exigency justifying an exception to the U.S. Const., amend. 4's search warrant requirement for nonconsensual blood testing in all driving under the influence cases, the Georgia Supreme Court overruled Strong v. State, 231 Ga. 514 (1973) to the extent that decision holds otherwise. Williams v. State, 296 Ga. 817, 771 S.E.2d 373 (2015).

Defendant's driving under the influence case was remanded to the trial court because in considering the defendant's motion to suppress, the court failed to address whether the defendant gave actual consent to the procuring and testing of blood, which would require a determination of the voluntariness of the consent under the totality of the circumstances. Williams v. State, 296 Ga. 817, 771 S.E.2d 373 (2015).

State must carry burden on issue of consent to search. — Whether or not consent to search was freely given is an issue on which the state must carry the burden of proof. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Consent to search must be product of essentially free and unrestrained choice by its maker. Williams v. State, 151 Ga. App. 833, 261 S.E.2d 720 (1979).

Consent to search properly imposed as probation condition. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress, as a consent to search was properly imposed as a condition of the defendant's probation and did not amount to a waiver of rights; thus, the defendant's tacit acceptance of this special condition provided the police with the authority to search. Peardon v. State, 287 Ga. App. 158, 651 S.E.2d 121 (2007).

Probable cause and warrant not required for search and seizure conducted pursuant to consent. Williams v. State, 151 Ga. App. 833, 261 S.E.2d 720 (1979).

Probationer waives rights when probationer consents to periodic searches. — When a person voluntarily agrees, as a condition of probation, to the possibility that periodic "shake down" searches would be conducted, the probationer consents to a search of the probationer's person, the probationer's property, and the probationer's room and waives the probationer's Fourth Amendment rights. Dean v. State, 151 Ga. App. 847, 261 S.E.2d 759 (1979).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of a search of the defendant's person and home because the defendant validly waived the defendant's Fourth Amendment rights under the United States Constitution and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, when the defendant entered into a negotiated guilty plea to possession of a firearm and possession of marijuana; the transcripts of the defendant's guilty plea revealed that the defendant was informed by the assistant district attorney that a Fourth Amendment waiver was part of the negotiation, neither the defendant nor the attorney objected to the Fourth Amendment waiver during the plea, the trial court explained the Fourth Amendment waiver to the defendant on the record, and the defendant signed a waiver as a special condition of probation. Morrow v. State, 311 Ga. App. 323, 715 S.E.2d 744 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1872, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 993 (Ga. 2011).

Requiring consent to periodic search as condition of parole is not unreasonable. Dean v. State, 151 Ga. App. 847, 261 S.E.2d 759 (1979).

Absent target of search assumes risk of third party permitting search. — When the absent target of search and consenting third party do not have common authority over and mutual use of premises, third party has the right to permit inspection in the third party's own right and the absent target has assumed the risk that the third party may grant this permission to others. Fears v. State, 152 Ga. App. 817, 264 S.E.2d 284 (1979).

State may show that permission to search was obtained from third party who possessed common authority over or other sufficient relationship to the premises or effects sought to be inspected. Park v. State, 154 Ga. App. 348, 268 S.E.2d 401 (1980).

b. Consent Searches of People

Scope of consent to search pockets.

— Given that a police officer was granted consent to search the defendant's hotel room to search for the victim's stolen truck keys, upon the officer's receipt of an inconclusive response that a set of keys found could belong to the victim, a continued search, which yielded methamphetamine, was reasonable, and did not exceed the original scope of consent granted; thus, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the drug evidence that officers found as a result of a continued search. Shuler v. State, 282 Ga. App. 706, 639 S.E.2d 623 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of a pat-down search, because the defendant consented to the search and, under the plain-feel doctrine, the officer conducting the search was authorized to retrieve a plastic bag suspected to be illegal contraband from the defendant's watch pocket. Dunn v. State, 289 Ga. App. 585, 657 S.E.2d 649 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 496 (Ga. 2008).

An officer exceeded the permissible scope of a consent frisk for weapons as nothing indicated that a cigar box that the officer removed from the defendant's pocket felt like a gun or other weapon, and the officer pointed to no particularized facts that reasonably led the officer to believe that the defendant might have a weapon. Thus, crack cocaine found in the box was inadmissible. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 564, 667 S.E.2d 410 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's suppression motion as drug evidence was properly seized during a pat-down search of defendant's person for weapons, which was justified under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28 because police were in the process of executing a search warrant to search for drugs; a deputy's removal of a package from the defendant's pants pocket was within the scope of defendant's consent. Brint v. State, 306 Ga. App. 10, 701 S.E.2d 507 (2010).

Scope of consent did not extend to looking down defendant's pants.

— Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found while conducting a search of defendant's person because the purportedly consensual search of defendant's person was unlawful when the consent was the product of an illegal detention; even if defendant's consent was not the product of an illegal detention, the search exceeded the scope of defendant's consent because defendant's indication that the defendant did not "have a problem" with the officer searching the defendant's pockets could not be interpreted as having extended so far as to have authorized the officer to, after searching all of defendant's pockets and finding nothing, push defendant's abdomen, pull defendant's waistband forward, and look down inside defendant's pants for narcotics. Walker v. State, 299 Ga. App. 788, 683 S.E.2d 867 (2009).

Removal of contents of pockets.

— Because the consent received by an officer to search the defendant's pockets for weapons did not extend to allowing the officer to remove the contents of those pockets, when the officer testified that the contents did not feel like a weapon or an object immediately identifiable as contraband, the defendant's motion to suppress should have been granted. Foster v. State, 285 Ga. App. 441, 646 S.E.2d 302 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 625 (Ga. 2007).

Sufficient evidence to support non-verbal consent to patdown. — See Borda v. State, 187 Ga. App. 49, 369 S.E.2d 327 (1988).

Implied consent statute. — Order denying suppression of chemical test results admitted against a defendant was proper under the implied consent statute, O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55, and was based on sufficient probable cause and valid consent, given evidence that a formal arrest of defendant prior to reading the implied consent rights was not warranted, and defendant was being administered medical care. Hannah v. State, 280 Ga. App. 230, 633 S.E.2d 800 (2006).

Trial court properly suppressed the alco-sensor tests taken by the defendant because the officer incorrectly informed defendant that defendant did not have the right to refuse the test; O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55 gave the defendant the right to withdraw implied consent, as, pursuant to

Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have thought the defendant, who was ordered to turn around and place the defendant's hands behind the defendant's back after refusing the test, was being placed under arrest. State v. Norris, 281 Ga. App. 193, 635 S.E.2d 810 (2006).

Under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, defendant could not suppress the evidence of the blood test taken while the defendant was under suspicion for driving under the influence under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391; because the state complied with the statutory implied consent requirements, the defendant was deemed under the implied consent provisions of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55 to have given the defendant's consent to a test of the defendant's blood. Meiklejohn v. State, 281 Ga. App. 712, 637 S.E.2d 117 (2006).

Blood test results. — Test results of a sample taken from a suspect may not be used for purposes for which the suspect was not advised and to which the suspect did not consent, and while it is not always essential for a person to be told that he or she may refuse to consent to a warrantless search, informing an individual of the right to refuse consent is a factor a trial court may consider in determining whether such consent was voluntary; a trial court's suppression of blood test results obtained from the defendant without a warrant was affirmed when any consent given by the defendant before the blood draw did not include testing and when the defendant was not informed of the defendant's right to refuse consent and did not give a free and voluntary consent after the blood was drawn. State v. Poppell, 277 Ga. 595, 592 S.E.2d 838 (2004).

Consent to search of body. — Trial court erred in granting defendant's motion to suppress evidence of contraband, namely, defendant's possession of marijuana, as the police officer's discovery of the marijuana was not pursuant to an impermissible pat-down search that two other officers conducted on a group of students, including defendant, but was pursuant to defendant's invitation for the officer to search defendant after the officer asked defendant why defendant's license had been suspended; however, a remand was necessary to determine whether defendant's consent to search was voluntarily given. State v. Baker, 261 Ga. App. 258, 582 S.E.2d 133 (2003).

Upon questioning from outside of a parked car in which defendant was a passenger, defendant's act of voluntarily and immediately pulling a plastic bag from defendant's pants' crotch area and giving it to police, constituted a voluntary encounter, and not a search, implicating any constitutional protections; thus, defendant's suppression motion was properly denied. Carrera v. State, 261 Ga. App. 832, 584 S.E.2d 2 (2003).

Because the defendant was not detained or subjected to prolonged questioning or physical punishment, the police officers were lawfully on the premises, explained the basis for their suspicion, and asked for permission to search the defendant's pants, the defendant's consent to the search was voluntary; consequently, the trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress. State v. Kinsey, 272 Ga. App. 723, 613 S.E.2d 232 (2005).

When the defendant freely and voluntarily consented to an officer's pat-down search, and, upon the officer encountering a hard object in the defendant's pocket, jumped back from the officer, the defendant's act did not constitute a revocation of the defendant's consent to the search, under an objective standard of reasonableness. Whiting v. State, 275 Ga. App. 251, 620 S.E.2d 480 (2005).

Trial court erred in finding that the defendant's continued detention after a license check was illegal and without legal justification, as a police sergeant, after detecting an odor of alcohol from the defendant's vehicle, was legally justified to determine whether the defendant was driving while under the influence, and could not do so without conducting field sobriety tests; moreover, a search of the defendant occurred only after the defendant granted the officer consent to do so, and consent was voluntarily given. State

v. Johnson, 282 Ga. App. 102, 637 S.E.2d 825 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 58 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found in the defendant's wallet during a traffic stop of the vehicle in which the defendant was a passenger because the defendant voluntarily consented to the officer's search of the wallet; although the officer did not have a proper basis to frisk the defendant after asking the defendant to exit the automobile, the contraband was not uncovered during the unlawful pat-down, and the prior unlawful pat-down did not operate to invalidate the defendant's later consent to the search of the wallet. Rogue v. State, 311 Ga. App. 421, 715 S.E.2d 814 (2011).

Trial court did not err in failing to grant the defendant's motion to suppress a pistol because the search of a residence was properly conducted when the police obtained the consent of the homeowner; the defendant, who was a visitor at the residence, was physically present but failed to express any refusal of consent or any objection to a police search. Rockholt v. State, 291 Ga. 85, 727 S.E.2d 492 (2012).

Search of vehicle passenger not product of illegally expanded traffic stop and not expansion of consent given. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of pills found on the defendant's person during a traffic stop and convicted the defendant of possession of dihydrocodeinone, since the pat down search of the defendant did not exceed the scope of the consent search and was authorized to ensure the officer's safety, and the safety of others, based on the vehicle driver identifying various weapons in the car. Further, the traffic stop was not illegally expanded since the defendant's arrest occurred nine minutes into the stop and the driver's radar check remained outstanding at the time. Stagg v. State, 297 Ga. App. 640, 678 S.E.2d 108 (2009).

Pointing of stun gun at defendant waives consent. — Trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress both the evidence seized upon being stopped and detained by sheriff's officers and all statements made to any law enforcement officer following such detention given that: (1) law enforcement exceeded the authority to search the defendant; and (2) the evidence showed that any consent given by the defendant was coerced, as such was obtained when one of the officers pointed a stun gun at the defendant. State v. Williams, 281 Ga. App. 187, 635 S.E.2d 807 (2006).

Consent to pat down not valid when defendant was not free to go. — Since an officer was still in possession of the defendant's driver's license, the defendant did not feel free to leave when the officer asked the defendant to exit the parked vehicle; the officer had no reason to suspect criminal activity, the defendant's license was valid, and there were no warrants, so, despite the defendant's initial lie about the reason for being where the defendant was, the continued detention was wrongful, and the defendant's consent to the officer's pat down did not validate the search. Ward v. State, 277 Ga. App. 790, 627 S.E.2d 862 (2006).

Mere acquiescence to authority of officer did not substitute for free and voluntary consent. — Despite the fact that the trial court concluded that the second of two defendant's warrantless arrest was unauthorized under O.C.G.A. § 17-4-20(a) because mere acquiescence to the authority asserted by a police lieutenant by both the defendants could not substitute for a free and voluntary consent to search, the trial court erred in finding that the acquiescence granted valid consent to the officer. Thus, the trial court's grant of the motions to suppress filed, in part, was reversed. Hollenback v. State, 289 Ga. App. 516, 657 S.E.2d 884 (2008).

c. Consent Searches of Places

Legal search may be made incident to lawful arrest or by consent of owner of premises or property. Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967).

Lack of authority to consent to search of residence. — After accessing a defendant's residence from a person that was not authorized to allow access and making no attempt to question anyone's authority to allow access by use of an automatic door opener, the subsequent warrantless search of the defendant's residence was unjustified and, likewise, the subsequent search by warrant was illegal. State v. Gray, 285 Ga. App. 124, 645 S.E.2d 598 (2007).

Seizure of evidence from locked gun cabinet. — Evidence seized from defendant's locked gun cabinet during a warrantless search of defendant's residence was properly suppressed because defendant's spouse lacked authority to consent to search of the locked cabinet since the spouse informed an officer that the cabinet belonged to defendant and that the defendant was the only one who possessed a key to the cabinet. State v. Parrish, 302 Ga. App. 838, 691 S.E.2d 888 (2010).

Authority to consent to search of home. — Evidence was sufficient to support the trial court's finding that the defendant's stepparent had authority to consent to a warrantless entry and search of the stepparent's home; it was undisputed that the stepparent owned the home, and the state was not required to produce a deed. Thomas v. State, 290 Ga. App. 10, 658 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Parent's consent to search of home. — Suppression of dark clothing found in a crawl space in the home of the defendant's parent was not required because the evidence supported the finding that, when a police officer stopped and questioned the defendant's parent at a grocery store soon after the defendant was identified as a suspect in the robbery of the store, the officer's actions were perfectly reasonable given the totality of the circumstances, and there was nothing presented to rebut the evidence that the parent's consent to search the parent's home was voluntary. Jupiter v. State, 308 Ga. App. 386, 707 S.E.2d 592 (2011).

Person who consents cannot complain of illegal search and seizure. — When undisputed evidence shows that a person freely and voluntarily authorized a search of the person's automobile, the person cannot complain of an illegal search and seizure. Hightower v. State, 228 Ga. 301, 185 S.E.2d 82 (1971).

Defendant's claim that the statements defendant made to an officer as to defendant's intent to buy drugs and ownership of the jacket defendant was wearing, which contained a digital scale, should have been excluded as defendant had not been advised of defendant's Miranda rights was rejected as defendant made the statements after a consensual search revealed that defendant was carrying the scale, which gave the officer a reasonable suspicion to momentarily detain defendant to inquire about the scale. Lewis v. State, 268 Ga. App. 547, 602 S.E.2d 278 (2004).

When defendant, after being properly stopped for a traffic violation, was asked for consent to search defendant's vehicle and replied, "I don't care," none of the circumstances surrounding the consent showed it was involuntary, as a videotape of the encounter showed no hint of fear, intimidation, coercion or deceit, there was no evidence of a lengthy detention, and defendant suffered no physical punishment; therefore, an officer's failure to advise defendant of defendant's constitutional rights did not invalidate the consent, as questioning was limited to defendant's lack of a valid driver's license, whether defendant had drugs in the car, and whether defendant consented to a search. Goodman v. State, 272 Ga. App. 639, 613 S.E.2d 190 (2005).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress two videotapes seized from the defendant's residence that displayed the defendant engaging in sexual acts with two minors because the defendant had consented to the deputies playing the first videotape, thereby obviating the need for a search warrant, and a third party had spontaneously and voluntarily handed the videotape to the deputies. Mitchell v. State, 289 Ga. App. 55, 656 S.E.2d 145 (2007), cert. dismissed, No. S08C0770, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 499 (Ga. 2008).

Consent to limited search. — Given defendant's consent to the limited search of the premises, the officers were lawfully in a position to plainly view the items associated with the manufacture of methamphetamine; as a result, the officers developed the probable cause necessary to obtain a warrant and search for additional evidence, supporting denial of the defendant's motion to suppress. Wesson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 428, 631 S.E.2d 451 (2006).

Scope of consent extended to trunk.

— Defendant was not entitled to suppression of, inter alia, marijuana seized from the trunk of a car in which the defendant was a passenger because a police officer did not exceed the scope of the driver's consent to search, which allegedly was limited to looking in the car, by opening the trunk as the officer had discussed the problems with contraband being transported on the state highways prior to requesting the driver's consent; thus, the driver was on notice that the officer was looking for contraband. Davis v. State, 297 Ga. App. 319, 677 S.E.2d 372 (2009).

Consent to search included bed of truck. — Search of the defendant's truck did not exceed the scope of the defendant's consent as a reasonable person would have understood the defendant's consent, given after the officer asked if there was anything in the vehicle the defendant should be concerned with, to include a search of the passenger compartment of the truck and the bed of the truck. Berry v. State, 318 Ga. App. 806, 734 S.E.2d 768 (2012).

Search of glove box. — Deputy who searched the defendant's car had probable cause to believe that contraband was behind the dashboard near the glove compartment and did not exceed the scope of the defendant's consent by prying open the glove compartment; the deputy observed before the search that both the defendant and the defendant's sibling were extremely nervous, after the search began, the deputy noticed that screws securing the glove compartment were scratched or missing, the deputy smelled marijuana while using a screwdriver to lift the glove compartment to allow the deputy to see behind the dashboard, and the defendant consented to a "complete" search of the vehicle. Medvar v. State, 286 Ga. App. 177, 648 S.E.2d 406 (2007).

Evidence sufficiently attenuated from illegality in search of residence.

— Because: (1) evidence seized from the defendant's residence as a result of an interrogation was sufficiently attenuated from any illegality to be admissible; (2) the duration of the search had no bearing on the subsequent consent given by the defendant's roommate; (3) the consent was not a product of any illegal conduct; and (4) there was no evidence of any flagrant misconduct and coercion on the part of the investigating law enforcement officers involved, the evidence was properly admitted. Spence v. State, 281 Ga. 697, 642 S.E.2d 856 (2007).

Handcuffed defendant gave free and voluntary consent to search property.

— Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers seized from the defendant's apartment because the state satisfied the state's burden of showing that the defendant's consent to the search was not the product of coercion, express or implied, and although the defendant was handcuffed at the time the defendant consented to the search, voluntary consent could be given while a suspect was handcuffed; the evidence supported a finding that one of the officers requested and received the defendant's consent to search under permissible circumstances, and the officer testified that the officer's gun was not drawn and that the defendant was compliant. Silverio v. State, 306 Ga. App. 438, 702 S.E.2d 717 (2010).

Defendant's conviction for possession of cocaine with the intent to distribute was upheld on appeal as the defendant failed to establish that the motion to suppress would have been granted had counsel not waived the issue because, even in handcuffs, the defendant voluntarily consented to the search of the vehicle and the defendant failed to show that the consent was invalid. Blitch v. State, 323 Ga. App. 677, 747 S.E.2d 863 (2013).

Sufficient evidence of free and voluntary consent to search of property.

— Since the defendant gave free and voluntary consent for the police to search both the defendant's apartment and vehicle, as evidenced by the defendant's handwritten waiver, and police did not coerce the defendant into doing so, the trial court

did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress. Watson v. State, 263 Ga. App. 95, 587 S.E.2d 243 (2003).

Defendant's consent to warrantless searches of the defendant's car and apartment were consensual as the defendant was a well-educated college senior, able to read, write, and understand the English language, and had driven personally to the police station for questioning; after defendant signed the consent forms giving permission to the searches, defendant followed the police to defendant's apartment in defendant's own car. Ray v. State, 273 Ga. App. 656, 615 S.E.2d 812 (2005).

Fact that police requested permission to enter the defendant's home several times and pointed out that neighbors could see them on the porch did not make the defendant's consent involuntary when there was no coercion involved; once inside, the police were entitled to inquire about apparent drug paraphernalia that was sitting in plain sight, even though they had originally been inquiring about the reported presence of an assault weapon. Saadatdar v. State, 277 Ga. App. 339, 626 S.E.2d 552 (2006).

Search of the defendant's motel room did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII or U.S. Const., amend. 4; comparing the officers' testimony, that the defendant gave them permission to enter the motel room and to search the pants that were lying on the floor, with the defendant's companion's uncertain testimony, the trial court did not err in crediting the officers' testimony, and since the officers searched defendant's wallet after they arrested defendant for possession of methamphetamine, the search of the wallet was authorized as a search incident to an arrest. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 7, 635 S.E.2d 278 (2006).

Consensual search upon a traffic stop for a seatbelt violation supported the trial court's denial of a motion to suppress, as the search conducted pursuant to the defendant's consent was not a search based solely on the defendant's failure to wear a seatbelt; thus, the trial court did not err by ruling that law enforcement did not violate the Fourth Amendment during an officer's traffic stop for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-8-76.1. Blitch v. State, 281 Ga. 125, 636 S.E.2d 545 (2006).

Because the defendant's consent to search was not obtained by deceit, the defendant voluntarily accompanied officers to the motel room searched, and the consent was not the product of an illegal detention, suppression of the contraband seized was unwarranted. Miller v. State, 287 Ga. App. 179, 651 S.E.2d 103 (2007).

A trial court did not err in denying either defendant's motion to suppress the methamphetamine seized during the consensual search of defendant's vehicle or a motion to suppress defendant's voluntary custodial statement, as the testimony of the arresting and investigating officers established that defendant did not display any problems with the understanding of the English language as did videotapes of the vehicle search and the in custody interview, which likewise showed defendant having no problems with the English language. Therefore, defendant's consent to the search of the vehicle nor defendant's waiver of defendant's Miranda rights were invalidated. Serrano v. State, 291 Ga. App. 500, 662 S.E.2d 280 (2008).

Because the defendant waived the defendant's Miranda rights and because the defendant freely and voluntarily consented to a search of the defendant's premises, to a drug test, and to an interview, the defendant's consent was not the product of coercion; accordingly, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Handy v. State, 298 Ga. App. 633, 680 S.E.2d 646 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized during the warrantless search of the defendant's residence because the evidence supported the trial court's finding that the defendant and the defendant's roommate freely and voluntarily consented to the search of their residence, and the officers testified that the officers did not coerce, threaten, or offer any hope of benefit to obtain the consents; the roommate gave the officers consent to search the common areas of the residence, and after the defendant arrived at the residence, the defendant likewise consented to the searches of the defendant's bedroom and of the defendant's person. Park v. State, 308 Ga. App. 648, 708 S.E.2d 614 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying a motion to suppress evidence a police officer seized in a hotel room because the trial court was authorized to find that the state satisfied the state's burden of showing that the defendant's consent to enter the hotel room was voluntary and not the product of coercion, express or implied; the officer's testimony and the defendant's statement supported a finding that the officer requested and received the defendant's consent to enter the hotel room under circumstances that did not suggest either coercion or threat, and the trial court was authorized to infer that the defendant's consent to search was freely given in the calculated hope that the officer would not find the hidden contraband. Liles v. State, 311 Ga. App. 355, 716 S.E.2d 228 (2011).

Consent to auto search. — Trial court erred in granting defendant's motion to suppress since the police had probable cause to search the driver's vehicle because a police officer smelled the odor of burning marijuana coming from the car following a valid traffic stop and the driver gave consent to search the car, the police did not need to establish that probable cause existed to search individual containers in the car which might contain contraband since the probable cause that existed to search the car gave them the right to also search each of the car's containers, and, thus, the trial court should not have suppressed evidence of contraband found in the book bag of the passenger, the defendant. State v. Selph, 261 Ga. App. 541, 583 S.E.2d 212 (2003).

Because the defendant's consent to search was validly obtained during a traffic stop rather than afterward, and the trial court could conclude that the defendant consented to the car's search despite an alleged limited understanding of English, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress. Salmeron v. State, 273 Ga. App. 55, 614 S.E.2d 177 (2005), aff'd, 280 Ga. 735, 632 S.E.2d 645 (2006).

Suppression motion was properly denied as defendant was properly stopped for running a stop sign, an outstanding arrest warrant was found during a license check, and defendant consented to the search of defendant's truck after defendant's arrest. Brooks v. State, 273 Ga. App. 691, 615 S.E.2d 829 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Denial of the defendant's motion to suppress evidence was proper because the evidence at the suppression hearing showed that an officer's suspicions were aroused during a traffic stop due to the defendant's erratic behavior and the fact that, on the floorboard behind the driver's seat of the defendant's car, the officer observed a bag similar to others the officer had seen used to transport illegal drugs; after the officer filled out the citation and returned it to the defendant to sign, the officer asked the defendant for consent to search the car which the defendant gave. Dowd v. State, 280 Ga. App. 563, 634 S.E.2d 509 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the marijuana seized as the search of the defendant's truck was conducted after a valid traffic stop after the defendant gave the officer consent to conduct the search, and nothing supported the defendant's claim that this consent was coerced because it was obtained during a custodial interrogation and without the benefit of Miranda warnings as the officer's questioning did not unduly prolong the traffic stop and did not result in an unauthorized seizure or an equivalent custodial detention for which Miranda warnings were required. Trujillo v. State, 286 Ga. App. 438, 649 S.E.2d 573 (2007).

A trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence gathered in the search of the defendant's vehicle, which resulted in the seizure of a plastic bag containing additional baggies that tested positive as to containing methamphetamine, in light of the state's evidence indicating that the defendant had been driving under the influence; while the state introduced evidence indicating that the defendant had been driving under the influence, the state's evidence also showed that the arresting officer asked for and got the defendant's consent only after the defendant convinced the officer that the defendant was in full possession of the defendant's faculties. Davis v. State, 287 Ga. App. 478, 651 S.E.2d 750 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 179 (Ga. 2008).

Because a police officer was authorized to stop defendant's vehicle based on a suspicion that defendant had illegally dumped trash, and because defendant consented to a search of the vehicle, the items seized from the vehicle would not have been suppressed; accordingly, defendant's ineffective assistance claim failed, and the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to withdraw defendant's Alford plea. Bishop v. State, 299 Ga. App. 241, 682 S.E.2d 201 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a police officer found in the defendant's vehicle because the defendant's consent to search the vehicle was not the product of an illegal detention since after returning the defendant's driver's license and issuing a warning ticket, the officer told the defendant that the defendant was free to leave, but the defendant remained on the scene and engaged in casual conversation about the high level of drug activity in the area and the fact that the defendant worked nearby; the defendant's conduct showed that the defendant did not feel intimidated by the officer's presence, and under the circumstances, the initial traffic stop had de-escalated into a consensual encounter when the officer requested consent to search, which the defendant readily provided, and there was no evidence that the officer coerced the defendant's consent, tricked the defendant, or conveyed a message that the defendant's consent to search was required. Davis v. State, 306 Ga. App. 185, 702 S.E.2d 14 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress marijuana a police officer found during the search of the defendant's car because the evidence showed that the defendant was legally detained when the officer requested consent to search; the officer's testimony reflected that the officer sought consent to search immediately after issuing a verbal warning. Nix v. State, 312 Ga. App. 43, 717 S.E.2d 550 (2011).

Trial counsel was not deficient for failing to move to suppress evidence an officer obtained during a traffic stop because there was no illegal detention that would have supported a motion to suppress since the officer's uncontradicted testimony that the officer observed the defendant's car failing to maintain the car's lane provided the reasonable suspicion necessary to support the traffic stop; immediately after checking the defendant's license and insurance, the officer asked for and obtained the defendant's consent to search the vehicle, after which the defendant fled from the scene. Ross v. State, 313 Ga. App. 695, 722 S.E.2d 411 (2012).

A trial court erred by denying a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the defendant's vehicle, despite the defendant consenting to the search of the vehicle, as the police's detention of the defendant was unlawful in as much as no warrant existed since the seizure of the defendant arose from the defendant arriving at a location under surveillance for drug manufacturing based on an anonymous tip regarding a codefendant, and the tip had nothing to do with the defendant. By an officer, who knew the defendant, forcibly opening the defendant's vehicle door, the defendant's movement was physically restrained and the fact that the defendant consented to the search did not validate the search since the consent was the product of a wrongful detention. Smith v. State, 288 Ga. App. 87, 653 S.E.2d 510 (2007).

Consent to search vehicle coerced.

— Trial court erred by denying defendants' motion to suppress drug and weapon evidence found in defendants' vehicle during a search after a routine traffic stop as the driver's consent to search was coerced in violation of defendants' Fourth Amendment rights by an officer's intimidating, harassing, and threatening words of arrest used to convince the driver to consent. A videotape of the stop showed that the officer threatened the driver with obstruction of justice and that the officer would bring a dog to the scene if the driver did not consent to the search. Cuaresma v. State, 292 Ga. App. 43, 663 S.E.2d 396 (2008).

Withdrawal of consent not shown.

— An investigator’s testimony that the defendant “got kind of upset a little bit” upon being questioned regarding the things which had been found at the defendant’s trailer did not demonstrate that the defendant withdrew consent to a search. Boone v. State, 293 Ga. App. 654, 667 S.E.2d 880 (2008).

4. Inventory Searches

Inventory is not for exclusive protection of owner, but also serves to protect police, and, therefore, it is not necessary that police ask a prisoner whether the prisoner wants the prisoner’s items to be inventoried. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Inventory searches have two purposes: to protect the vehicle and the property in it, and to safeguard the police or other officers from claims of lost possessions. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Custodial seizures and accompanying inventory searches are reasonable. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Police seizure and inventory is not dependent for its validity upon absolute necessity for police to take charge of property to preserve it. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Inventory must not be done with investigative intent, but it should be incident to caretaking function of police. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Inventory is permissible intrusion when scope of search is reasonable. — Only so long as the scope of the search is reasonable, taking into consideration the three interests to be protected by the inventory: the protection of the owner’s property while it remains in police custody; the protection of police against claims or disputes over lost or stolen property; and the protection of the police from potential danger, will it be held to be a constitutionally permissible intrusion. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Inventories pursuant to standard police procedures are reasonable.

Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

When the police take custody of any sort of container such as an automobile, it is reasonable to search the container to itemize the property to be held by the police. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Police permitted broad circumstances for valid seizure and inventory of property.

— A police seizure and inventory is not dependent for its validity upon the absolute necessity for the police to take charge of property to preserve it. They are permitted to take charge of property under broader circumstances than that. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Inventory and impoundment may be invalid and unreasonable.

— Even though the decision to seize and inventory need not be based upon the “absolute necessity” to do so, unless the rationale for an inventory search inheres in the decision to seize and inventory, the impoundment itself may be “unreasonable” and the resulting inventory search invalid. State v. Thomason, 153 Ga. App. 345, 265 S.E.2d 312 (1980), overruled on other grounds, State v. Stille, 261 Ga. App. 868, 584 S.E.2d 9 (2003); Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Inventory rationale is one which may be abused and stretched to cover unnecessary searches; but even some suspicion that contraband will be found will not avoid an otherwise valid inventory search. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337 (1979).

Discovery and disclosure of “death note” were pursuant to valid inventory. — When one officer pursuant to a valid and proper inventory had read and called attention to a “death note” found in the defendant’s possessions and since the discovery and disclosure of the note were appropriate police actions, the subsequent acts of other officers, in rereading and perusing the documents in question were plainly justified under the “second glance doctrine.” Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337 (1979).

Inventory search authorized both as search of properly impounded vehicle and as search incident to lawful arrest. State v. Gilchrist, 174 Ga. App. 499, 330 S.E.2d 430 (1985).

A police officer’s decision to impound a car and to conduct an inventory search was upheld after the car was involved in a parking lot collision; the defendant was arrested after driving with a suspended driver’s license and a license tag issued to another vehicle and driving without insurance; the officer was unable to reach anyone locally who could take custody of the car; and other alternatives to impoundment would have incurred the risk of theft or damage to the car or its contents. State v. Gilchrist, 174 Ga. App. 499, 330 S.E.2d 430 (1985).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant’s motion to suppress evidence found during the inventory of defendant’s car, which was parked on private property as: (1) defendant was arrested, at night, for carrying a concealed weapon while walking away from a motel after a clerk had reported defendant to the police as a suspicious person; (2) the motel clerk testified that the motel’s policy was to tow unclaimed cars parked in their lot; (3) a detective testified that it was the police department’s policy to impound a suspect’s car so that it would not be stolen or towed by the motel; (4) it was the police department’s policy to inventory the contents of the car before impounding it to protect the department from a suspect later claiming that valuable items were missing from the suspect’s car; and (5) the detective’s decision to impound the car was reasonable within the meaning of the Fourth Amendment. Johnson v. State, 263 Ga. App. 443, 587 S.E.2d 775 (2003).

Impound search of defendant’s car was reasonably necessary to protect the car and its contents where defendant, who was arrested for driving under the influence, was the lone occupant of defendant’s car, the car was parked at the side of the road at 4 A.M., defendant did not ask for an alternative disposition to impoundment, and absent a reasonable request, officers were not obligated to offer impound alternatives to those individuals placed under arrest. Evans v. State, 267 Ga. App. 706, 600 S.E.2d 671 (2004).

Defendant’s motion to suppress was properly denied as a search of defendant’s wallet was conducted during an inventory of defendant’s personal items after defendant was arrested and the search was not investigatory. Morrison v. State, 272 Ga. App. 34, 611 S.E.2d 720, aff’d, 280 Ga. 222, 626 S.E.2d 500 (2006).

Defendant’s suppression motion was properly denied as the police stopped a rental truck, late at night, and discovered that defendant, the only authorized driver, had a suspended license; the truck was properly impounded and an inventory search conducted as the officer could not allow defendant to continue driving the truck, nor could defendant leave the truck at the scene, creating a potential hazard. Wiley v. State, 274 Ga. App. 60, 616 S.E.2d 832 (2005).

Defendant’s motion to suppress evidence of cocaine and crack pipes found during an inventory search of the car was properly denied, as: (1) the police impound was not unlawful; (2) waiting a reasonable time, usually 20 minutes, prior to having the car towed, was not unreasonable as a matter of law; and (3) the officers were not required to call defendant’s relatives first. Carlisle v. State, 278 Ga. App. 528, 629 S.E.2d 512 (2006).

Because an officer was authorized to arrest the defendant for weaving, a decision to impound the vehicle the defendant was driving was not unreasonable, and an inventory search of the vehicle was authorized; thus, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant’s motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the search. Lopez v. State, 286 Ga. App. 873, 650 S.E.2d 430 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because there was evidence to support the trial court's finding that the officers' search of a zippered, red bag found during the inventory search of the defendant's motorcycle was conducted pursuant to State Patrol procedures, which required that all items of value be listed and, thus, did not exceed the permissible scope of the inventory search; there was no showing that the police, who were following standardized procedures, acted in bad faith or for the sole purpose of investigation. Grizzle v. State, 310 Ga. App. 577, 713 S.E.2d 701 (2011).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the trial court's finding that the impoundment of the defendant's motorcycle was reasonably necessary under the circumstances was supported by the evidence because the defendant was arrested for attempting to elude police and for several traffic offenses, including driving with an expired license, and the defendant was not going to be allowed to drive the motorcycle under any circumstances. Grizzle v. State, 310 Ga. App. 577, 713 S.E.2d 701 (2011).

Inventory search of vehicle pursuant to impoundment. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the inventory search of a van was unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment due to a lack of evidence of police policy; the record contained no evidence about the police department's policy or procedures on inventory searches, but rather, the officers simply testified that the officers' searches of a flatbed wrecker, the van, and the van's contents were inventory searches pursuant to the impoundment. Capellan v. State, 316 Ga. App. 467, 729 S.E.2d 602 (2012).

Order to apprehend for a mental health evaluation does not authorize full inventory search. — Search of a civil detainee under O.C.G.A. § 37-3-41, before being placed in a patrol car, absent some valid reason for the officer conducting the search to take custody of the clothing, container, or bag searched, does not come within the ambit of allowable inventory searches because such an inventory presupposes some valid reason for taking custody of the object being searched; an inventory search which is not necessary to achieve the recognized custodial goals of such a search is not permissible, and no controlling precedent authorizes a full inventory search on the basis that a detainee will be transported to another location in a patrol car for a mental health evaluation. Lindsey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 644, 639 S.E.2d 584 (2006).

Drug evidence found in a defendant's pocket by a police officer who was executing a civil order to apprehend the defendant for a mental health evaluation under O.C.G.A. § 37-3-41 should have been suppressed because the search in which the officer found the evidence did not come within the ambit of allowable inventory searches; no full inventory search was authorized on the basis that the defendant was to be transported in a patrol car to the location of the evaluation. Lindsey v. State, 282 Ga. App. 644, 639 S.E.2d 584 (2006).

Search Warrants

1. In General

Compelled testing after defendant's invocation of right to refuse under implied consent law. — Police do not have the authority to seek a search warrant to compel a defendant to submit blood and urine samples for drug testing after a defendant has invoked the defendant's right under the implied consent law to refuse the testing. State v. Collier, 279 Ga. 316, 612 S.E.2d 281 (2005).

General exploratory warrants are void. — By definition, a general warrant is one which does not sufficiently specify the person, place, or thing to be searched. Lockhart v. State, 166 Ga. App. 555, 305 S.E.2d 22 (1983).

Search warrants unavailable to individual for maintenance of private right. — Search warrants are criminal in nature, having no relation to civil process and are unavailable to an individual for the maintenance of a mere private right. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965), commented on in 17 Mercer L. Rev. 479 (1966).

Search Warrants (Cont'd)1. In General (Cont'd)

No prohibition against legislature designating other persons power to issue search warrants. — At common law, justices of the peace had general power to issue search warrants for stolen goods. So long as a judicial determination of the existence of probable cause is made, there is no constitutional inhibition against designation by the General Assembly of persons other than a justice of the peace for doing it. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965), commented on in 17 Mercer L. Rev. 479 (1966).

Sufficiency of description contained in warrant. — It is enough if the description of the place to be searched is such that the officer with a search warrant can, with reasonable effort, ascertain and identify the place intended. Steele v. State, 118 Ga. App. 433, 164 S.E.2d 255 (1968).

When a search warrant fails to name an individual and describes incorrectly the street number, county, and city, naming only the street name correctly, it is defective. State v. Hatch, 160 Ga. App. 384, 287 S.E.2d 98 (1981).

Warrant references adjacent buildings. — Even though a search warrant may have been issued for premises which were described in commercial terms, the express scope of the warrant nevertheless also extended to “adjacent buildings”. Thus, the trial court did not err in failing to grant the motion to suppress the evidence that was discovered in the search of the residence pursuant to the warrant. Hamil v. State, 198 Ga. App. 869, 403 S.E.2d 828, cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 403 S.E.2d 828 (1991).

A description in a search warrant used to seize pornographic tapes was so open-ended that the warrant violated both the United States and Georgia Constitutions. As a result, the search warrant was invalid and the tapes should have been suppressed as the fruits of an illegal search. Dobbins v. State, 262 Ga. 161, 415 S.E.2d 168 (1992).

Trial court properly suppressed videotapes that were seized from the defendant's home during the execution of a search warrant as the description in the warrant that the items sought were videotapes that were instruments used in the crimes of molesting and sexually exploiting children did not meet the particularity requirements of U.S. Const., amend. 4 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, especially in light of the fact that the videotapes involved activity protected by U.S. Const., amend. 1, since there was no evidence of any videotape activity involving the victim, and the warrant did not elaborate on what types of videotapes were to be seized, leaving that determination solely to the discretion of the officers, which amounted to an impermissible general warrant. Circumstances may make an exact search warrant description of instrumentalities a virtual impossibility and, in those circumstances, the searching officer can only be expected to describe the generic class of items sought, but a warrant authorizing the seizure of “videotapes” with nothing more does not pass constitutional muster. State v. Kramer, 260 Ga. App. 546, 580 S.E.2d 314 (2003).

When a search warrant affidavit incorrectly described the house to be searched as the second house on the right, when it was actually the third house on the right, and a warrant containing the incorrect description had been issued, when a magistrate who did not issue the warrant corrected the errors in the affidavit and warrant, the change was clearly typographical and not so material as to destroy the integrity of the affidavit or the validity of the warrant, and the change did not affect any substantive rights. Marshall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 17, 614 S.E.2d 169 (2005).

Evidence seized from defendant at place of work was properly suppressed since the search warrant did not authorize the search of the defendant at the defendant's place of employment and only covered searches at the defendant's residence. State v. Dills, 237 Ga. App. 165, 514 S.E.2d 917 (1999).

A search warrant is not invalid for want of description of the premises to be searched if the description sufficiently permits a prudent officer executing the warrant to locate the place definitely and with reasonable certainty, and without depending upon the officer's discretion. Chambless v. State, 165 Ga. App. 194, 300 S.E.2d 201 (1983).

Effect of incorrect street number in warrant. — Even though a street number is incorrect, where there are other elements of description sufficiently particular, the search warrant may be valid. Chambless v. State, 165 Ga. App. 194, 300 S.E.2d 201 (1983).

Incorrect street address invalidated warrant. — A search warrant containing the wrong street address was defective under both the federal and Georgia constitutions as the defect was not a mere technical irregularity under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-31 because it did not incorporate the affidavit and application and thus could not be construed with reference to them; furthermore, the warrant did not contain other descriptive elements that would allow an officer to locate the place with reasonable certainty. Thomas v. State, 287 Ga. App. 262, 651 S.E.2d 183 (2007).

Sufficient particularity. — Search warrant which defined the person, premises, and vehicle to be searched with sufficient particularity was not subject to attack as a general warrant because it authorized the search and seizure of “the person, premises or property” — the use of the word “or” did not give the officers unbridled discretion in what to search. Minter v. State, 206 Ga. App. 692, 426 S.E.2d 169 (1992).

When law enforcement received two anonymous tips that the defendant would be traveling from another state with cocaine in a certain model car licensed in the other state, would be taking a certain route, and would be staying in a certain hotel, the tips' range of details relating to future acts not easily predicted, combined with information obtained while defendant was lawfully detained that $150,000.00 was seized from a concealed compartment in defendant's vehicle and defendant was deceptive during a conversation with a police officer, allowed the issuance of a search warrant for the defendant's house. Solis v. State, 268 Ga. App. 493, 602 S.E.2d 166 (2004).

Trial court properly denied suppression of the defendant's blood sample for a DNA comparison pursuant to a particularized search warrant seeking the sample as the warrant and the attached affidavit when read together particularly described the evidence to be seized and gave the executing officers adequate notice of the search warrant's scope and command. Holloway v. State, 287 Ga. App. 655, 653 S.E.2d 95 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers found at a residence because the fact that the investigator who submitted the affidavit for the search warrant did not leave a copy of the affidavit with the warrant at the premises did not render the warrant invalid; the warrant satisfied the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII on the warrant's face because the warrant listed the address of the place to be searched and contained a description of the home, and the warrant also listed items to be seized, including marijuana, weighing devices, and other paraphernalia used in the distribution of drugs. Pass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 440, 710 S.E.2d 641 (2011).

Effect of incorrect date in warrant. — Because affidavit accompanying a search warrant contained sufficient probable cause and resulting search was not rendered illegal merely because the date on the warrant post-dated the search by one day, trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to the warrant. Jones v. State, 289 Ga. App. 767, 658 S.E.2d 386 (2008).

“Curtilage” does not include neighboring or nearby property which is beyond the property lines of the dwelling specified in the warrant. Landers v. State, 250 Ga. 808, 301 S.E.2d 633 (1983).

A driveway is properly considered within the curtilage of the dwelling it services, at least when the driveway is located on the dwelling owner's property. Landers v. State, 250 Ga. 808, 301 S.E.2d 633 (1983).

When a search warrant was issued allowing a search of defendant's house, this extended by implication to areas within the curtilage of the dwelling, and to a vehicle parked within that curtilage. Solis v. State, 268 Ga. App. 493, 602 S.E.2d 166 (2004).

Warrant valid which requires officer to make determination of fact. — If the warrant calls for the search and seizure of intoxicating liquors at a described location, the executing officer may be required to determine as a matter of fact which of several different containers found on the premises searched contained intoxicating liquors or which contained other beverages of a nonintoxicating character. In the very nature of things, the officer cannot be relieved of making this determination, and so long as the determination which the officer is required to make is a determination of a matter of fact as distinguished from a determination of a matter of opinion the warrant is valid. Strauss v. Stynchombe, 224 Ga. 859, 165 S.E.2d 302 (1968).

Warrant valid when sufficient description and limited scope permits prudent officer to locate person and place. — Even though the execution of a warrant is directed to all peace officers, a search pursuant to the warrant meets the requirements of the United States and Georgia Constitutions if the warrant was limited in the warrant's scope to physically described persons in a specific vicinity, and the description sufficiently permitted a prudent officer with a search warrant to be able to locate the person and place definitely and with reasonable certainty. Fomby v. State, 120 Ga. App. 387, 170 S.E.2d 585 (1969), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 1008, 90 S. Ct. 1236, 25 L. Ed. 2d 421 (1970).

To be valid, search warrant must contain description of person and premises to be searched with such particularity as would enable a prudent person executing the warrant to locate the person and premises definitely and with reasonable certainty. Anderson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 25, 270 S.E.2d 263 (1980).

Searches of persons on premises but not named in search warrant are illegal absent independent justification for a personal search. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Search of person not named in warrant outside home was permissible. — Officer who saw the defendant asleep in a car parked at a house as the officer was headed to the house to execute an arrest warrant for the defendant's brother was entitled to initiate a "first-tier" encounter by approaching the car and asking the defendant to step out; marijuana seen in plain view in the car gave probable cause to arrest the defendant for drug possession, and to search the car, and, incident to the arrest, the officers were also authorized to search the entire passenger compartment of the automobile and any closed containers therein. Mauge v. State, 279 Ga. App. 36, 630 S.E.2d 174 (2006).

Searches treated as searches of person. — Searches of a paper bag carried under a person's arm and of a plastic bag in a person's pocket have been treated as searches of the person. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Constitutional protection of visitor's personal belonging. — Personal belongings brought by their owner on a visit to a friend's house retain their constitutional protection until their owner meaningfully abdicates control or responsibility. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Whether police had notice of searching visitor's effects requires factual determination. — Whether the police had notice that the police were searching the personal effects of a visitor to searched premises must be determined on the facts of each case. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Without notice of ownership, police can assume objects subject to search. — Without notice of some sort of the ownership of a belonging, the police are entitled to assume that all objects within premises lawfully subject to search under a warrant are part of those premises for the purpose of executing the warrant. Childers v. State, 158 Ga. App. 613, 281 S.E.2d 349 (1981).

Failure to record information in affidavit will not invalidate search warrant. — If information sufficient to uphold a determination of probable cause is presented under oath to a state magistrate, the failure to record the information in the form of an affidavit will not invalidate the search warrant. Marshall v. State, 113 Ga. App. 143, 147 S.E.2d 666 (1966).

Failure to include affidavit or warrant in record on appeal. — Although a defendant challenged the validity of an affidavit supporting a search warrant, neither the warrant nor the affidavit was in the record; thus, the court had to assume that the trial court's decision as to the exclusion of the search results was correct. Williams v. State, 287 Ga. App. 361, 651 S.E.2d 768 (2007).

When automobile inventory search was not illegal, later search warrant based upon this information is not invalid. Anglin v. State, 244 Ga. 1, 257 S.E.2d 513 (1979).

Search warrant held not overbroad and general. — A search warrant is not impermissibly overbroad and general when the warrant authorizes the agents to search “any other person found on said premises who reasonably might be involved in the commission of the aforesaid violation of the laws” as well as “any motor vehicle found on said premises” and both clauses appear in the preprinted portion of the search warrant form, since a warrant which identifies the premises and its owners or occupants is not void as a general warrant because it authorizes the search of other persons found there who may reasonably be involved in the commission of the crime for which the warrant is issued, and the scope of the search is sufficiently limited by the specific language typed in the blank spaces on the form, describing two vehicles by color, make, type, and license plate number and stating they are at the premises described. Castillo v. State, 166 Ga. App. 817, 305 S.E.2d 629 (1983).

Warrant which authorized the seizure of “all items contained within a specified room and motel at the time of the fire on February 17, 2001, and which remain therein which is evidence of the crime of Insurance Fraud” was not impermissibly vague because the warrant included detailed information about the removal of cats and a dog from defendant's home and taken to the motel room prior to a fire at the home allegedly started by defendant's son with the knowledge and consent of defendant; in the warrant application, an investigator testified that CD's, tapes, stereo equipment, and other electronics were witnessed being taken to the specified motel and room number and were noticeably absent from the fire scene, and an insurance investigator further testified that in a recorded statement, defendant said that there were no items removed from the house prior to the fire. Maddox v. State, 272 Ga. App. 440, 612 S.E.2d 484 (2005).

Facts in an affidavit supporting a request for a search warrant, which stated, among other things, that the defendant had bought video tapes known to have child pornography, that the defendant admitted to investigators that the defendant had received and partially viewed the tapes, and that, based on law enforcement experience, it was likely that the defendant would store these items on a computer, the magistrate was authorized to make a pragmatic, common-sense judgment that there was a fair probability that computer equipment in the defendant's residence contained illegal images; the trial court erred in later ruling that the officers only demonstrated probable cause to search for the original tapes and that the warrant should not have included the general items listed, including the defendant's computer. State v. Henley, 279 Ga. App. 326, 630 S.E.2d 911 (2006).

Search may not exceed scope of warrant. — A search in execution of a warrant may not exceed in scope the particular article or things to be seized. Lockhart v. State, 166 Ga. App. 555, 305 S.E.2d 22 (1983).

When a warrant authorized seizure of “Cruelly treated animals who are sick and are not being treated medically, animals in overcrowded and diseased environment, business records which document condition of animals; euthanizing drugs,” there was no judicial authorization for seizure of drugs other than euthanizing drugs, business records which did not document the condition of animals, and any animal which was not in perfect health.

Military Circle Pet Ctr. No. 94, Inc. v. State, 181 Ga. App. 657, 353 S.E.2d 555, rev'd on other grounds, 257 Ga. 388, 360 S.E.2d 248, vacated on other grounds, 184 Ga. App. 805, 363 S.E.2d 360 (1987).

No knock requirement inappropriately applied. — Because a search warrant affidavit did not contain specific facts indicating a risk of peril to police officers or of destruction of the evidence, there was no probable cause for issuance of a no-knock warrant; consequently, the trial court did not err in granting the defendant's motion to suppress. State v. Williams, 275 Ga. App. 612, 621 S.E.2d 581 (2005).

Knock and talk procedures. — Officers' knock-and-talk procedure at a house was permissible, even though an officer used a plastic cup to hit the door of the house because the officer was not standing directly in front of the door for safety reasons and for the preservation of contraband inside the house; once the door was opened, the officer saw drugs in plain view inside the house, permitting the officer's entry. Herring v. State, 279 Ga. App. 162, 630 S.E.2d 776 (2006).

Items seized under warrant were properly related to the crime. — Evidence seized pursuant to a valid warrant following the commission of an armed robbery, murder, and related offenses was properly admitted as the items found were of the type which might be employed in the commission of those crimes. Grimes v. State, 280 Ga. 363, 628 S.E.2d 580 (2006).

Effect of magistrate's prior issuance of blank warrants. — When the defendant contended the search warrant was invalid because the executing magistrate was not neutral and detached, because the magistrate admitted, after first having denied, that at sometime in the past in an unrelated incident or incidents, the magistrate had signed blank warrants to accommodate an officer when the magistrate was to be at a family dinner, it was held that the incident suggested by the defendant was an isolated incident or incidents in the past and that there was no evidence except remote speculation that the magistrate's posture in issuing the search warrant in this case was not neutral and detached. Lang v. State, 165 Ga. App. 576, 302 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 937, 104 S. Ct. 346, 78 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1983).

Non-issuing magistrate's corrections of errors in warrant. — When a search warrant affidavit incorrectly described the house to be searched as the second house on the right, when it was actually the third house on the right, and a warrant containing the incorrect description had been issued, a magistrate who did not issue the warrant was authorized to correct the errors in the affidavit and warrant, and was not required to take evidence under oath to do so. Marshall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 17, 614 S.E.2d 169 (2005).

Not invalid when signed by de facto magistrate. — In a defendant's prosecution on charges of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute and possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, a search warrant issued by an assistant magistrate at the magistrate's direction was invalid because the assistant magistrate could not be considered a de facto officer as no such office had been created by the county commissioners or by the superior court judges under O.C.G.A. § 15-10-20(a). Beck v. State, 283 Ga. 352, 658 S.E.2d 577 (2008).

"Staleness" of warrant. — Time alone is inadequate to resolve questions of staleness of information in warrants because the ultimate question is whether, under the facts and circumstances of a particular case, information about evidence is so fresh that there is probable cause to believe the evidence still exists in the same place or is so stale that such a conclusion of probable cause is unreasonable. McDade v. State, 175 Ga. App. 204, 332 S.E.2d 672 (1985).

An informant's tip was not stale because the officer waited 72 hours after receiving the tip to seek a search warrant. Regardless of whether the methamphetamine seen by the informant was still in the house, the information provided a substantial basis for believing that when the magistrate issued the warrant, methamphetamine was being manufactured there. Zorn v. State, 291 Ga. App. 613, 662 S.E.2d 370 (2008).

Sufficient facts to issue warrant for defendant's medical records. — Search warrant for the defendant's medical records was proper because the affidavit listed the crimes that were believed to have been committed, including DUI, and averred that the defendant caused an accident and had open and empty beer cans inside the defendant's vehicle; the affidavit included sufficient facts to support a finding that evidence of the crime was in the medical records, and the evidence supported the magistrate's finding of probable cause. Therefore, the defendant's argument that the warrant was invalid because the warrant omitted relevant information and contained false and misleading information was rejected. Brogdon v. State, 299 Ga. App. 547, 683 S.E.2d 99 (2009), aff'd, 287 Ga. 528, 697 S.E.2d 211 (2010).

Search warrant authorizing a search of defendant's hospital records relating to the defendant's treatment on the night of a shooting was constitutional under U.S. Const., amend. IV and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII because the defendant could not claim an expectation of privacy in the medical records to the extent that the records contained information the defendant disclosed to medical personnel or medical personnel disclosed to the defendant in the presence of two police officers. Bowling v. State, 289 Ga. 881, 717 S.E.2d 190 (2011).

2. Informants' Reliability and Affidavits

An informant is established as reliable if the informant has previously, on more than one occasion, given to the sheriff truthful information which led to at least one conviction. Lang v. State, 165 Ga. App. 576, 302 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 937, 104 S. Ct. 346, 78 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1983).

Independent police work can corroborate details of tip, if a tip is sufficiently detailed so as to show a reliable basis for the informant's information. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Determination of "sufficient detail" test based solely on information coming from informant.

— In determining the reliability of the manner in which an informant obtained information, determination of whether the tip meets the "sufficient detail" test is based exclusively on what information came from the informant without reference, at this point, to independent verification of the informant's information. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Suppression motion properly denied. — Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant, as: (1) there was a presumption of reliability as to the report of a police officer or undercover agent in the line of duty to a fellow officer in support of the warrant; (2) the affidavit attached to the warrant set forth sufficient facts to establish the reliability of the informant; and (3) a search warrant for the defendant's home was not even necessary because at the time of the search the defendant was on probation. McTaggart v. State, 285 Ga. App. 178, 645 S.E.2d 658 (2007).

Trial court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence found pursuant to a search warrant. An informant's predictions that a third person would go to a house near a certain highway and buy drugs from a person with the defendant's first name was confirmed by police; incorrect statements in an officer's affidavit that a vehicle did not stop on the way to and from the defendant's house did not change the determination that probable cause existed to issue the warrant; and the failure of the officer to state that the informant had pending criminal charges did not require a different result. Spaeth v. State, 293 Ga. App. 608, 667 S.E.2d 449 (2008).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized in a hotel suite because the affidavit supporting the search warrant for a hotel suite recited probable cause to believe that drugs would be found on the premises under the defendant's possession, custody, and control, namely the two-room suite that the hotel designated and rented to the defendant. Glass v.

Search Warrants (Cont'd)2. Informants' Reliability and Affidavits (Cont'd)

State, 304 Ga. App. 414, 696 S.E.2d 140 (2010).

Reliability of informants justifies issuance of search warrant. — When an officer's investigation of the information received from the informants corroborates their allegations against the defendant, the reliability of the informants is sufficiently established to justify the issuance of a search warrant. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on drug-related offenses, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized from the defendant's apartment upon execution of a search warrant since the affidavit of a deputy, which was based on an informant's tip, sufficiently established probable cause as the informant had been in the defendant's apartment and had personally viewed the drugs. Rocha v. State, 284 Ga. App. 852, 644 S.E.2d 921 (2007).

Lack of reliability outweighed by detail. — Search warrant was properly issued under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII based on the information provided in the affidavit, as the affidavit's strong showing as to the basis of the informant's knowledge compensated for any deficiency in detail as to the informant's reliability; the informant provided the defendant's first name, the location, quantity, and packaging of the cocaine, and details of the sale of cocaine that the informant had witnessed. State v. Donaldson, 281 Ga. App. 51, 635 S.E.2d 345 (2006).

Local law enforcement officers participating in common investigation are reliable informants. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Magistrate may rely on law enforcement officer's knowledge of suspect's reputation in issuing search warrant. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Affidavit defective when nothing recited therein shows reliability of informant. — An affidavit based on an informer's tip is fatally defective as the basis for a search warrant when the affidavit recites absolutely nothing which would show the informer's reliability nor states how the informer obtained the information, and under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 13 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30) evidence obtained must be suppressed. Grebe v. State, 125 Ga. App. 873, 189 S.E.2d 698 (1972).

Determination of whether individual supplying information is truthful person. — Reliable manner of the acquisition of the information having been demonstrated, it must now be determined whether the individual supplying this "reliable" information is a truthful person. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Informant's lack of previous contact with authorities is not fatal to the informant's veracity. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Requirement that magistrate be informed of underlying circumstances. — Although an affidavit may be based on hearsay information and need not reflect the direct personal observations of the affiant, the magistrate must be informed of some of the underlying circumstances from which the informant concluded that the articles were where the informant claimed they were. Maddox v. State, 133 Ga. App. 709, 213 S.E.2d 1 (1975).

Underlying circumstances requirement is designed to locate original source of incriminating information and to examine the validity or reliability of that information, but is not concerned with the overall reliability of the informant personally. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

In marginal cases, preference is for validation of warrant. — Recital of some of the underlying circumstances in the affidavit for a search warrant is essential if the magistrate is to perform the magistrate's detached function and not serve merely as a rubber stamp for the police; however, if these circumstances are detailed, if reason for crediting the source of the information is given, and when a magistrate has found probable cause, the courts should not invalidate the warrant by interpreting the affidavit in a hyper-technical, rather than a common-sense, manner. Although in a particular case it may not be easy to determine when an affidavit demonstrates the existence of probable cause, the resolution of doubtful or marginal cases in this area should be largely determined by the preference to be accorded to warrants. Devier v. State, 247 Ga. 635, 277 S.E.2d 729 (1981).

Hearsay and even hearsay upon hearsay may be sufficient to furnish basis for issuance of valid warrant if the magistrate is informed of some of the underlying circumstances supporting the affiant's underlying conclusions and the affiant's belief that the informant was credible or the affiant's information reliable. Smith v. State, 136 Ga. App. 17, 220 S.E.2d 11 (1975), cert. denied, 425 U.S. 938, 96 S. Ct. 1671, 48 L. Ed. 2d 179 (1976); Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979); State v. Griffin, 154 Ga. App. 361, 268 S.E.2d 412 (1980).

An affidavit supporting a search warrant may be based on hearsay information so long as there is a substantial basis for crediting the hearsay. Devier v. State, 247 Ga. 635, 277 S.E.2d 729 (1981).

That there is "hearsay upon hearsay" for information upon which affidavit is based does not preclude finding of probable cause. Gordon v. State, 150 Ga. App. 862, 258 S.E.2d 664 (1979).

Mere existence of "hearsay upon hearsay" was not fatal to a search warrant because, under the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate was informed of the underlying circumstances involving an undercover buy from the defendant, independent of the double hearsay, which did not depend upon the reliability of the hearsay declarations; further, a known informant's statements to police against a penal interest elevated the statements' reliability. Cochran v. State, 281 Ga. 4, 635 S.E.2d 701 (2006).

Showing required in affidavit as to noninformant hearsay declarant. — As to a noninformant hearsay declarant, the affidavit for a search warrant must contain a showing: (1) that the hearsay information is based on personal observations of the hearsay declarant, and not rumor and speculation, or conclusory allegations of the affiant; and (2) that the hearsay declarant is reliable — as by stating that he or she is a police officer, the victim of the crime, a law-abiding and trustworthy citizen, or even a declarant against penal interest. Devier v. State, 247 Ga. 635, 277 S.E.2d 729 (1981).

When hearsay declarant is interested citizen. — On the defendant's contention that the affidavit on which the search warrant was based was defective because the hearsay declarants were not shown to be reliable, since the hearsay declarants are identified interested citizens, the mere averments of those who provided the information are enough to support a presumption of reliability, credibility, and accuracy, and the hearsay statements therefore may serve as the foundation for probable cause. Cash v. State, 166 Ga. App. 835, 305 S.E.2d 618 (1983).

Oath covers only truthfulness of statements contained in written affidavit and not the oral statements given to show probable cause when the magistrate does not administer any oath until after the affidavit is signed. Riggins v. State, 136 Ga. App. 279, 220 S.E.2d 775 (1975).

Void search warrant cannot be validated and property illegally seized introduced in evidence merely because the officers were in fact reliably informed and did in fact recover contraband, nor can a deficiency be supplied by facts discovered in making the search, for the sufficiency of the affidavit must be determined as of the time the warrant issued. Anderson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 25, 270 S.E.2d 263 (1980).

Effect of false statements in affidavit. — When the defendant makes a substantial preliminary showing that a false statement knowingly and intentionally, or with reckless disregard for the truth, was included by the affiant in the warrant affidavit, and if the allegedly false statement is necessary to the finding of probable cause, the Fourth Amendment requires that a hearing be held at the defendant's request; in the event at that hearing the allegation of perjury or reckless disregard is established by the defendant by a preponderance of the evidence, and, with the affidavit's false material set to one side, the affidavit's remaining content is insufficient to establish probable cause, the search warrant must be voided and the fruits of the search excluded to that extent as if probable cause was lacking on the face of the affidavit. Cuevas v. State, 151 Ga. App. 605, 260 S.E.2d 737 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 1338, 63 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1980).

Magistrate had probable cause to issue a search warrant for the defendant's vehicle because a crime victim identified the vehicle as the location of defendant's rape of another victim, and the fact that the victim who provided the information on which the affidavit used to obtain this warrant had previously given false information to obtain another warrant did not change the fact that the magistrate had probable cause to issue the second warrant. Cole v. State, 279 Ga. App. 219, 630 S.E.2d 817 (2006).

Information substantiating informant was sufficiently detailed to show that it was more than a mere casual rumor or accusation made on reputation when it stated that the informant had been on the property "in the very recent past" and that defendant "is presently storing marijuana in the described building." The information was, on its face and by its own terms, not stale. Lang v. State, 165 Ga. App. 576, 302 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 464 U.S. 937, 104 S. Ct. 346, 78 L. Ed. 2d 312 (1983).

Stop of the appellant's vehicle was lawful because it was based on a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity from a tip of an informant of some past indica of reliability. Knight v. State, 242 Ga. App. 363, 528 S.E.2d 855 (2000).

Affiant's erroneous substitution of the name of the victim of a burglary for the name of the burglar in the portion of the affidavit showing the reliability of a confidential informant, from a change in filing systems, did not make the warrant void under either the federal or state Constitution. Wells v. State, 180 Ga. App. 133, 348 S.E.2d 681 (1986).

Obscenity cases. — Warrants authorizing the seizure of materials presumptively protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution may not issue based solely on the conclusory allegations of a police officer that the sought-after materials are obscene, but instead must be supported by affidavits setting forth specific facts in order that the issuing magistrate may focus searchingly on the question of obscenity. State v. Kramer, 260 Ga. App. 546, 580 S.E.2d 314 (2003).

Absence of informant's personal information. — Totality of the circumstances test for reviewing search warrants involves a practical, common-sense approach to the requirement of probable cause relative to the issuance of search warrants and, with respect to information obtained from an informant, three types of information are needed to support an application for a search warrant: (1) the type of information previously supplied by the informant; (2) the use to which that information has been put; and (3) the length of time since the previous information was furnished. A search warrant was properly based on probable cause since the warrant was supported by an affidavit from a sheriff's investigator who disclosed all information, including why the informant's information was reliable, details of a controlled buy of drugs from the defendant, and the investigator's previous dealings with the defendant; the only information left off the affidavit was personal information regarding the informant. Burke v. State, 265 Ga. App. 38, 592 S.E.2d 862 (2004).

Omission of material information in affidavit for search warrant. — Trial court properly suppressed contraband found in the defendant's home pursuant to a search warrant which indicated that the defendant's baby had been taken to a hospital by a sitter and had cocaine in the baby's system; the affidavit omitted material information, including the fact that the sitter had the baby for nine hours before taking the baby to the hospital and was seeking custody, the fact that an officer had gone to the defendant's home the day before without seeing any evidence of contraband, and the fact that the defendant's parents and the sitter had not indicated seeing drugs at the defendant's home. State v. Owens, 285 Ga. App. 370, 646 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

Failure of affiant to sign affidavit. — Since the officers' warrant to search a safe deposit box was based upon a previous warrant that was issued upon an affidavit in which the Georgia officer was the affiant, but the Tennessee officer signed the affidavit, the jewelry should have been suppressed under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, as the affiant did not sign the affidavit. Henry v. State, 277 Ga. App. 302, 626 S.E.2d 511 (2006).

Sufficient address shown. — When a defendant said that an affidavit used to obtain a search warrant for the defendant's apartment did not state the defendant's correct address, the address stated in the affidavit was sufficient because there was no probability that it identified another apartment, particularly since law enforcement agents observing the defendant's apartment were able to establish that the informant had gone to and come from the defendant's apartment immediately before the informant was arrested and was found in possession of a quantity of drugs. Evans v. State, 263 Ga. App. 572, 588 S.E.2d 764 (2003).

Tip from confidential informant (CI) provided sufficient probable cause for a search warrant for defendant's home because the CI, in jail on pending drug charges, gave a statement against penal interest by admitting to buying drugs from the defendant at the defendant's home, and the officer confirmed the location and the ownership of the home, and the officer identified the CI to the magistrate. Elliott v. State, 275 Ga. App. 359, 620 S.E.2d 584 (2005).

Tip from known reliable informant. — Police had a reasonable, articulable suspicion that justified stopping the defendant's truck based on a tip from a known, reliable informant and there was no requirement to provide a basis for predicting specific future behavior of the suspect. Steed v. State, 273 Ga. App. 845, 616 S.E.2d 185 (2005).

Informant observed in controlled buy of drugs. — Search warrant was properly issued after an informant returned from a controlled buy to the prearranged meeting place, handed officers the crack, and said that it was purchased from an unknown black male in the presence of the defendant and two others; even if the informant had no known credibility, the controlled buy conducted under the observation of the officer, alone, established probable cause. Richardson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 429, 626 S.E.2d 518 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to the search warrant although the agent's affidavit in support of the search warrant did not indicate that the confidential informant whose information provided the basis for the affidavit was hoping to receive a sentence reduction for cooperating with police; the warrant was valid under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, as the omission was offset by independent corroboration of the defendant's criminal activity based upon surveillance of events leading up to a controlled buy. Davis v. State, 281 Ga. App. 855, 637 S.E.2d 431 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 151 (Ga. 2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence police officers found at a residence because, under the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate had a substantial basis for concluding that there was a fair probability contraband would be found at the residence; the affidavit for the search warrant revealed that an informant participated in a drug buy using law enforcement funds, and an officer transported the informant to the premises, where the informant made the purchase, and the informant provided the purchased contraband to the officer. Pass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 440, 710 S.E.2d 641 (2011).

Informant's reliability not established and information was not correct. — Trial court erred by denying two separate defendants' motions to suppress after the male defendant's vehicle was stopped based on an informant's tip and the defendant was not committing a crime when stopped, the tip was too vague as to the time of the alleged future drug transaction and the vehicle description, and drugs other than those that the informant had said would be there were found. Baker v. State, 277 Ga. App. 520, 627 S.E.2d 145 (2006).

Search Warrants (Cont'd)2. Informants' Reliability and Affidavits (Cont'd)*Information in affidavit sufficient.

— An affidavit in support of a search warrant was not insufficient because an officer had not told the magistrate about an informant's criminal history and that the informant would be paid $20 if the tip led to an arrest. Nothing indicated that the affidavit contained deliberate falsehoods, that the officer made it with reckless disregard for the truth, or that the officer consciously omitted material information which, if it had been included in the affidavit, would have been indicative of the absence of probable cause; furthermore, the informant's previous work with police, which was set forth in the affidavit, provided a substantial basis for deeming the informant reliable. Zorn v. State, 291 Ga. App. 613, 662 S.E.2d 370 (2008).

Affidavit filed in support of a search warrant of the defendant's home established probable cause because, inter alia, information received from one confidential informant (CI) was corroborated, and an admission against penal interest made by a second CI supported a finding of reliability; further, the affidavit established that a third informant was truly a concerned citizen, and the information provided by the concerned citizen corroborated the information provided by the CIs. Considering the totality of the circumstances and the facts that the concerned citizen had training in recognition and effects of various illegal drugs and had seen, within 72 hours at the premises to be searched, a powder substance said to be drugs that belonged to the defendant, the state established probable cause for the warrant. Price v. State, 297 Ga. App. 501, 677 S.E.2d 683 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence a detective found in the defendant's home because given the totality of the circumstances, the magistrate who issued the search warrant was authorized to conclude that there was a fair probability that contraband would be found at defendant's home; the detective's affidavit in support of the warrant contained ample facts by which the magistrate could independently evaluate the veracity and reliability of anonymous informants and their information, and a confidential informant's controlled buy of marijuana from the defendant at the defendant's residence on the day the detective applied for the warrant independently confirmed that illegal drug activities were taking place at the home. Taylor v. State, 306 Ga. App. 175, 702 S.E.2d 28 (2010).

Even assuming that material evidence was omitted from the affidavit supporting the search warrant, the magistrate nevertheless had probable cause for issuance of the search warrant because the affidavit stated that the defendant had possibly fathered the victim's child, the defendant had a sexual relationship with the victim from the time the victim was 10 years old until the victim was 15 years old, the victim's son was conceived during that time period, and the son's father had not been scientifically identified. Rhodes v. State, 319 Ga. App. 684, 738 S.E.2d 135 (2013).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress the evidence obtained from the appellant's cell phone because although the search warrant affidavit did not specify to whom each of the cell phones belonged, it provided the issuing magistrate with sufficient information to make a practical, common sense decision that there was a fair probability that evidence of the crime would be found on the items to be searched. Smith v. State, 296 Ga. 731, 770 S.E.2d 610 (2015).

3. Probable Cause

Probable cause defined. — Probable cause means reasonable grounds and is that apparent state of facts which seems to exist after reasonable and proper inquiry. Hogan v. State, 140 Ga. App. 716, 231 S.E.2d 802 (1976).

Requirements for probable cause.

— The provisions of U.S. Const., amend. 4 and this paragraph, requiring "no warrant shall issue except upon probable cause ... particularly describing the place, or places to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized" are met "if the description sufficiently permits a prudent officer with a search warrant to be able to locate the person and place definitely and with reasonable certainty.” Cuevas v. State, 151 Ga. App. 605, 260 S.E.2d 737 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 943, 100 S. Ct. 1338, 63 L. Ed. 2d 776 (1980).

Finding of probable cause may rest upon evidence not competent in criminal trial. — While a warrant may issue only upon a finding of probable cause, the term “probable cause” means less than evidence which would justify condemnation, a finding of probable cause may rest upon evidence which is not legally competent in a criminal trial. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Test of probable cause is whether it would justify a man of reasonable caution in believing that an offense has been or is being committed, and this requires merely a probability — less than a certainty but more than a mere suspicion or possibility. Gordon v. State, 150 Ga. App. 862, 258 S.E.2d 664 (1979).

Two-pronged tests for determination of probable cause. — When hearsay, such as an informer’s tip, is relied upon for probable cause, the sworn information placed before the justice of the peace must adequately set forth: (1) the underlying circumstances necessary to enable the magistrate independently to judge the validity of the information; and (2) the informant’s credibility or reliability. Shaner v. State, 153 Ga. App. 694, 266 S.E.2d 338 (1980); Law v. State, 165 Ga. App. 687, 302 S.E.2d 570, aff’d, 251 Ga. 525, 307 S.E.2d 904 (1983).

When the hearsay of an informer is relied upon, an affidavit as to probable cause must meet two tests: (1) the reasons for the informer’s reliability must be furnished; and (2) it must either state how the informer obtained the information or the tip must describe the criminal activity in such detail that the magistrate may know it is more than a casual rumor circulating in the underworld or an accusation based merely on the individual’s general reputation. Maddox v. State, 133 Ga. App. 709, 213 S.E.2d 1 (1975).

Two-pronged test satisfied. — When the affidavit provided the justice of the peace (now magistrate) with the knowledge that the informant had personally observed the defendants in possession of the cocaine and the informant’s reliability was demonstrated within the affidavit by statements that the informant had furnished information in the previous six months leading to the issuance of three felony warrants for possession of illegal drugs and that all information provided by the informant had proven to be true, both prongs of the test for a showing of probable cause based upon an unidentified informant’s tip were met in the affidavit. Law v. State, 165 Ga. App. 687, 302 S.E.2d 570, aff’d, 251 Ga. 525, 307 S.E.2d 904 (1983).

Controlled buy observed by officer.

— Controlled buy conducted under the observation of the officer alone was sufficient to establish probable cause, and there was no evidence that the officer knew, or should have known, that more than one person resided at the residence. Ibekilo v. State, 277 Ga. App. 384, 626 S.E.2d 592 (2006).

Probable cause set forth in affidavit. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant’s suppression motion as the affidavit provided probable cause for the issuance of a search warrant under the totality of the circumstances test since: (1) a controlled buy from the defendant was described; (2) the defendant’s willingness to turn over the cocaine at the defendant’s residence was set forth; and (3) a statement from an individual who was with the defendant at the time of the defendant’s arrest that the defendant had taken the individual to the residence to pick up cocaine was set forth. Johnson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 549, 600 S.E.2d 667 (2004).

Search warrant was based on probable cause because Clayton County investigators had purchased an illegal video poker machine from a subject in Clayton County, who said the machine was obtained from a particular address in DeKalb County, and both DeKalb and Clayton investigators observed “several other illegal video poker machines” at that address; while the investigators could not tell from looking at the machines whether they were legal or not, the test was only whether the evidence established a fair probability that contraband would be found. Jones v.

State, 276 Ga. App. 810, 625 S.E.2d 4 (2005).

In a murder prosecution, an affidavit in support of a search warrant stated that the victim and defendant left a ballpark where they worked in close temporal proximity; that the victim's car was found abandoned at a gas station next to the park; that a man fitting defendant's voice characteristics made two telephone calls claiming to have the victim; that the victim's ring was found near the pay phone from which the second call was made; and that defendant had a history of assaults on females, having abducted a victim and secreted the victim to the defendant's home, gave the magistrate a substantial basis for concluding there was probable cause that evidence pertaining to the victim's disappearance would be found in defendant's home. Hinton v. State, 280 Ga. 811, 631 S.E.2d 365 (2006).

Defendant's suppression motion was properly denied as: (1) the search warrant affidavit outlined the information provided by a New Hampshire detective's investigation, including the fact that the defendant had electronically sent the detective sexually explicit photographs of young boys; (2) the officer's affidavit also included information regarding the New Hampshire detective's extensive background and vast experience in the investigation of child sexual exploitation cases; (3) the New Hampshire detective's investigation provided probable cause to search the defendant's residence wherever that was; (4) the warrant sought sexually explicit photographs and other sexually explicit visual depictions of children, as well as the computer hardware and software used to create, store, and distribute those depictions; and (5) the affidavit contained information based on the New Hampshire detective's contact and electronic correspondence with the defendant indicating the likelihood that defendant's computer files would contain evidence of child sexual exploitation, given that the affidavit stated that those who sexually exploited children often kept sexually explicit photographs and other images in their possession and often stored those images in computer files. Walthall v. State, 281 Ga. App. 434, 636 S.E.2d 126 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence found during the execution of a search warrant as the appellate court found that, after reviewing all of the information in the affidavit as a whole, the affidavit provided sufficient probable cause for the magistrate to issue the search warrant and that the information provided was not stale. The warrant was executed the same day that it was issued and was supported by a law enforcement affidavit reciting a stop made of the defendant's vehicle for a failure to have tags and various drugs and drug-related items found in the vehicle that served as the basis for obtaining the search warrant for the defendant's home. Cleveland v. State, 290 Ga. App. 835, 660 S.E.2d 777 (2008).

Because the information in an affidavit provided the magistrate a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed for issuing the search warrant, a motion to suppress the search warrant would have been futile; accordingly, the defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective. Jarrett v. State, 299 Ga. App. 525, 683 S.E.2d 116 (2009).

Trial court properly found that under the totality of the circumstances the affidavit in support of a search warrant for a residence suspected of being a marijuana "grow house" gave the magistrate a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed because the affidavit set forth the fact that similar investigations and seizures had taken place in several grow houses in the area, the house under surveillance had characteristics similar to those houses, and two men fled from the residence and were apprehended with large amounts of cash; the information from the stop was not excludable as "stale" because there was a substantial basis for believing that the electrical ballasts and light fixtures identified in the search warrant could still be found at the residence and the items were not perishable. Prado v. State, 306 Ga. App. 240, 701 S.E.2d 871 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion under O.C.G.A.

§ 17-5-30 to suppress evidence seized pursuant to search warrants because the applications for search warrants to search the defendant's apartment and the car for which registration information was given in the detective's affidavit contained sufficient information from which a judicial officer could determine there was a fair probability that evidence of a crime would be found at those sites as the sites were likely methods of transporting the victim and the likely destination of appellant and the victim; in the detective's affidavit, the detective related the discovery of the victim's body and the statements of the victim's friend and roommate concerning the victim's relationship with the defendant, and the victim's pregnancy and identification of the defendant as the father, who was not pleased about the pregnancy. Glenn v. State, 288 Ga. 462, 704 S.E.2d 794 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized from a search warrant authorizing entry into the defendant's home because the affidavit submitted in support of the warrant provided a sufficient basis for the magistrate to make a practical, common-sense decision that there was a fair probability that evidence of sexual exploitation of children would be found at the defendant's residence; the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children forwarded the information it received from a security specialist employed by the host of the website to the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI), and the affidavit of a special agent with the GBI set forth facts that showed both the reliability and basis of knowledge of the specialist. James v. State, 312 Ga. App. 130, 717 S.E.2d 713 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0347, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 227 (Ga. 2012).

Evaluation of evidence by magistrate. — Task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical, common-sense decision, whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before the magistrate, including the "veracity" and "basis of knowledge" of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place. State v. Farmer, 177 Ga. App. 18, 338 S.E.2d 489 (1985).

Because the magistrate was presented with a substantial basis for concluding that evidence of child molestation would be found in the cameras and film located in the defendant's car, and such enabled the magistrate to form a sufficient finding of probable cause to support the issuance of a search warrant, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result of the warrant. Manders v. State, 281 Ga. App. 786, 637 S.E.2d 460 (2006).

Because a search warrant affidavit provided the issuing magistrate with sufficient probable cause connecting the defendant to the residence of a female friend for the magistrate to logically conclude that there was a fair probability that evidence of a crime would be found therein, despite the omission of additional evidence by the affiant, an order granting suppression of the evidence seized therein was reversed. State v. Hunter, 282 Ga. 278, 646 S.E.2d 465 (2007).

Showing to be made to magistrate when affidavit is based on information from confidential informant. — When an affidavit for a search warrant is based on information received from a confidential informant, there must be a showing made to the magistrate of: (1) the reliability of the informant; and (2) the underlying facts and circumstances corroborative of the informant's tip. Devier v. State, 247 Ga. 635, 277 S.E.2d 729 (1981).

Quantum of evidence necessary to establish probable cause does not require proof of guilt when the facts and circumstances known to the arresting officer are such as to warrant a man of prudence and caution in believing an offense has been committed. Hood v. State, 122 Ga. App. 547, 178 S.E.2d 44 (1970).

When dealing with probable cause — as the name implies, we deal with probabilities — not certainty, and the quantum of proof necessary to establish probable cause is not that level which is necessary for proof of guilt in a trial. Bradford v. State, 149 Ga. App. 839, 256 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 936, 100 S. Ct. 285, 62 L. Ed. 2d 195 (1979).

Difference between requirements for proving guilt and showing probable cause. — There is a great difference between what is required to prove guilt in a criminal case and what is required to show probable cause for arrest or search. Strauss v. Stynchcombe, 224 Ga. 859, 165 S.E.2d 302 (1968).

Probable cause cannot be made out by affidavits which are purely conclusory. Veasey v. State, 113 Ga. App. 187, 147 S.E.2d 515 (1966).

Speculation, conjecture, or opinion insufficient for warrant. — Whether by recitals in the affidavit or by an independent showing before the magistrate, the facts must be such as to lead a man of prudence and caution to believe that the offense has been committed. Mere speculation, conjecture, or opinion is not enough, nor is mere rumor. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965).

Information supporting finding of probable cause may be presented to magistrate by means of affidavit or by oral testimony. Marshall v. State, 113 Ga. App. 143, 147 S.E.2d 666 (1966).

Information provided by police, arising out of official investigation, may be used to establish probable cause for a search warrant. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Warrant may be based on police officer's knowledge of suspect's reputation. — Officer's knowledge of a suspect's reputation is a practical consideration of everyday life upon which a magistrate may properly rely in issuing a search warrant. Law v. State, 165 Ga. App. 687, 302 S.E.2d 570, aff'd, 251 Ga. 525, 307 S.E.2d 904 (1983).

National Crime Information Center printouts as basis of reasonable belief to establish probable cause. — While National Crime Information Center printouts are not alone sufficient evidence to permit convictions, the cases uniformly recognize that NCIC printouts are reliable enough to form the basis of the reasonable belief which is needed to establish probable cause for arrest. Paxton v. State, 160 Ga. App. 19, 285 S.E.2d 741 (1981).

Determination of probable cause by magistrate. — Determination as to whether there is probable cause is not to be made by one who applies for issuance of the warrant; it must be made by the magistrate from a consideration of the facts submitted under oath. It must exist before the search is made, and cannot be supplied by after-discovered facts. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965), commented on in 17 Mercer L. Rev. 479 (1966).

Affidavit ineffective to provide basis for magistrate's finding of probable cause. — See Poole v. State, 175 Ga. App. 374, 333 S.E.2d 207 (1985).

Reviewing court will give substantial deference to magistrate's finding of probable cause. — When an application for a search warrant has been made by the police to a neutral and detached magistrate, and the magistrate has issued the warrant based on a finding of probable cause, a reviewing court will pay substantial deference to the magistrate's finding. Devier v. State, 247 Ga. 635, 277 S.E.2d 729 (1981).

Facts showing probable cause should be incorporated in affidavit. — While probable cause may be made to appear by a showing under oath before the magistrate when issuance of the warrant is sought, it is the better, even necessary, practice that the facts then made to appear as showing probable cause be incorporated in the affidavit. Johnson v. State, 111 Ga. App. 298, 141 S.E.2d 574 (1965), commented on in 17 Mercer L. Rev. 479 (1966).

Magistrate may consider both affidavit and oral testimony as to probable cause. — Magistrate in considering whether to issue a search warrant may consider both the affidavit and oral testimony as to probable cause. However, in considering a matter other than that contained in the affidavit, such proof must be under oath or affirmation. Maddox v. State, 133 Ga. App. 709, 213 S.E.2d 1 (1975).

Legislative intent that probable cause relate to current information. — Requirement for timely execution of a search warrant under Ga. L. 1966, p. 567, § 6 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-5-25) indicates the legislative intent, as well as constitutional demand, that probable cause relate to current and not stale information. Fowler v. State, 121 Ga. App. 22, 172 S.E.2d 447 (1970).

“Staleness” as it relates to probable cause is measured by the probability that the thing to be seized is located at the place to be searched and it involves the interval between (i) the time when the thing to be seized is indicated by the evidence or information to be at the place to be searched and (ii) the time when the search warrant is issued. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981); Shrader v. State, 159 Ga. App. 522, 284 S.E.2d 37 (1981).

Information provided in the search warrant affidavit by a confidential informant was not stale and did not render the issuance of the warrant unconstitutional under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII; the informant contacted the federal agent a short time after leaving the defendant’s home where the informant had witnessed a sale of drugs by the defendant, and the federal agent had contacted the affiant within 24 hours of the presentation of the affidavit. State v. Donaldson, 281 Ga. App. 51, 635 S.E.2d 345 (2006).

Sufficient probable cause found. — Defendant’s suppression motion was properly denied as a magistrate’s issuance of a search warrant for the defendant’s home was supported by probable cause for purposes of the Fourth Amendment, Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, and O.C.G.A. § 17-5-30 when: (1) witnesses reported seeing the defendant at the victim’s home near the time that the victim disappeared; (2) the farm manager who located the victim’s body told police that the defendant commonly used the farm for hunting; (3) the defendant had a tumultuous relationship with the victim; and (4) the defendant’s mailbox was painted in a similar camouflage as the cattle trough in which the victim was found; as the warrant for the house was proper, the warrant for the defendant’s truck was not fruit of the poisonous tree. Fortson v. State, 277 Ga. 164, 587 S.E.2d 39 (2003).

Trial court properly denied a motion to suppress evidence seized upon execution of a search warrant of a residence, whereupon various sexual materials and a computer, containing pornographic photographs of the defendant with a child victim, were obtained and admitted in trial on multiple sexual offenses, as the warrant was based on probable cause and described with sufficient particularity the location of the premises and the items to be seized. Daniels v. State, 278 Ga. App. 332, 629 S.E.2d 36 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant’s motion to suppress evidence seized pursuant to a warrant, in a prosecution filed against the defendant for various sex crimes, when despite alleging specific ages, given the totality of the circumstances, the affidavit sought information of sexual activity involving minor children and was predicated on information provided by a parent involving sexual activity between defendant and the parent’s daughter, the victim. Phillips v. State, 283 Ga. App. 319, 641 S.E.2d 294 (2007).

A magistrate had probable cause to issue a search warrant for a defendant’s car the day after the victim was kidnapped and murdered; there was a fair probability that evidence of the crimes would be found in the car, which the defendant had parked in the victim’s driveway. Dalton v. State, 282 Ga. 300, 647 S.E.2d 580 (2007).

A trial court did not err by limiting the admissibility of admissible items in a defendant’s felony murder trial to those items seized incident to the defendant’s arrest in the early morning hours and in plain view during the processing of the crime scene as an approximately 15-minute video recording of the premises, which was viewed by the trial court, supported the officers’ testimony that guns, shell casings, significant amounts of cash, and items appearing to be crack cocaine were all in plain view and, under the circumstances, presented probable cause as being contraband or evidence of the crime of the felony murder of an officer. Fair v. State, 284 Ga. 165, 664 S.E.2d 227 (2008).

Because the application for a search warrant established that the victim lived in a residence at a specific address, that defendant lived in the basement apartment located in the residence, that defendant had severely beaten the victim, and that there was a fair probability that evidence of the crime could be found either in defendant's apartment or in the victim's part of the residence, probable cause existed to search defendant's basement apartment and the victim's part of the residence; accordingly, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress the evidence found in the apartment. Fletcher v. State, 284 Ga. 653, 670 S.E.2d 411 (2008).

Search warrant was properly issued based on information from a caller to social services that methamphetamine was being made in the defendant's home in the presence of a six-year-old and on information from an officer that the defendant had been investigated for the drug, that the defendant had a reputation of dealing, using, and making methamphetamine, and that numerous tips about the defendant's manufacturing methamphetamine had been received. Moreover, the information was not stale as the information received from multiple sources indicated a long-term involvement in the manufacture of the drug and therefore a likelihood that the equipment for the drug's production would remain in place over time. Chambliss v. State, 298 Ga. App. 293, 679 S.E.2d 831 (2009).

Insufficient probable cause found. — Because: (1) the state conceded that its informant was not reliable, as the informant never previously provided information to its investigator; and (2) the police failed to independently investigate and corroborate the information provided to them by that informant in support of a search warrant affidavit, the magistrate lacked a substantial basis for determining that probable cause existed to search the defendant's home; thus, the evidence seized as a result should have been suppressed. St. Fleur v. State, 286 Ga. App. 564, 649 S.E.2d 817 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the DNA evidence obtained pursuant to a search warrant, as the warrant, given the totality of the circumstances, was based upon sufficient fingerprint evidence which provided an accurate foundation for identifying the defendant as a suspect in all four crimes. Carruth v. State, 286 Ga. App. 431, 649 S.E.2d 557 (2007).

Because the evidence gathered while the defendant's residence was under surveillance, including the contents of the defendant's garbage as well as an officer's specific testimony regarding marijuana residue found on a piece of plastic wrap, supported a finding of probable cause necessary to justify the issuance of a search warrant for the defendant's residence, suppression of the evidence seized as a result of the execution of the search warrant was improper. State v. Davis, 288 Ga. App. 164, 653 S.E.2d 311 (2007).

Improper use of fact that contraband was found to justify search. — Since a trial court found probable cause for a vehicle search based, in part, on the discovery of contraband in the vehicle, and it was unclear whether the trial court would have reached the same result absent this factor, the trial court's order denying the defendant's motion to suppress in this regard was improper. Quick v. State, 279 Ga. App. 835, 632 S.E.2d 742 (2006).

Victim's identification. — Victim's identification of the defendant as the robber, corroborated by other witnesses, was sufficient to provide probable cause for a search warrant; because it was proper for the witnesses to identify the defendant from a videotape, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motions to suppress and in limine. Bradford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 659, 618 S.E.2d 709 (2005).

Compelled testing after defendant's invocation of right to refuse under implied consent law. — Defendant's conviction was properly reversed as the police improperly threatened to obtain blood and urine for testing through a catheter, after defendant invoked defendant's right under the implied consent law to refuse to the testing. State v. Collier, 279 Ga. 316, 612 S.E.2d 281 (2005).

4. Exceptions to Warrant Requirement

"Probable cause" same for warrantless search as for issuance of warrant.

— "Probable cause" requirements for a search without a warrant are the same requirements necessary for the issuance of a warrant by a magistrate and the court must look to the parameters of police knowledge at the time the search occurred to determine if that knowledge was such as would justify a man of reasonable caution in believing that an offense has been or is being committed. Bogan v. State, 165 Ga. App. 851, 303 S.E.2d 48 (1983).

Search without warrant but incident to lawful arrest may be lawful. Black v. State, 119 Ga. App. 855, 168 S.E.2d 916 (1969).

Search incident to arrest. — Search of a vehicle was authorized as a search incident to a lawful arrest as it was reasonable for the officers to believe that the vehicle possibly contained evidence of the crime under investigation, in that the officers saw the defendant and another individual, for whom the officers had an arrest warrant, driving in a vehicle similar to the one seen leaving a crime scene, and the officers saw clothing on the backseat matching the description of the clothing worn by the two gunmen at the time of the crime. Williams v. State, 316 Ga. App. 821, 730 S.E.2d 541 (2012).

When defendant was handcuffed to ensure the officers' safety after a pistol-like device was found and the handcuffs were removed before the agent spoke with defendant, defendant's statement to the agent that defendant had used drugs that evening gave the agent probable cause for defendant's arrest; defendant was then searched incident to a lawful arrest. Bond v. State, 271 Ga. App. 849, 610 S.E.2d 609 (2005).

Scope of permissible warrantless searches. — An officer at the time of a lawful custodial arrest may, without a warrant, make a full search of the person of the accused, a limited area within the control of the person arrested, and of an automobile in the person's possession at the scene of the arrest for the discovery and preservation of criminal evidence. Williams v. State, 150 Ga. App. 852, 258 S.E.2d 659 (1979); Stoker v. State, 153 Ga. App. 871, 267 S.E.2d 295 (1980).

It is reasonable for officer to search area surrounding arrest area into which suspect might reach to obtain weapon. Banks v. State, 246 Ga. 178, 269 S.E.2d 450 (1980).

"Plain view" doctrine permits warrantless search and seizure. — The "plain view" doctrine will support a warrantless search and seizure if the agents are lawfully in position to obtain the view, the discovery is inadvertent, and the object viewed is immediately seen to be incriminating. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116, rehearing denied, 444 U.S. 975, 100 S. Ct. 472, 62 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1979).

When the initial intrusion that brings the police within "plain view" of an article is supported not by a warrant but by one of the recognized exceptions to the warrant requirement, the seizure is also legitimate. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116, rehearing denied, 444 U.S. 975, 100 S. Ct. 472, 62 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1979).

For the "plain view" exception to the warrant requirement to be invoked, the sighting of things not specified in the warrant must have been "inadvertent." Lockhart v. State, 166 Ga. App. 555, 305 S.E.2d 22 (1983).

"Plain view" exception to the requirement for a search warrant applied since no one answered the officer's knock at the front door and the officer discovered marijuana plants and other items when the officer walked around toward the back to make certain no one was home. Galbreath v. State, 213 Ga. App. 80, 443 S.E.2d 664 (1994).

"Plain view" doctrine authorizes seizure of illegal or evidentiary items visible to a police officer only if the officer's access to the object itself has some prior Fourth Amendment justification. State v. David, 269 Ga. 533, 501 S.E.2d 494 (1998).

After receiving a report from the victim of a property damage incident describing the defendant's truck as involved in that incident, police had a right to approach the defendant's house to investigate; police were also authorized to walk around to the back of the defendant's house where they saw a truck fitting the victim's description in plain view in a partially open shelter; no warrant was needed for the officers to take photos of the defendant's truck. Phillips v. State, 279 Ga. App. 243, 630 S.E.2d 844 (2006).

4. Exceptions to Warrant Requirement (Cont'd)

Because the police were authorized to seize marijuana found in plain view, seen through the window of an apartment where they were executing an arrest warrant on another individual, once the defendant answered a knock on the apartment door, police also had the right to search incident to the defendant's arrest for possession of marijuana and based on the exigency of the circumstances; hence, the trial court erred in granting a motion to suppress the marijuana without explaining its interpretation of the evidence or ruling on the credibility of the witnesses. State v. Venzen, 286 Ga. App. 597, 649 S.E.2d 851 (2007).

When a deputy serving an arrest warrant on a probationer had reason to believe from the warrant that the probationer resided at the address given, the officer had the limited authority to enter the home to search for the probationer after the defendant, who answered the door, said that the probationer had moved. Once inside, the officer had the authority to seize marijuana that was in plain view. Wall v. State, 291 Ga. App. 278, 661 S.E.2d 656 (2008).

Marijuana contained in operating, closed refrigerator was not in "plain view" of a police officer. State v. Gallup, 236 Ga. App. 321, 512 S.E.2d 66 (1999).

Fear evidence will be destroyed sufficient for warrantless search. — When testimony presented at the motion to suppress hearing supported the conclusion that the officers feared that evidence would be destroyed if their actions were delayed in order to obtain a warrant, such evidence supported the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to suppress premised on the assertion that the police conducted an illegal warrantless search of the defendant's house. Bogan v. State, 165 Ga. App. 851, 303 S.E.2d 48 (1983).

After an officer observed contraband in an apartment from the outside, and saw one of the occupants attempt to conceal it, the officer's warrantless intrusion into the apartment was justified by the exigent circumstance that the contraband was in danger of immediate destruction. State v. David, 269 Ga. 533, 501 S.E.2d 494 (1998).

Exigent circumstances justified the officers' warrantless entry of a residence to prevent the destruction of evidence since the police initially came to the home to execute an arrest warrant for a third party, the defendant answered the door, and told the officers that the third party did not live there, and, when the officers asked for consent to search for the third party, defendant did not answer and walked away from the officers, went to the mantle, picked up a plastic bag that appeared to contain crack cocaine, and threw it into a fire burning in the fireplace, and the officers then entered the home and removed the plastic bag from the fire to prevent the destruction of evidence. Simmons v. State, 278 Ga. App. 7, 627 S.E.2d 928 (2006).

Denial of a defendant's suppression motion was proper as the police officers were authorized to immediately enter a residence, without announcing their presence as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-5-27, as the occupants fled upon seeing the police, into a residence where the police had recently conducted controlled drug buys and the officers had a reasonable belief that the fleeing occupants might retrieve weapons or destroy evidence; once legally inside the residence, the police were authorized to execute a search warrant that led to the discovery of the defendant's involvement in the drug sales. Further, suppression of evidence was not a constitutionally-required remedy for an improper entry pursuant to an otherwise valid search warrant. Jackson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 716, 634 S.E.2d 846 (2006).

No amount of probable cause can justify warrantless search or seizure absent exigent circumstances. Bunn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 270, 265 S.E.2d 88 (1980); Bogan v. State, 165 Ga. App. 851, 303 S.E.2d 48 (1983).

Because no exigency existed to justify a search after the defendant was handcuffed and placed under the watchful eye of a police officer, and even assuming that the defendant was under arrest while being detained in the kitchen, a search of the defendant's bedroom which yielded a shotgun, found under the bed in the bedroom, a box of unspent shotgun shells, and some loose unspent shotgun shells, was not one incident to the arrest; thus, the defendant's possession of a firearm while a convicted felon conviction was reversed, and the case was remanded for a new trial in which the illegally-obtained evidence could not be introduced. Hicks v. State, 287 Ga. App. 105, 650 S.E.2d 767 (2007).

Warrantless search of refrigerator not justified. — When a police officer opened the door of an operating, closed refrigerator in a storage unit, after having been called to investigate vandalism and possible burglary, these circumstances did not rise to the level of emergency involving immediate threats to life or limb, and the warrantless search of the refrigerator was not justified. State v. Gallup, 236 Ga. App. 321, 512 S.E.2d 66 (1999).

Circumstances under which detentions made without probable cause have been approved. — When investigatory detentions made without probable cause have been approved, the police have had some reason to suspect that criminal activity had either taken place, was in progress, or was about to take place at the time of the detention. Brooks v. State, 144 Ga. App. 97, 240 S.E.2d 593 (1977).

Officers had sufficient articulable suspicion to authorize an investigatory detention of a drug suspect after a known, reliable informant had arrived in person at the police station with the suspect's name, a description of the suspect's operative locale, and recent observation of activities within the previous 24 hours. Burse v. State, 209 Ga. App. 276, 433 S.E.2d 386 (1993).

Since a police officer believed in good faith that the defendant had committed the crime of disorderly conduct, the stop of the defendant's vehicle was justified, in that it was based on a reasonable suspicion of wrongdoing, even though it was later determined that the defendant had not, in fact, committed the crime of disorderly conduct. Turner v. State, 274 Ga. App. 731, 618 S.E.2d 607 (2005).

Tip by unknown informant justified investigatory stop. — Defendant was not entitled to suppression of the evidence seized by a police officer making an investigatory stop, as the information provided to the officer by a reliable and anonymous tip contained explicit details of the defendant's travel itinerary, which was not known by the general public. Daniels v. State, 278 Ga. App. 263, 628 S.E.2d 684 (2006).

Distinction made between warrantless search of car and house. — A distinction has long been drawn between a warrantless search of an automobile as opposed to a house or other structure due to the mobility of the car. Whitlock v. State, 124 Ga. App. 599, 185 S.E.2d 90 (1971).

Wherein an individual commits an offense in his or her home and that offense is committed in the presence of a law enforcement officer, the officer is authorized to arrest the individual in the home without a warrant only if the officer's entry into the home is by consent or if there are exigent circumstances. Carranza v. State, 266 Ga. 263, 467 S.E.2d 315 (1996).

Warrantless search inside apartment improper. — Defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized by a police officer who entered an apartment without a warrant was properly granted because a residential alarm call did not create exigent circumstances justifying the entry since the officer had no reasonable belief that an emergency situation existed given the officer's delay in reaching the apartment, the officer's decision to allow a parent and two children to enter the apartment, and the lack of any signs of distress once the officer reached the residence. State v. Merit, 262 Ga. App. 687, 586 S.E.2d 393 (2003).

Circumstances under which probable cause would exist for warrantless search of residence. — Trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized during a warrantless search of the defendant's residence was proper as the defendant was a supplier in a drug deal that was observed by drug enforcement agents, the defendant was being followed to defendant's residence when the drug dealer and another were stopped and one of them escaped, and a man on the defendant's driveway was seen talking on a cell phone; the officers properly secured the residence in order to avoid possible destruction of evidence or the arming or fleeing of occupants, as the cell phone call could have been a warning that the investigators were aware of the drug transaction. Alvarado v. State, 271 Ga. App. 714, 610 S.E.2d 675 (2005).

Search warrants not required in noncriminal inventory searches. — In circumstances involving noncriminal inventory searches, when probable cause to search is irrelevant, search warrants are not required, linked as the warrant requirement textually is to the probable cause concept. Garner v. State, 154 Ga. App. 839, 269 S.E.2d 912 (1980).

Warrant not required to conduct search of prisoner's room. — No one can rationally doubt that search of prisoner's rooms represent an appropriate security measure and neither the district court nor the Court of Appeals prohibited such searches, and even the most zealous advocate of prisoner's rights would not suggest that a warrant is required to conduct such a search. Riden v. State, 151 Ga. App. 654, 261 S.E.2d 409 (1979).

Hotel personnel authorized to open items found on their premises. — It is not an unauthorized search for hotel management personnel, including security personnel, to open unlocked items found on their premises in an attempt to determine ownership so that the lost or misplaced property can be returned to its proper owner. Berger v. State, 150 Ga. App. 166, 257 S.E.2d 8 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 927, 100 S. Ct. 1312, 63 L. Ed. 2d 759 (1980).

Open fields. — Special protection against unlawful search and seizure in one's home, pursuant to U.S. Const., amend. 4 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, extended to the curtilage of defendant's home but not into the open fields; accordingly, where police officers were in an unoccupied, undeveloped densely wooded/swamp area on defendant's property, it was part of the open fields and they had a right to be there and evidence observed thereon was not subject to suppression for constitutional violations. State v. Clark, 263 Ga. App. 480, 588 S.E.2d 254 (2003).

Defendant had no expectation of privacy in an area behind the defendant's house where marijuana plants grew because the area was separated by trails leading away from the defendant's mowed lawn, the plants were not growing inside any structure nor were they protected from view, and many of the plants were protected by mesh wire; the warrantless seizure of the plants did not violate the Fourth Amendment. Smithson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 421, 634 S.E.2d 184 (2006).

Serving of arrest warrant and looking into open door of shed. — Defendant's drug convictions were appropriate because the brother lived with the defendant and would be present in the home when the officers returned to serve the arrest warrant. Thus, the trial court did not err when the court concluded that the police were authorized to enter the back yard of the premises and look into the open door of the shed. Carter v. State, 308 Ga. App. 686, 708 S.E.2d 595 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1141, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 573 (Ga. 2011).

Exigent circumstances found. — Given the existence of exigent circumstances, law enforcement officers were justified in searching the defendant's home without a warrant in order to determine if a child was present and in need of medical attention or in danger of imminent harm; as a result, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress evidence seized as a result of that search. Richards v. State, 286 Ga. App. 580, 649 S.E.2d 747 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 702 (Ga. 2007).

A warrantless entry of the house owned by the defendant's stepparent was justified by exigent circumstances, given that a violent felony, from which the suspect fled on an orange bicycle, had occurred nearby just minutes before and that a person matching the suspect's description and riding an orange bicycle had just entered the stepparent's house. Thomas v. State, 290 Ga. App. 10, 658 S.E.2d 796 (2008).

Exigent circumstances issue not addressed. — Defendant's suppression motion was properly granted since: (1) an officer executing an arrest warrant for a third person had unreasonably looked through the defendants' window, discovering the defendants using marijuana; (2) the officers did not identify themselves as police officers when the officers knocked at the defendants' door; (3) defendants hid the marijuana before opening the door; (4) the police confronted the defendants about the marijuana after the police determined that the third person was not in the house; and (5) the appellate court could not conclude, as a matter of law, that there were exigent circumstances justifying the warrantless seizure of the drugs, in that the drugs were in danger of being destroyed, simply because the defendants hid the drugs before opening the door. State v. Schwartz, 261 Ga. App. 742, 583 S.E.2d 573 (2003).

In a criminal case wherein the defendant was convicted on eight counts of cruelty to animals, an officer's initial plain view observations from a driveway and road of uncared for and sickly animals did not authorize the officer to make a warrantless entry into the defendant's backyard; since consent was not given by the defendant, the case required remand as the trial court never addressed whether exigent circumstances existed to justify the warrantless search, which the trial court should have addressed when it denied the defendant's motion to suppress and motion in limine. Morgan v. State, 285 Ga. App. 254, 645 S.E.2d 745 (2007).

Improper Terry stop. — Defendant was subjected to an improper Terry stop when defendant was stopped and ordered to exit the vehicle as the police did not have specific articulable facts sufficient to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was engaged in criminal conduct since the defendant was not a subject of a search warrant the officers were executing, the defendant had not committed any traffic violations, and the defendant's vehicle was not within the curtilage of the home subject to the search warrant. Reynolds v. State, 280 Ga. App. 712, 634 S.E.2d 842 (2006).

Hot pursuit. — Since the evidence was sufficient to support the trial court's conclusion that the officers had probable cause to arrest the codefendant, that police were in hot pursuit of the codefendant who fled upon seeing the officers, and that the officers reasonably believed that the codefendant fled to the apartment shared by the defendant and the codefendant to escape the officers and avoid arrest, exigent circumstances supported the officers' warrantless entry of the apartment, where contraband was in plain view, and no taint attached to the search warrant for the complete search of the apartment and the seizure of the additional evidence which followed. Ahmed v. State, 322 Ga. App. 154, 744 S.E.2d 345 (2013).

Seizure of farm animals was justified when officials, entering the property to investigate a report that deprived animals were observed from the highway, immediately observed additional, clearly deprived animals in need of immediate care in plain view. Sirmans v. State, 244 Ga. App. 252, 534 S.E.2d 862 (2000), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 831, 122 S. Ct. 76, 151 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2001).

Reasonable suspicion not established. — Trial court erred in denying defendant's motion to suppress as the officer simply did not have reasonable suspicion that the defendant was engaged in or about to be engaged in a violation of the law. When the officer found the defendant sleeping in a car in the parking lot of a funeral home, with the permission of the funeral home's owner, the officer did not see or smell any illegal substances; the officer did not question the defendant regarding the defendant's appearance or demeanor; the officer did not determine if the defendant had consumed alcohol; and the officer did not perform any field tests to determine if the defendant was under the influence of anything. Martin v. State, 316 Ga. App. 220, 729 S.E.2d 437 (2012).

a. Applied to Vehicles

Search of passenger compartment. — Once passenger was placed under arrest, the officer could lawfully search the entire passenger compartment of the defendant's vehicle as a search incident to arrest. Tutu v. State, 252 Ga. App. 12, 555 S.E.2d 241 (2001).

Reasonable suspicion to stop car. — As a reliable confidential informant (CI) told police that the defendant would be driving one of three vehicles to a subdivision to deliver cocaine, and an officer saw the defendant and a car, both of which matched CI's description, in that subdivision, the officer had reasonable suspicion to stop the car. After a drug dog alerted to the car's passenger door, and the officer saw a digital scale of the type used to weigh drugs in plain view on the car's seat, the officer had probable cause to search the car; thus, cocaine found during the search was admissible. Alford v. State, 293 Ga. App. 512, 667 S.E.2d 680 (2008).

Plain view of drugs inside car. — Trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress evidence an officer seized from the defendant's vehicle because the suspected contraband was in plain view from outside the vehicle, and once the officer smelled the odor of marijuana on the recovered item, the officer had even stronger grounds to search the vehicle; because the officer saw the item before returning the defendant's license or issuing the ticket, the officer was not exceeding the scope of the initial traffic stop by seizing the object. Arnold v. State, 315 Ga. App. 798, 728 S.E.2d 317 (2012).

Smell of marijuana. — A trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to suppress the evidence of drugs and a handgun found during the warrantless search of the defendant's vehicle as the arrest of the defendant's passenger on an outstanding warrant authorized the stop of the defendant's vehicle and the mobility of the car, coupled with the existence of probable cause to believe the car contained marijuana, based on the officer smelling the marijuana upon approaching the vehicle, authorized the search. Somesso v. State, 288 Ga. App. 291, 653 S.E.2d 855 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 281 (Ga. 2008).

Circumstances under which probable cause would exist for warrantless search of vehicle. — Probable cause would exist for the warrantless search of a vehicle only if the facts and circumstances would cause a reasonably prudent person to believe that contraband was present in the vehicle. Barlow v. State, 148 Ga. App. 717, 252 S.E.2d 214 (1979).

Officer's continued detention of a driver and defendant after issuing the driver a speeding ticket was lawful as the driver's nervousness, claimed ignorance of a destination and the passenger's identity, furtive conduct, and the absence of an authorized driver under an auto rental agreement, taken together, gave the officer a reasonable, articulable suspicion of criminal activity based on more than a mere hunch. State v. Whitt, 277 Ga. App. 49, 625 S.E.2d 418 (2005).

Evidence in the record supported the denial of a motion to suppress as officers testified regarding their observations, surveillance techniques, experience with drug sales, and the general modes of operation of persons involved in drug sales, the officers were authorized to stop defendant's vehicle as one involved in a drug sale, acting in concert with another vehicle as counter-surveillance and showing an obvious interest in the endeavor; further, because the detention lasted at most, fifteen minutes, such was not unreasonable and did not amount to an impermissible seizure. Hickman v. State, 279 Ga. App. 558, 631 S.E.2d 778 (2006).

Despite the defendant's claim that an officer's detention was illegal and, thus, any statement uttered while detained should have been suppressed, suppression of the defendant's statement was properly denied, given that: (1) the officer encountered the defendant after responding to a 9-1-1 call reporting a crime at a specific location; and (2) the officer's personal observations, when coupled with the defendant's admission as to being drunk and driving a car onto the curb, as the 9-1-1 dispatcher had stated, supplied the officer with probable cause to arrest the defendant. Moore v. State, 281 Ga. App. 141, 635 S.E.2d 408 (2006).

Because law enforcement had the authority to conduct a warrantless search of the defendant's automobile based upon information supplied to them from a reliable, honest, and law-abiding informant, which was independently confirmed by officers investigating the tip, the trial court did not err when the court denied a motion to suppress the evidence seized in the defendant's car. Fleming v. State, 281 Ga. App. 207, 635 S.E.2d 823 (2006).

Circumstances short of probable cause for arrest may justify stopping of pedestrian or motorist for limited questioning. State v. Thomason, 153 Ga. App. 345, 265 S.E.2d 312 (1980), overruled on other grounds, State v. Stille, 261 Ga. App. 868, 584 S.E.2d 9 (2003).

When an officer saw the defendant traveling at 30 miles per hour below the posted speed limit, and saw the defendant weaving within the defendant's own lane, while this conduct was not illegal, it provided the officer with a reasonable, articulable suspicion that the defendant was violating the laws prohibiting driving under the influence of alcohol, so the officer properly initiated an investigatory stop of the defendant's vehicle. Veal v. State, 273 Ga. App. 47, 614 S.E.2d 143 (2005).

It is well established that weaving, both out of one's lane and within one's own lane, particularly when combined with other factors, may give rise to a reasonable articulable suspicion on the part of a trained law enforcement officer that the driver is violating the driving under the influence laws, and the conduct forming the basis of the reasonable suspicion need not be a violation of the law. Veal v. State, 273 Ga. App. 47, 614 S.E.2d 143 (2005).

Officer had a reasonable suspicion that the occupants of a car stopped at 3:40 A.M. were, or were about to be, engaged in criminal activity at a closed store, and that the oddly circuitous route to a motel taken by the car was an attempt by the driver to evade the officer. Rolfe v. State, 278 Ga. App. 605, 630 S.E.2d 438 (2006).

Officers' initial approach of defendant's vehicle and request for consent to search were warranted, even without an articulable suspicion of criminal activity at the time of their approach; moreover, even if a reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity had been required to briefly detain the defendant, the officers had such suspicion upon seeing: (1) individuals approach the defendant's car in an area known for drug activity; (2) the individuals turn and walk away upon seeing the police; and (3) the defendant's passenger swallowing what appeared to be a crack rock as the police approached. Sego v. State, 279 Ga. App. 484, 631 S.E.2d 505 (2006).

Because the defendant was witnessed crossing the white traffic line on two occasions, the stop of the defendant's vehicle was valid under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII; the defendant's weaving without reason into nearby lanes violated O.C.G.A. § 40-6-48(1) and justified the stop, and the officer's actual motive in stopping the defendant was inconsequential. Rayo-Leon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 74, 635 S.E.2d 368 (2006).

Traffic stop by a sheriff's deputy was not unreasonably prolonged without a reasonable articulable suspicion of criminal activity based on evidence that: (1) a rental agreement in the defendant's possession had, in fact, expired; (2) the officer was justified in calling for the drug dog because the officer did not know whether the car was stolen and because the defendant was nervous, backed toward the car when the defendant declined consent to search, and had confessed to an open container violation; and (3) the trial court properly credited testimony from the dog's handler that the dog alerted when the dog showed interest in the passenger door, although the dog's response was not an active alert; thus, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's argument that a motion to suppress should have been granted due to an unreasonably prolonged traffic stop which was not based on a reasonable suspicion of criminal activity. Tanner v. State, 281 Ga. App. 101, 635 S.E.2d 388 (2006).

Constitutional protection against search and seizure of car lost by fleeing defendant. — When a fleeing defendant, pursued by the police, abandoned the defendant's car on a public street and started running, the defendant lost the defendant's constitutional protection against the search and seizure of the defendant's car. Whitlock v. State, 124 Ga. App. 599, 185 S.E.2d 90 (1971).

Search of vehicle is proper for purpose of obtaining evidence of the basis of a suspect's intoxication. Stoker v. State, 153 Ga. App. 871, 267 S.E.2d 295 (1980).

When a person is lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of any substance, the officer may conduct a warrantless search of the passenger compartment of the vehicle for the purpose of obtaining evidence of intoxication as an incident to that lawful arrest. Knox v. State, 216 Ga. App. 90, 453 S.E.2d 120 (1995).

Stop of vehicle justified by officer's observations. — A trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress drug evidence because the stop of defendant's vehicle was justified based on the police having observed defendant at a residence under surveillance for suspected drug activity: (1) defendant went in and out of the residence under surveillance in under five minutes; (2) defendant had a drug seller as a passenger in defendant's vehicle; and (3) defendant drove to the passenger's residence. The stop was a second-tier encounter that required reasonable suspicion, and the collective knowledge of the officers involved, based on the officers' observations, justified defendant's stop. Satterfield v. State, 289 Ga. App. 886, 658 S.E.2d 379 (2008).

Trial court did not err by denying a motion to suppress because the evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that a police officer, who responded to a report of a fight in a parking lot, had an articulable suspicion to stop the defendant when the officer saw the defendant driving fast from the parking lot, and investigate further the defendant's connection to the reported fight. Hines v. State, 308 Ga. App. 299, 707 S.E.2d 534 (2011).

Search of vehicle justified by officer's observations. — Search of a van was lawful under the independent basis of the automobile exception to the warrant requirement since the objective facts known to the deputy after the deputy lawfully stopped the van, including needle marks on the occupants' arms, drug paraphernalia, and evidence of drug usage on the floor of the front seat, gave the deputy probable cause to believe that the van contained contraband. Autry v. State, 277 Ga. App. 305, 626 S.E.2d 528 (2006).

Officers' initial approach to a car occupied by the defendant as a passenger was a first-tier encounter which did not invoke the Fourth Amendment; after that approach, an officer saw, in plain view in the car, bags, a scale, and a pill bottle, known as items used for drug sales, which authorized a pat-down of the defendant, uncovering a drug pipe, and which validated the driver's consent to search the car, yielding drugs. Chapman v. State, 279 Ga. App. 200, 630 S.E.2d 810 (2006).

When an officer stopped the defendant's car in the belief that the defendant was violating a noise ordinance, saw in plain view what appeared to be illegally recorded material, and placed the defendant under arrest for violating O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60, the subsequent search of the car was legal, based on the justified traffic stop and the plain view doctrine, which gave the officer probable cause to arrest the defendant for illegally reproducing recorded materials, to seize the viewed contraband, and to search the vehicle for contraband. Hayward-El v. State, 284 Ga. App. 125, 643 S.E.2d 242 (2007).

When an officer arrested the defendant for violating O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60 and later obtained permission from the defendant's spouse to search the couple's house and saw what appeared to be illegal recordings in plain view in the defendant's parked car, the subsequent search of the car, to which the spouse consented, was legal. Hayward-El v. State, 284 Ga. App. 125, 643 S.E.2d 242 (2007).

Trial court properly denied suppression of drug evidence obtained from a search of the defendant's person after a police officer conducted an investigatory stop of the defendant's vehicle and noted a strong odor of marijuana as the officer stopped the vehicle based on a reasonable suspicion that the defendant was violating O.C.G.A. § 40-6-14(a) by the loud music emanating from the defendant's vehicle while parked in a convenience store parking lot pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 40-6-3(a)(2). Jackson v. State, 297 Ga. App. 615, 677 S.E.2d 782 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1461, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 409 (Ga. 2009).

Defendant failed to establish that trial counsel's failure to timely file a motion to suppress evidence a police officer seized from the defendant's vehicle prejudiced the case because the warrantless search of the vehicle was lawful under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement; the objective facts known to the officer after the car was lawfully stopped gave the officer probable cause to believe that the car contained contraband, and those facts included the smell of marijuana in the car, flakes of what the officer suspected to be marijuana on the floorboards of the car, and the defendant's visible agitation during the traffic stop. Brown v. State, 311 Ga. App. 405, 715 S.E.2d 802 (2011).

Drug-sniffing dog. — During an investigative detention, the bringing of a drug dog to the scene was proper, and when the drug dog alerted to the vehicle as containing drugs, the subsequent warrantless search of the vehicle was justified. Bowden v. State, 279 Ga. App. 173, 630 S.E.2d 792 (2006).

Counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to file a motion to suppress marijuana and identification found in an idling car, as the search did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII; it was proper for a drug sniffing dog to walk around the outside of defendant's vehicle, a location in which police and the dog were permitted to be, and to alert to the presence of drugs. Jackson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 83, 635 S.E.2d 372 (2006).

Search of vehicle not justified. — Suppression motion was properly granted after the vehicle that the defendant and others were riding in was stopped on school property on suspicion of truancy and the search based on the finding that one occupant possessed marijuana and that the defendant had lied about the location of another vehicle; the stop of the vehicle was tenuous at best, the search of the occupants was even more tenuous, and any consent given by the defendant to search the other vehicle was a direct product of the illegality of the stop and the taint thereof was not sufficiently attenuated. State v. Scott, 279 Ga. App. 52, 630 S.E.2d 563 (2006).

Officer approaching stopped vehicle. — Motion to suppress evidence seized from the defendant's car was properly denied because a uniformed officer's initial approach to the car, which had been driven to the scene of a controlled drug buy by a codefendant, was a first-tier police-citizen encounter, the car was already stopped when the uniformed officer approached and asked the codefendant for identification, the codefendant admitted that the codefendant had no driver's license or other identification, and thus the officer had reasonable suspicion that the codefendant was violating the law by driving without a license and was justified in detaining the codefendant from driving off in the vehicle. Bowden v. State, 279 Ga. App. 173, 630 S.E.2d 792 (2006).

Search of vehicle not justified by generalized suspicion. — Police officer's stop of the defendant's vehicle based on the officer's generalized suspicion that any vehicle on that particular road late at night was involved in illicit activity did not meet the standard for an investigative stop. Lyttle v. State, 279 Ga. App. 659, 632 S.E.2d 394 (2006).

b. Applied to People

Pat-down permitted. — Officer's pat-down of defendant, during which the officer seized credit cards from defendant's person, was lawful as defendant had been seen in a stolen car, had previously fled police, knew the officer was investigating a crime, put defendant's hands in defendant's pockets, the officer knew defendant had lied about two items in defendant's pockets that could be used as weapons, and the objects the officer felt in defendant's pocket were ones that, in the officer's experience, had been known to have been fashioned into weapons by attaching razor blades to them. Mohamed v. State, 276 Ga. 706, 583 S.E.2d 9 (2003).

During the execution of a search warrant at a residence where defendant was visiting, the sheriff's deputy felt what appeared to be marijuana in a plastic bag while searching defendant for weapons which search was permissible under the "plain feel" doctrine; thus, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion to suppress. Kinder v. State, 269 Ga. App. 99, 603 S.E.2d 496 (2004).

Brief investigative stop and pat-down search of defendant was justified by a reasonable and articulable suspicion that defendant was attempting to commit a crime when, while on patrol because of a rash of vehicle break-ins in the area of certain parking lots, an officer observed defendant looking into a parked car and defendant gave conflicting stories about where defendant was coming from. Woods v. State, 275 Ga. App. 340, 620 S.E.2d 609 (2005).

Since officers knew that the defendant was armed and considered dangerous, since the officers learned that the defendant had a machete and knives on the defendant's person, and since the defendant was nervous and moving around during an officer's pat down search, the officers did not exceed the permissible scope of the pat down search by opening a box found on defendant's person during the pat down search. Vaughan v. State, 279 Ga. App. 485, 631 S.E.2d 497 (2006).

Pat-down for safety reasons was proper after the defendant arrived at the scene of a stop of a reported carjacked vehicle since the defendant was identified as having previously been in possession of the carjacked vehicle, and incriminating documents found during the pat-down were properly seized from the defendant; the defendant's later statement admitting to having been in possession of the vehicle was not rendered inadmissible by the proper pat-down. Montgomery v. State, 279 Ga. App. 419, 631 S.E.2d 717 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the cocaine found by an officer after a precautionary pat-down, as the officer's actions in responding to a suspicious-person complaint and immediately encountering the defendant were reasonable and neither arbitrary nor harassing; hence, the seizure was authorized as incident to a lawful arrest. Simmons v. State, 281 Ga. App. 654, 637 S.E.2d 70 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 77 (Ga. 2007).

Statement by a defendant who had been stopped for speeding that the defendant had a knife, and the defendant's overly-nervous demeanor, authorized a trooper to pat the defendant down for the trooper's safety. A "plain feel" of an apparent methamphetamine pipe in the defendant's pocket authorized the trooper to remove the pipe; therefore, the pipe and methamphetamine found pursuant to a search of the defendant's pockets were admissible. Hicks v. State, 293 Ga. App. 745, 667 S.E.2d 715 (2008).

Flight from improper Terry stop. —

Denial of a defendant's motion to suppress was affirmed as the defendant's flight from an improper Terry stop gave the police officers an independent basis to arrest the defendant; thus, the methamphetamine found in close proximity was admissible. Reynolds v. State, 280 Ga. App. 712, 634 S.E.2d 842 (2006).

Instrumentalities used in commission of crime may be seized at time of arrest without search warrant.

Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967).

Police may search person under custodial arrest for weapons or contraband. —

Once a defendant has been placed under custodial arrest, police may search the defendant's person, incident to that arrest, for weapons or contraband. Buday v. State, 150 Ga. App. 686, 258 S.E.2d 318 (1979).

Reasonable for officer to remove weapons during lawful arrest. —

It is reasonable that when a lawful arrest is made the arresting officer may remove any weapons that the suspect might seek to use to try to resist arrest or to escape. Banks v. State, 246 Ga. 178, 269 S.E.2d 450 (1980).

Search of juvenile not proper. —

Law enforcement officer, who was acting as an agent for a school principal in searching a juvenile, upon reports that the juvenile had been overheard making arrangements to sell drugs on school grounds, was not authorized to search the juvenile absent probable cause to do so; thus, when the juvenile was searched and drugs were found, the court properly granted the juvenile's motion to suppress. State v. K.L.M., 278 Ga. App. 219, 628 S.E.2d 651 (2006).

Level-one, non-coercive encounter and resultant search of person. —

Since an officer made no show of force, and did not threaten, coerce, or restrain the defendant, the officer's initial approach to the defendant and two others and the officer's questioning of the defendant was a level-one, non-coercive encounter, and the officer did not need articulable suspicion to justify the conduct, to question the defendant, or to ask for consent to search the defendant's person; the defendant's consent to a search thus was not tainted by an illegal stop and met constitutional muster. Postell v. State, 279 Ga. App. 275, 630 S.E.2d 867 (2006).

Officer's observation of the defendant's unusual, evasive behavior, coupled with the defendant's ensuing confrontation of the officer near a place where a burglar alarm had recently sounded, followed by defendant's unresponsive replies to the officer's questions provided the officer a particularized and objective basis for suspecting that the defendant was engaged in wrongdoing, thereby justifying, under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII, a Terry-style investigative detention; once the defendant was subdued after attempting to flee the scene, probable cause to arrest existed. Franklin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 409, 636 S.E.2d 114 (2006).

Search of defendant's pocket after traffic stop. — Because an officer stopped the defendant for suspected drunk driving, but did not smell alcohol on the defendant's breath and did not administer sobriety tests, and because the officer soon realized during the stop that the license tag was valid, the officer never testified that the officer was in fear for the officer's safety, and did not conduct a Terry pat-down search, the trial court was authorized to find that the officer failed to articulate the reasonable suspicion necessary to sustain a second tier search. during which the officer found marijuana in the defendant's pocket. State v. Brown, 278 Ga. App. 457, 629 S.E.2d 123 (2006).

Consent nor warrant required for taking of blood sample. — A blood sample is not taken from a defendant unconstitutionally because a defendant does not freely consent to the taking of the sample and because it is taken without a search warrant. Corn v. Hopper, 244 Ga. 28, 257 S.E.2d 533 (1979).

Evidence

Change in admissibility of evidence rules. — Law as to admissibility of evidence obtained pursuant to an unlawful search and seizure as stated in Winston v. State, 79 Ga. App. 711(2a), 54 S.E.2d 354 (1949) and similar cases is determined to be no longer valid. Raif v. State, 109 Ga. App. 354, 136 S.E.2d 169 (1964).

All evidence obtained by searches and seizures in violation of Constitution is inadmissible in state court. Carson v. State ex rel. Price, 221 Ga. 299, 144 S.E.2d 384 (1965).

Evidence of guilt which the defendant, either directly or indirectly, is compelled to disclose by an unlawful search and seizure of the defendant's person under illegal arrest, is not admissible in a criminal prosecution of the person illegally arrested. Raif v. State, 109 Ga. App. 354, 136 S.E.2d 169 (1964).

Evidence of DUI investigation admissible. — Because a reasonable person in the defendant's position would not have believed any freedom of action had been more than temporarily curtailed by an officer's investigation for a possible DUI, and the defendant was not in custody or arrested until after the field sobriety tests were performed, at which point the officer had probable cause for the arrest and read the implied consent rights, the trial court did not err in denying suppression of the defendant's statement made to the officer and the field sobriety evaluations conducted. Amin v. State, 283 Ga. App. 830, 643 S.E.2d 4 (2007).

Because a defendant was arrested for driving under the influence under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391 based on probable cause and the state had complied with the implied consent requirements of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55, the defendant could not complain that drug and alcohol testing violated the search and seizure provisions of the Fourth Amendment or the Georgia Constitution because the implied consent statute allowed for the warrantless compelled testing of bodily fluids based on the existence of probable cause, but without proof of the existence of exigent circumstances. Cornwell v. State, 283 Ga. 247, 657 S.E.2d 195 (2008).

Evidence obtained from aerial search is admissible and not product of illegal search. — Since the special protection accorded by the Fourth Amendment to the people in their “persons, houses, papers and effects” is not extended to open fields, evidence obtained from an aerial search of an open field is not inadmissible as the product of an illegal search. Reece v. State, 152 Ga. App. 760, 264 S.E.2d 258 (1979).

Test for fruit of the poisonous tree. — Evidence is not “fruit of the poisonous tree” simply because it would not have come to light but for the illegal actions of the police. Rather, the more apt question in such a case is whether, granting establishment of the primary illegality, the evidence to which an objection is made has been come at by exploitation of that illegality or instead by means sufficiently distinguishable to be purged of the primary taint. McKinney v. State, 261 Ga. App. 218, 582 S.E.2d 463 (2003).

Though evidence would not have been admissible if discovered as the result of police officers’ unconstitutional roadblock and illegal Terry stop of defendant’s car before defendant reached the roadblock, defendant’s gratuitous shoving of police was an aggravated battery, and the discovery of drugs defendant threw while fleeing from that battery meant the discovery of the evidence was sufficiently attenuated from the illegal stop to justify its admission into evidence and denial of defendant’s motion to suppress. Strickland v. State, 265 Ga. App. 533, 594 S.E.2d 711 (2004).

Taint of illegal procurement of evidence under void warrant forbids its use. — Evidence obtained under a void warrant is evidence illegally obtained and it has been settled once and for all that the taint of illegal procurement forbids its use as evidence. Anderson v. State, 155 Ga. App. 25, 270 S.E.2d 263 (1980).

Suppression of evidence when impermissible intrusion on rights. — When no circumstances at all appear which might give rise to an articulable suspicion (less than probable cause, but greater than mere caprice) that the law has been violated, the act of following and detaining a vehicle and its occupants must be judged as an impermissible intrusion on the rights of the citizen. When this occurs, the penalty exacted by the law is that evidence turned up as a result of such intrusion may not be introduced against the defendant on the trial of the defendant’s case. Brooks v. State, 144 Ga. App. 97, 240 S.E.2d 593 (1977).

Trial court properly granted a defendant’s motion to suppress a firearm — a hunting rifle that was in the cab of the defendant’s pick-up truck — that was seized from the vehicle after a traffic stop, because no evidence was presented of any danger to justify the warrantless search of the vehicle for weapons, and the officer acknowledged the search was conducted merely to see if the firearm was stolen, with no basis shown that criminal activity existed. State v. Jones, 289 Ga. App. 176, 657 S.E.2d 253 (2008).

Suppression motion properly denied when probable cause to arrest the defendant for driving under the influence existed after: (1) the defendant was stopped for speeding; (2) an officer noticed that the defendant’s eyes were bloodshot, that the defendant’s speech was slow, and that the defendant smelled of alcohol; and (3) field sobriety tests indicated that the defendant was under the influence of alcohol. Moody v. State, 273 Ga. App. 670, 615 S.E.2d 803 (2005).

Because: (1) it was reasonable for the arresting officers to act upon an investigating deputy’s observations; (2) law enforcement had reasonably trustworthy information to warrant their belief that the defendant had committed or had participated in committing a burglary; and (3) a determination of probable cause to arrest the defendant could rest on the collective knowledge of the police, given the communication between them, probable cause supported the defendant’s warrantless arrest and supported the admission of the seized evidence. Murphy v. State, 286 Ga. App. 447, 649 S.E.2d 565 (2007).

“Plain feel” exception. — Since the record was devoid of any testimony or evidence that the seizing officer articulated a suspicion that would have reasonably led the officer to believe that the object seized from a coin pocket of defendant's jeans was contraband, never observed any portion of the plastic bag protruding from the pocket, and never testified that it was immediately apparent that the object was contraband, the plain feel exception did not apply and the trial court properly granted suppression of the item seized. State v. Henderson, 263 Ga. App. 880, 589 S.E.2d 647 (2003).

Pat down conducted as a matter of routine during a traffic stop did not provide a reasonable basis for concluding that defendant was a threat to the officer's safety, and because nothing indicated that defendant was involved in the drug trade or was otherwise threatening, the pat down was not justified and defendant's subsequent incriminating statement and drugs seized from defendant's vehicle should have been suppressed. Wilson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 291, 612 S.E.2d 311 (2005).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress rings a police officer seized from the defendant's pocket during a pat-down search because the seizure was authorized under the plain feel doctrine; the officer's knowledge that a man matching the defendant's description was suspected of stealing numerous rings shortly beforehand and nearby gave the officer probable cause to believe that the items the officer felt in the defendant's pocket were the stolen rings, and had the rings been in the officer's plain view when the officer detained the defendant, the officer could have seized the rings under the plain view doctrine. State v. Cosby, 302 Ga. App. 204, 690 S.E.2d 519 (2010).

Seizure of contraband during justified safety frisk was proper. — A trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to suppress the contraband found on the defendant's person as a result of a traffic stop that came to fruition after an officer observed the defendant making a U-turn in front of a recently robbed bank because the defendant admitted to having a knife in the defendant's pocket but refused to remove the defendant's hand therefrom. As a result, the police were justified in frisking the defendant for safety reasons and the contraband was, therefore, legally obtained from the defendant. Johnson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 27, 656 S.E.2d 161 (2007).

Statement overheard by officers not illegally procured evidence. — Evidence of statements made by the defendant in a conversation overheard by the arresting officers who had concealed themselves, as planned between them and the person with whom the defendant talked, does not amount to evidence given by the defendant involuntarily and without the advice of counsel, and is not coerced from the defendant in violation of the defendant's rights not to be compelled to be a witness against oneself. Blackwell v. State, 113 Ga. App. 536, 148 S.E.2d 912 (1966).

Evidence is lawfully obtained if observed by sheriff when the sheriff is lawfully on premises on another matter. Hudson v. State, 127 Ga. App. 452, 193 S.E.2d 919 (1972).

Plain view. — When the defendant was already stopped at the side of a road and a police chief, lawfully wanting to question the defendant about the incorrect vehicle tag number that the defendant had given earlier, walked passed an open car door and saw a gun in plain sight, there was no stop and the chief had a right to retrieve the gun; consequently, the trial court did not err by refusing to suppress the evidence of the gun. Eldridge v. State, 270 Ga. App. 84, 606 S.E.2d 95 (2004).

Evidence voluntarily given or seized while in plain view should not be suppressed. — When evidence establishes that a warrantless arrest and seizure were unrelated as when a sheriff who seized the items in question was permitted inside defendant's home by a person identified as defendant's spouse, and the items seized were either in plain view or voluntarily given to the sheriff, the evidence did not show a seizure pursuant to an illegal warrantless arrest that should be suppressed. Dickerson v. State, 151 Ga. App. 429, 260 S.E.2d 535 (1979).

Suppression not required when insufficient evidence of unreasonable search and seizure. — When a sheriff goes into the house of a relative and takes possession of a gun offered to the sheriff, the evidence is insufficient to show an unreasonable search and seizure, and suppression of the gun was not required. Marsh v. State, 223 Ga. 590, 157 S.E.2d 273 (1967).

Untimely motion to suppress. — In a prosecution on four counts of child molestation, the defendant's failure to file a timely motion to suppress waived the right to claim that the seized items were inadmissible as fruits of the poisonous tree. Walker v. State, 277 Ga. App. 485, 627 S.E.2d 54 (2006).

Motion to suppress properly denied because approaching individual and asking questions not "seizure." — Trial court properly refused to suppress evidence based on the defendant's initial seizure as a deputy initiated a first-level police-citizen encounter when the deputy approached the defendant's stopped car and asked the defendant to get out; it was only after the deputy smelled alcohol on the defendant and noticed the defendant's bloodshot eyes that the defendant acted upon a reasonable suspicion that the defendant might be intoxicated. Johnson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 426, 602 S.E.2d 177 (2004).

Seizure from pretrial detainee's cell. — Because the state properly sought and obtained a search warrant before the state seized written materials from a pretrial detainee's cell, it was error to grant the detainee's motion to suppress. State v. Henderson, 271 Ga. 264, 517 S.E.2d 61 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1083, 120 S. Ct. 807, 145 L. Ed. 2d 680 (2000).

Circumstances surrounding seeking of warrant. — When any conflict between testimony of magistrate and law enforcement officer seeking warrant as to circumstances surrounding seeking of warrant was resolved by the court and supported by the record, the motion to suppress evidence was properly denied. Daitch v. State, 168 Ga. App. 830, 310 S.E.2d 703 (1983).

There is no constitutional right to suppress evidence solely on ground that others have access to it. Ladson v. State, 248 Ga. 470, 285 S.E.2d 508 (1981).

Seizure of marijuana when police officer investigates complaint is proper. — Seizure of marijuana plant growing in yard of home where police officer was investigating complaint of illegal activity was proper. State v. Brooks, 160 Ga. App. 381, 287 S.E.2d 95 (1981).

Warrant as pathway to evidence. — Police did not exceed the scope of a search warrant when the warrant specified "receipts" and a furniture receipt was found in the defendant's car leading to the defendant's paramour's home and police, in a consented-to search, found incriminating evidence; the police were not required to overlook relevant evidence when the police knew the defendant's paramour's name and the receipt was a pathway to evidence. Brown v. State, 260 Ga. App. 627, 580 S.E.2d 348 (2003).

Use of similar transaction evidence. — Given the substantial evidence of defendant's guilt, a trial court did not abuse its discretion by permitting evidence showing the commission of similar transactions, in the nature of two out-of-state traffic stops which led to searches and discovery of drugs and drug paraphernalia on defendant, because there was no reasonable probability that the results of the trial would have been different had the evidence been excluded. Goldsby v. State, 273 Ga. App. 523, 615 S.E.2d 592 (2005).

Blood test results inadmissible. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the results of the defendant's intoximeter test after the arresting officer failed to provide an independent blood test under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(3), failed to use reasonable efforts to ensure that the defendant's blood was both drawn and tested, and since the officer did not suggest any other testing alternatives, such as calling the defendant's personal physician or a lawyer, or submitting the sample to the state's crime lab; once the defendant invoked the right to an independent test, the officer had a duty to make reasonable efforts to accommodate the request. Cole v. State, 263 Ga. App. 222, 587 S.E.2d 314 (2003).

Blood and urine test results, obtained without sufficient voluntary consent, properly suppressed. — Because the evidence sufficiently showed that the defendant's mental condition was clearly vulnerable, and that the defendant: (1) could not read; (2) had to be forcibly restrained while the consent form was initially being read; (3) was weeping while the remainder of the form was read; and (4) never actually signed the consent form, the trial court properly found that any consent to submit to blood and urine tests was not freely and voluntarily given. Moreover, the proper standard of review on appeal, based on the fact that credibility was an issue, was not a de novo standard, but a clearly erroneous standard. State v. Stephens, 289 Ga. App. 167, 657 S.E.2d 18 (2008).

Second blood sample was not fruit of poisonous tree. — Although a first search warrant for defendant's blood was defective, a second blood sample that was later drawn from defendant was not "fruit of the poisonous tree" because there was no evidence that the second search warrant for the blood was defective or that the second blood sample was obtained by exploitation of the original defective warrant; the second sample was separate and distinguishable from the first sample so as to be purged of the primary taint and, therefore, the trial court did not err in refusing to suppress the second sample. McKinney v. State, 261 Ga. App. 218, 582 S.E.2d 463 (2003).

Blood test results admissible. — Denial of a defendant's suppression motion was affirmed as a victim with a broken kneecap was seriously injured under O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55(c) and the officers had probable cause based on the defendant's statements, the defendant's glossy eyes, and the odor of alcohol on the defendant's person, to believe that the defendant was driving under the influence of alcohol; the officer was not required to arrest the defendant before the implied consent reading. Jenkins v. State, 282 Ga. App. 106, 637 S.E.2d 818 (2006).

Evidence of refusal to submit to breath test admissible. — Trial court erred in suppressing the defendant's refusal to submit to a state-administered chemical breath test, as the implied consent notice given by a sheriff's deputy was substantially accurate and timely given, and irrespective of whether the refusal resulted from the defendant's confusion, it nevertheless remained a refusal. State v. Brookbank, 283 Ga. App. 814, 642 S.E.2d 885 (2007).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant's motion to suppress results from a blood test performed prior to any arrest, as: (1) the evidence showed that the defendant was involved in a car wreck resulting in serious injury before blood was drawn; and (2) a sheriff's deputy had probable cause to suspect that the defendant had been driving under the influence of alcohol; moreover, contrary to the defendant's assertion, the fact that a loss of consciousness was temporary did not cause the blood test to fall outside the ambit of O.C.G.A. § 40-5-55(c). State v. Umbach, 284 Ga. App. 240, 643 S.E.2d 758 (2007).

Tate standard justified suppression of breath tests. — Under the Tate standard, defendant's breath test results, obtained while defendant was in custody, were properly suppressed as the arresting officer lacked probable cause to arrest defendant for driving under the influence since: (1) defendant had a single-car accident; (2) defendant had two clues for intoxication in the HGN test, while the other four clues were inconclusive or indicated no intoxication; (3) defendant's alco-sensor test results were positive for alcohol; (4) the trial court found that all of the alleged indicia of impairment were caused by the accident or lacked credibility; and (5) defendant adequately explained the accident to the officer. State v. Gray, 267 Ga. App. 753, 600 S.E.2d 626 (2004), disapproved, Hughes v. State, 296 Ga. 744, 770 S.E.2d 636 (2015).

Photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive. — While a defendant pointed out differences in the various pictures, such as background, clothing, and facial hair, defendant failed to show how such differences made defendant stand out from the other lineup participants in an arbitrary or apparent way so as to "suggest" to the victim that defendant was the perpetrator; the lineup administrator's comment that the victim "did good" was not proof the administrator set up a suggestive lineup. Weeks v. State, 268 Ga. App. 886, 602 S.E.2d 882 (2004).

Statement by defendant during police investigation held admissible. —

Based on an officer's unequivocal testimony that the defendant was not under arrest when a challenged statement was made, but the officer was merely investigating the victim's stolen vehicle claim, and hence Miranda warnings were not required, suppression of the statement was not required. Marshall v. State, 286 Ga. App. 86, 648 S.E.2d 674 (2007).

With regard to defendant's felony murder conviction, the trial court properly determined that defendant was not in custody when defendant told a police officer that defendant was the shooter as, although defendant was transported to the police station in a car which had a security screen between the front and back passenger seats, and a pat-down search for officer safety was performed before defendant entered the car, those actions did not mandate a finding that defendant was in custody. At no time was defendant handcuffed, defendant's relatives were present during the interview, and the door to the detectives' work area in the police station was not locked in any way that impeded exit. Sewell v. State, 283 Ga. 558, 662 S.E.2d 537 (2008).

Evidence taken after arrest based on probable cause. — Because the record showed that every police officer on duty the day of the defendant's arrest had actual knowledge of facts sufficient to support a finding of probable cause for the arrest, the seizure of the defendant's bloody clothes after the arrest was proper. Simpson v. State, 289 Ga. 685, 715 S.E.2d 142 (2011).

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — Prior to the 1983 Constitution, the provisions of this paragraph were combined with the provisions now appearing at Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XI, and reference is made to opinions noted under that paragraph.

Waiver is based upon knowledge; it cannot be implied when the fact or the right which is claimed to have been waived by the party in whose favor the right existed is ignorant of the party's right or of any fact which would substantially or materially affect the exercise of that right and tend to prevent a waiver. Jones v. State, 57 Ga. App. 344, 195 S.E. 316 (1938).

Provisions of this paragraph may be waived by defendant. Fortson v. State, 96 Ga. App. 350, 100 S.E.2d 129 (1957).

Appellate courts must accept factual and credibility determinations made by trial court. — Factual and credibility determinations of whether a justice of peace was prevented from being a neutral and detached magistrate by the justice's work as a deputy sheriff six years before or by the justice's association with individuals in the sheriff's office made by a trial judge after a suppression hearing must be accepted by appellate courts unless such determinations are clearly erroneous. Sanders v. State, 151 Ga. App. 590, 260 S.E.2d 504 (1979).

Writ of habeas corpus cannot be used merely as substitute for writ of error or other remedial procedure to correct errors of law, of which the defendant had opportunity to avail oneself, and no question as to guilt or innocence or as to any irregularity can be so raised, unless it was such as to render the judgment wholly void. Sanders v. Aldredge, 189 Ga. 69, 5 S.E.2d 371 (1939).

Defendant not deprived of right to fair trial. — Argument that defendant was deprived of the right to a fair trial under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV because the prosecutor injected an irrelevant matter into the trial when the prosecutor asked defendant on cross-examination whether defendant had filed an ante litem notice that defendant intended to sue the city because of the actions of its police officers in the case, failed; this subject of cross-examination was relevant to defendant's financial interest in the outcome of the trial. Golden v. State, 276 Ga. App. 538, 623 S.E.2d 727 (2005).

Failure to object to appointment of magistrate. — Defendant failed to meet the burden of establishing that defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel for trial counsel's failure to object to the alleged improper appointment of a chief magistrate who presided over the trial, sitting by designation following a request for judicial assistance by the superior court judge assigned to the case, since defendant failed to show that defendant was denied a fair trial by virtue of the appointment. Further, trial counsel testified at defendant's hearing on a motion for a new trial that trial counsel thought it would benefit defendant to have the particular magistrate preside over the trial rather than a superior court judge, which established that the failure to object to the appointment was a matter of trial strategy or tactics, which was not a basis for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Mazza v. State, 292 Ga. App. 168, 664 S.E.2d 548 (2008).

Failure to object to jury. — Because the defense counsel only sought to have a juror removed before the second day of a three-day jury trial based on that juror's acquaintance with three state witnesses, did not ask the jury pool questions related to such information during voir dire, and did not move for a mistrial when the issue arose during trial, the defendant waived any claim that a Sixth Amendment right to a jury trial was violated, and the trial court was not required to grant a mistrial, sua sponte; moreover, because the excused juror was not questioned about any familiarity with the witnesses during voir dire, that juror's selection to sit on the panel was not the result of any concealment or misleading statements. Artega v. State, 282 Ga. App. 751, 639 S.E.2d 634 (2006).

Claim that trial counsel rendered constitutionally ineffective assistance failed as the defendant could not show that any competent attorney would have decided not to object further to the composition of the jury pool. Leslie v. State, 292 Ga. 368, 738 S.E.2d 42 (2013).

Presumption that proceedings in trial court were rightly done. — In habeas corpus proceedings when the record is silent on the question of whether the defendant did or did not have counsel, or was or was not furnished with a list of witnesses, or was or was not notified of the nature of the offense charged against the defendant, it will be presumed that whatever ought to have been done in the trial court was done and rightly done. Plocar v. Foster, 211 Ga. 153, 84 S.E.2d 360 (1954), cert. denied, 349 U.S. 962, 75 S. Ct. 893, 99 L. Ed. 1284 (1955).

Prosecutorial misconduct not found. — Defendant waived any error in a prosecutor's request during opening statements that the jury "hold (defendant) accountable and send a message that street justice—" as the defendant did not renew an objection after a curative instruction and never moved for a mistrial; further, it was not improper for a prosecutor to appeal to the jury to convict for the safety of the community, or to stress the need for enforcement of the laws and to impress on the jury its responsibility in that regard. Haggins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 742, 627 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Discharge under habeas writ when judgment absolutely void. — A discharge under a writ of habeas corpus, after a conviction, cannot be granted unless the judgment is absolutely void; as when the convicting court was without jurisdiction, or when the defendant in the defendant's trial was denied due process of law. Sanders v. Aldredge, 189 Ga. 69, 5 S.E.2d 371 (1939); Aldredge v. Williams, 188 Ga. 607, 4 S.E.2d 469 (1939), cert. denied, 309 U.S. 661, 60 S. Ct. 512, 84 L. Ed. 1009 (1940).

Erroneous Harris charge did not result in unfair trial since evidence of malice was overwhelming in the malice murder case and, therefore, it was highly probable that the charge did not contribute to the verdict. A Harris charge involved an erroneous presumption that if a defendant used a deadly weapon, intent to kill could be inferred. Franks v. State, 278 Ga. 246, 599 S.E.2d 134 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1058, 125 S. Ct. 870, 160 L. Ed. 2d 784 (2005).

Freedom of press subordinate to proper administration of justice. — No freedoms, including the freedoms of speech and press, are absolute, and liberty of the press is subordinate to the independence of the judiciary and the proper administration of justice. The latter is necessarily true, for only in the courts can freedom of the press and other constitutional rights be preserved. The freedom of the press in itself presupposes an independent judiciary through which that freedom may, if necessary, be vindicated. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc. v. State, 216 Ga. 399, 116 S.E.2d 580 (1960).

District attorney has wide latitude in management of state's case. — In the trial of an accusation, counsel for the state certainly has as wide a latitude in the management of the state's case as does the private practitioner in representing clients, and can call or refuse to call a particular witness as the state's counsel sees fit. Bonds v. State, 232 Ga. 694, 208 S.E.2d 561 (1974).

Provision for rights to information in possession of state. — This paragraph provides what information or rights the defendant in criminal case has when the defendant seeks access to certain documents, articles, and statements in the possession of the solicitor general (now district attorney). Walker v. State, 215 Ga. 128, 109 S.E.2d 748 (1959).

Defendant has no right to inspect file of district attorney before trial. — The defendant in a criminal case does not have the right to inspect the file of the district attorney before the defendant is put on trial. White v. State, 230 Ga. 327, 196 S.E.2d 849, appeal dismissed, 414 U.S. 886, 94 S. Ct. 222, 38 L. Ed. 2d 134 (1973).

State must disclose favorable evidence material to guilt or punishment upon request. — Constitution requires that, upon request by the defendant, the state disclose all favorable evidence which is material either to guilt or to punishment. "[I]mplicit in the requirement of materiality is a concern that the suppressed evidence might have affected the outcome of the trial." Wallin v. State, 248 Ga. 29, 279 S.E.2d 687 (1981).

If defendant asks for "anything exculpatory," such a request really gives the prosecutor no better notice than if no request is made. In such a case, the prosecutor will not have violated the prosecutor's constitutional duty of disclosure unless the prosecutor's omission is of sufficient significance to result in the denial of the defendant's right to a fair trial; the mere possibility that an item of undisclosed information might have helped the defense, or might have affected the outcome of the trial, does not establish "materiality" in the constitutional sense. Wallin v. State, 248 Ga. 29, 279 S.E.2d 687 (1981).

If omitted evidence creates reasonable doubt that did not otherwise exist, constitutional error has been committed. — This means the omission must be evaluated in the context of the entire record. If there is no reasonable doubt about guilt, whether or not the additional evidence is considered, there is no justification for a new trial. Wallin v. State, 248 Ga. 29, 279 S.E.2d 687 (1981).

Preservation of evidence by police. — State of Georgia did not act in bad faith and commit a due process violation by failing to preserve material evidence when, following a single-car accident involving the defendant's car, the state removed samples of biological evidence from the interior of the defendant's car and sold the defendant's car to a salvage wholesaler who then sold the car to a mechanic, who cleaned, repaired, repainted, and resold the vehicle. The police followed the standard policy of releasing evidence in vehicular homicide cases that the police considered to be solved. State v. Mussman, 289 Ga. 586, 713 S.E.2d 822 (2011).

Constitution does not require police to provide defendant with all police investigatory work, and the mere possibility that an undisclosed item of information might have helped the defendant or might have affected the outcome of a trial, is not sufficient under Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 83 S. Ct. 1194, 10 L. Ed. 2d 215 (1963); Whitaker v. State, 246 Ga. 163, 269 S.E.2d 436 (1980).

Investigative detention does not amount to "custody." — One who is under investigative detention or is the subject of a general on-the-scene investigation is not within "custody" within the meaning of Miranda. Bailey v. State, 153 Ga. App. 178, 264 S.E.2d 710 (1980).

Rights do not attach to investigation at crime scene. — Miranda warnings are not required when a person responds to an officer's initial inquiry at an on-the-scene investigation which has not become accusatory. Japhet v. State, 176 Ga. App. 189, 335 S.E.2d 425 (1985).

Indictments in misdemeanor cases are not guaranteed. Gordon v. State, 102 Ga. 673, 29 S.E. 444 (1897).

There was no fatal variance or due process violation in juvenile petition as the petition contained sufficient information, including the date of the incident and the fact that it involved egg-throwing, to inform defendant of the charge, enable defendant to prepare a defense, and protect defendant from subsequent prosecutions for the same offense; the discrepancy between the delinquency allegations and the evidence regarding the number of windows damaged did not demand reversal as the petition fully informed defendant. In the Interest of M.M., 265 Ga. App. 381, 593 S.E.2d 919 (2004).

Lesser included offense instruction. — By charging a lesser offense in accordance with O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6, the trial court did not permit the jury to convict the defendant in a manner not alleged in the indictment in violation of the defendant's due process rights. Rupnik v. State, 273 Ga. App. 34, 614 S.E.2d 153 (2005).

Denial of out of time appeal. — Because the defendant's claims of ineffective assistance of counsel could not be resolved by examining facts appearing in the record, including the plea hearing transcript, and had to instead be developed in the context of a post-plea hearing, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal. Turner v. State, 281 Ga. 435, 637 S.E.2d 384 (2006).

Because the record showed that the defendant entered into a plea freely and voluntarily, and because the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction, defendant's counsel could not have been ineffective in failing to pursue an appeal, and the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's out-of-time appeal. McCoon v. State, 294 Ga. App. 490, 669 S.E.2d 466 (2008).

Six year delay in appeal excused. — Trial court abused the court's discretion by denying the defendant's amended motion for new trial because, contrary to the court's conclusion, the defendant demonstrated prejudice by arguing that the six-year delay in the appellate process caused by the loss of the case file, which frustrated the defendant's ability to present an ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Jones v. State, 322 Ga. App. 310, 744 S.E.2d 830 (2013).

Communications between parishioner and clergy admissible without assistance of counsel. — Because the defendant requested the future assistance of an attorney, not immediate assistance, and because the defendant knew that the defendant's confession would be handed over to law enforcement, the clergy-parishioner privilege in former O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-51 and 24-9-22 (see now O.C.G.A. §§ 24-5-502 and 24-8-825) was inapplicable; therefore, the defendant's confession to the crimes was voluntary. Willis v. State, 287 Ga. 703, 699 S.E.2d 1 (2010).

Benefit of Counsel

1. In General

Right not extended to participants in civil disputes. — Constitution provides for effective assistance of counsel for one charged with a criminal offense, not participants in a civil dispute. Calhoun v. Maynard, 196 Ga. App. 219, 395 S.E.2d

Benefit of Counsel (Cont'd)1. In General (Cont'd)

645 (1990); Finch v. Brown, 216 Ga. App. 451, 454 S.E.2d 807 (1995); Bergmann v. McCullough, 218 Ga. App. 353, 461 S.E.2d 544 (1995), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1141, 116 S. Ct. 1433, 134 L. Ed. 2d 555 (1996).

No misunderstanding upon part of judge shall forfeit this substantial right of the defendant when the defendant is being tried for a crime that might involve the defendant's liberty. Jones v. State, 57 Ga. App. 344, 195 S.E. 316 (1938).

Custodial interrogation. — Defendant's ambiguous statements and inquiries during an interview following the defendant's arrest were not an unambiguous request for counsel. Gonzalez v. State, 283 Ga. App. 843, 643 S.E.2d 8 (2007).

Inadequate invocation of right to counsel. — Because the defendant's statement that the defendant should not talk in the absence of "real talk" was insufficient to trigger the interrogating agent's duty to cease questioning, the trial court did not err in admitting the defendant's later statements to the police. Barnes v. State, 287 Ga. 423, 696 S.E.2d 629 (2010).

Failure to give sufficient Miranda warnings. — After a trial court did not give sufficient Miranda warnings as required by Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, the defendant did not knowingly waive the right to counsel during arraignment; thus, the defendant's motion to exclude statements made to a prosecutor during a pro se plea bargain were properly excluded. State v. Pinkerton, 262 Ga. App. 858, 586 S.E.2d 743 (2003).

Refusal to sign Miranda waiver form. — Defendant's refusal to sign a Miranda waiver form was not an invocation of the right to remain silent or to counsel. Hunter v. State, 273 Ga. App. 52, 614 S.E.2d 179 (2005).

Not yet under arrest at traffic stop. — Defendant was not under arrest for Miranda purposes at the time field and chemical sobriety tests were conducted, because when officers approached the defendant as the defendant exited the vehicle, the officers had not made a decision to arrest the defendant for driving under the influence, but were pursuing an investigation of an allegation of domestic violence; although the defendant was detained, there was no evidence that the officers did or said anything to indicate that the defendant would be detained more than a short time. Burnham v. State, 277 Ga. App. 310, 626 S.E.2d 525 (2006).

Constitution does not require compensation for services of court-appointed counsel. — A request by a judge of a trial court that an attorney represent an indigent defendant in a criminal case is tantamount to a demand with which the attorney must necessarily comply, but the attorney's professional services, work product, and necessary out-of-pocket expenses in providing competent representation are not required by the Constitution to be compensated. Weiner v. Fulton County, 113 Ga. App. 343, 148 S.E.2d 143, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 958, 87 S. Ct. 393, 17 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1966).

Defendant is not entitled to have counsel and also to self representation. A defendant is entitled to either, not both. Simmons v. State, 186 Ga. App. 886, 369 S.E.2d 36, cert. denied, 186 Ga. App. 919, 369 S.E.2d 36 (1988).

Defendant has no right to simultaneous representation by counsel and self-representation. Coursey v. State, 196 Ga. App. 135, 395 S.E.2d 574 (1990).

Defendant does not have a right to simultaneous representation by counsel and self-representation. Snell v. State, 203 Ga. App. 27, 416 S.E.2d 360 (1992).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's pro se request for a continuance because the defendant was represented by counsel when the defendant filed the pro se motion, thus, that motion was of no legal effect whatsoever; a criminal defendant does not have the right to self-representation and also be represented by an attorney. Earley v. State, 310 Ga. App. 110, 712 S.E.2d 565 (2011).

Translation of witness testimony. — Defendant was not denied defendant's due process rights because the trial court instructed an interpreter to translate only a witness's testimony for the benefit of the jury, and not to otherwise interpret peripheral proceedings for the witness that were unrelated to the content of the witness's testimony; the defendant failed to show how the defendant was denied the right to participate in a meaningful way in the proceedings. Puga-Cerantes v. State, 281 Ga. 78, 635 S.E.2d 118 (2006).

No violation for failure to allow self-representation. — When defendant requested self-representation at trial but, upon hearing the trial court's warnings about self-representation admitted to being incapable of self-representation, the trial court did not err by proceeding with the trial with the existing appointed counsel representing the defendant. Lovelace v. State, 262 Ga. App. 690, 586 S.E.2d 386 (2003).

Pro se demand invalid if defendant has counsel. — Because, at the time defendants filed their pro se demand for discharge pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170, they were represented by counsel, the trial court was clearly authorized to find that the pro se demand was of no legal effect whatsoever. Goodwin v. State, 202 Ga. App. 655, 415 S.E.2d 472 (1992).

Refusal to delay resulted in denial of right to counsel. — When the attorney chosen and employed by the defendant in a criminal case is absent from trial to aid in the birth of the attorney's child, the trial court erred in refusing to delay the trial at least sufficiently to determine whether the trial could be held with representation by selected counsel and without undue delay and denied the defendant the right of counsel of defendant's own choice. Long v. State, 119 Ga. App. 82, 166 S.E.2d 365 (1969).

Failure to furnish counsel at hearing to revoke probation not unconstitutional. — A proceeding to revoke a probated sentence of one convicted of a criminal offense is not a criminal proceeding, and the failure of the court to supply that person with counsel is not a denial of the right to counsel unless a statute provides for benefit of counsel at such a hearing. Dutton v. Willis, 223 Ga. 209, 154 S.E.2d 221 (1967).

Failure to furnish counsel to one convicted of a criminal offense at the hearing to revoke one's probation does not violate the right to counsel. Reece v. Pettijohn, 229 Ga. 619, 193 S.E.2d 841 (1972).

Fact that defendant was not represented by an attorney in a prior revocation proceeding did not affect the admissibility of the orders entered therein. Wolcott v. State, 278 Ga. 664, 604 S.E.2d 478 (2004).

Claim procedurally barred. — Defendant was procedurally barred from bringing an ineffective assistance of counsel claim as defendant proceeded directly with an appeal, without first filing a motion for new trial or otherwise demanding an evidentiary hearing on any claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel; as there was no evidentiary hearing on the ineffective assistance of counsel claim, there was nothing to review on appeal. Terrell v. State, 268 Ga. App. 173, 601 S.E.2d 500 (2004).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was procedurally barred because the defendant's appellate counsel appeared in time to file a motion for new trial and an amended motion for new trial but failed to raise the issue of ineffective assistance of trial counsel. Machado v. State, 300 Ga. App. 459, 685 S.E.2d 428 (2009).

Because the defendant waived the defendant's ineffective assistance claim, the court of appeals did not address the claim; although the defendant raised an ineffective assistance of counsel claim in the defendant's new trial motion, the defendant did not allege that counsel was ineffective for failure to object to the admission of the pretrial identification evidence, but on appeal, that ground represented the sole basis for the defendant's ineffective assistance claim. Bell v. State, 306 Ga. App. 853, 703 S.E.2d 680 (2010).

Because the defendant's claims of ineffective assistance were not raised on a motion for new trial, the claims could not be raised for the first time on appeal. Martinez v. State, 289 Ga. 160, 709 S.E.2d 797 (2011).

Not error to deny continuance when co-counsel present and defendant uninjured. — When none of the statutory requirements necessary for the granting of a continuance were put forth by co-counsel when the case was called, and there has been no showing that the defendant was injured by the absence of defendant's lead counsel, there was no merit in the complaint that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for continuance because of the absence of counsel, and that the defendant had been denied defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel and defendant's Fifth Amendment right to due process as guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions. Blair v. State, 166 Ga. App. 434, 304 S.E.2d 535 (1983).

Denial of a requested continuance, after an attorney volunteered to assume the representation of an accused who had been told that the accused was not eligible for appointed counsel, was denial of counsel. Butler v. State, 198 Ga. App. 217, 401 S.E.2d 43 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 897, 401 S.E.2d 43 (1991).

Consideration of a person's prior uncounseled convictions for driving under the influence in determining an appropriate sentence for a subsequent conviction does not violate any constitutional right to counsel because the driving under the influence statute (O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391) is not an enhanced penalty statute since it neither increases the maximum confinement authorized nor converts a misdemeanor offense into a felony. Moore v. State, 181 Ga. App. 548, 352 S.E.2d 821, cert. denied, 484 U.S. 904, 108 S. Ct. 247, 98 L. Ed. 2d 204 (1987).

When denial of right, judgment making habeas corpus writ absolute was correct. — When the undisputed facts showed a denial of the accused's right to counsel, the trial court's judgment making the writ of habeas corpus absolute was correct. Balkcom v. Turner, 217 Ga. 610, 123 S.E.2d 918 (1962).

Judge is trier of fact in habeas corpus proceeding. — When a habeas corpus proceeding is instituted for the release of a prisoner upon the grounds that the prisoner was deprived of the prisoner's constitutional rights to the benefit of counsel and to trial by jury, and there is an issue of fact on the allegations made by the movant, the trial judge becomes the trier; and when there is ample evidence to support the judge's judgment, it will not be set aside. Mathis v. Scott, 199 Ga. 743, 35 S.E.2d 285 (1945).

Court's failure to inform of danger of self representation. — Defendant was improperly held in contempt and sentenced to two days' imprisonment because a trial court failed to inform the defendant of the dangers of self-representation and did not obtain from the defendant a knowing waiver of the constitutional right to counsel when the only mention of counsel was a vague colloquy between the defendant and the trial court. Merritt v. State, 261 Ga. App. 597, 583 S.E.2d 283 (2003).

Defendant's required showing of deficient performance prejudicing defense. — To prove ineffective assistance of counsel, a defendant is required to show that counsel's performance was deficient and that this deficient performance prejudiced the defendant's defense. A trial court's determination with respect to counsel's effectiveness will be upheld on appeal unless clearly erroneous. Davis v. State, 264 Ga. App. 128, 589 S.E.2d 700 (2003).

Inmate seeking habeas corpus relief and alleging that the inmate received ineffective assistance of counsel when the inmate's trial attorney prevented the inmate from testifying needed to show that, had the inmate testified, it was reasonably probable that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different; the trial court, in granting habeas relief, relied on an erroneous legal standard by holding that the inmate was not required to show prejudice. Turpin v. Curtis, 278 Ga. 698, 606 S.E.2d 244 (2004).

No conflict of interest. — Upon a review of the specific statements identified by the defendant supporting a conflict of interest claim between the defendant and the codefendant, no evidence of antagonism was found as the specific statements identified merely amounted to mutual expressions of indifference over the outcome of the criminal charges and not "finger pointing" as alleged by the defendant's counsel; hence, counsel from the same public defender's office were not automatically disqualified from their respective representations. Burns v. State,

281 Ga. 338, 638 S.E.2d 299 (2006).

2. Procurement of Counsel

A. Appointment of Counsel

State may assign counsel for destitute party. Delk v. State, 99 Ga. 667, 26 S.E. 752 (1896); Weatherby v. Pittman, 24 Ga. App. 452, 101 S.E. 131 (1919).

Practice of courts to appoint counsel to represent indigents. — Georgia courts have uniformly adopted the practice of assigning counsel to represent indigent criminals in all cases when they were unable to employ counsel to represent them. Summerour v. Fortson, 174 Ga. 862, 164 S.E. 809 (1932).

An impoverished defendant who is unable to employ or arrange for counsel must be afforded an attorney when the defendant requests it in order to meet the constitutional guaranty and to afford due process. Perry v. State, 120 Ga. App. 304, 170 S.E.2d 350 (1969).

Failure to appoint counsel for indigent is violation of constitutional right. — While Georgia has no statute requiring the appointment of counsel for an accused unable to employ own counsel, the Supreme Court has construed this paragraph to mean that if the accused is not financially able to employ counsel and desires the court to appoint one to represent the accused, the court must do so, and failure to do so violates the accused's constitutional right to benefit of counsel. Bibb County v. Hancock, 211 Ga. 429, 86 S.E.2d 511 (1955); Weiner v. Fulton County, 113 Ga. App. 343, 148 S.E.2d 143, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 958, 87 S. Ct. 393, 17 L. Ed. 2d 304 (1966), commented on in 18 Mercer L. Rev. 477 (1967); McGlasker v. State, 321 Ga. App. 614, 741 S.E.2d 303 (2013).

Lack of counsel for indigent persons being tried for crimes is a deprivation of their constitutional rights. Sims v. Balkcom, 220 Ga. 7, 136 S.E.2d 766 (1964).

Court of appeals erred in deferring to the public defender's own policy not to appoint new counsel for purposes of appeal and denying the indigent defendant's request to raise an ineffectiveness claim as part of a new trial motion as the defendant was constitutionally entitled to appointment of conflict-free counsel to represent the defendant on appeal. Garland v. State, 283 Ga. 201, 657 S.E.2d 842 (2008).

Defendant's petition for habeas corpus was improperly denied on the basis of procedural default as the trial court improperly failed to appoint counsel to represent the defendant on appeal after a motion for new trial was denied as the trial court was aware of the defendant's desire to appeal and the defendant's indigency; the defendant was prejudiced as the defendant's notice of appeal filed pro se was untimely. Davis v. Frazier, 285 Ga. 16, 673 S.E.2d 215 (2009).

Failure to rule on motion for appointment. — Failure to rule on a motion to appoint counsel, based on an affidavit of indigency, for an appeal was harmless error because the defendant's trial counsel handled the appeal. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

Defendant being provided pro bono representation. — An indigent defendant was constitutionally entitled to the appointment of counsel even though the defendant was being provided pro bono representation by an attorney who was receiving compensation from sources other than the defendant. Roberts v. State, 263 Ga. 764, 438 S.E.2d 905 (1994).

Defendant's case was remanded to the trial court with direction to appoint qualified appellate counsel as defendant's motion for appellate counsel had never been acted upon; defendant had been denied the right to appointed counsel on appeal, even though defendant was represented by pro bono counsel. Speight v. State, 279 Ga. 87, 610 S.E.2d 42 (2005).

Discretion of court. — When the trial court determined that a nonindigent defendant failed to use reasonable diligence to retain counsel and failed to present any evidence of special circumstances militating in favor of the court's exercising the court's discretion to appoint counsel, the court did not abuse the court's discretion in failing to appoint counsel. McQueen v. State, 240 Ga. App. 15, 522 S.E.2d 512 (1999).

Because the determination of whether a defendant was indigent, and thus entitled to have counsel appointed to pursue an appeal, was within the discretion of the trial court, and this determination was not subject to review, the Court of Appeals of Georgia declined to look behind the trial court's determination of indigence. Breazeale v. State, 290 Ga. App. 632, 660 S.E.2d 376 (2008).

Defendant must not be coerced into accepting counsel not of defendant's own choosing and defendant may proceed a defense without counsel. Rogers v. State, 156 Ga. App. 466, 274 S.E.2d 815 (1980).

State may not constitutionally hale a person into its criminal courts and there force a lawyer upon the person, when the person insists that the person wants to conduct the person's own defense. Taylor v. Hopper, 596 F.2d 1284 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1083, 100 S. Ct. 1039, 62 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1980).

A trial judge does not have a duty to attempt to force unwanted counsel upon a defendant who has resolutely declared the defendant's purpose to dismiss that counsel. Taylor v. Hopper, 596 F.2d 1284 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1083, 100 S. Ct. 1039, 62 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1980).

Counsel of choice. — Defendant was denied the right to counsel of defendant's own choosing and obtained a reversal of defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and possession of a firearm, as a result of the trial court judge's denial of a motion for a continuance, which was grounded on the fact that the defendant's retained counsel was hospitalized; the trial court failed to make an inquiry as to whether the absence of defense counsel was attributable to the defendant and merely stated that because appointed counsel was in the courtroom, the defendant was adequately represented. Turman v. State, 272 Ga. App. 570, 613 S.E.2d 126 (2005).

Defendant failed to show that the trial court's refusal to appoint the defendant's preferred counsel to represent the defendant was an abuse of discretion because nothing in the defendant's letters to the trial court stating the defendant's dissatisfaction with the defendant's lawyer provided any objective considerations favoring the appointment of defendant's preferred counsel; the defendant's scant testimony at the hearing on the defendant's motion for new trial as to why the defendant preferred in particular the lawyer named in the defendant's letters fell short of providing objective considerations favoring the appointment of the defendant's preferred counsel. Ware v. State, 307 Ga. App. 782, 706 S.E.2d 143 (2011).

Defendant was not denied the trial counsel of the defendant's choosing when the trial court declined to continue the trial proceedings after the defendant indicated that the defendant had retained new counsel because the record supported the trial court's conclusion that the defendant requested a continuance for purposes of delay; therefore, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's request for a continuance and instead proceeding with the defendant's appointed counsel who was prepared for trial. Calloway v. State, 313 Ga. App. 708, 722 S.E.2d 422 (2012).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court disqualified one of the defendant's two lawyers because the lawyer also represented a witness who ultimately testified against the defendant, and the prospects of the lawyer advising the witness about any deal that might be proposed by the state to secure the witness's testimony against the defendant or cross-examining the witness on behalf of the defendant were rife with serious ethical problems. Heidt v. State, 292 Ga. 343, 736 S.E.2d 384 (2013).

Defendant was not prejudiced by the appointment of counsel eight days prior to trial when on the day set for trial defense counsel requested a continuance, stating that defense counsel had not had an opportunity to talk with all the witnesses, but the trial court denied this motion, stating that counsel would be given an opportunity to interview witnesses prior to their testimony; defendant contended that these interviews were inadequate to prepare the defendant's attorney for trial, but the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the motion for continuance since no showing was made that any prospective witness not interviewed by the defense would have been beneficial to the defendant. Newberry v. State, 250 Ga. 819, 301 S.E.2d 282 (1983).

Failing to interview witnesses whose testimony was not relevant. — Counsel was not ineffective for failing to identify a defendant's three "new eyewitnesses" who were to have provided "helpful information" for the defendant; the witnesses saw what occurred after the defendant's arrest, not the criminal events that led to the defendant's arrest. McCarty v. State, 269 Ga. App. 299, 603 S.E.2d 666 (2004).

Right to counsel triggered by probated or suspended sentence. — Appellate court erred in affirming the trial court's conviction of the defendant, on driving on a revoked license charge, on the ground that the defendant was not entitled to appointed counsel since defendant was not actually given a prison sentence but was instead given a probated sentence as the right to counsel was triggered when the defendant, who was indigent, was given a probated or suspended sentence. Barnes v. State, 275 Ga. 499, 570 S.E.2d 277 (2002).

Appointment of preferred counsel. — Although an indigent defendant has no right to compel the trial court to appoint an attorney of defendant's own choosing, when a defendant's choice of counsel is supported by objective considerations favoring the appointment of the preferred counsel, and there are no countervailing considerations of comparable weight, it is an abuse of discretion to deny the defendant's request to appoint the counsel of defendant's preference. Davis v. State, 261 Ga. 221, 403 S.E.2d 800 (1991).

Counsel's motion to withdraw properly denied. — Given that a trial counsel represented that the trial counsel could be ready for trial and that the trial counsel's request to withdraw was filed four days before the trial was scheduled to commence, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the trial counsel's motion to withdraw. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Reasons for failure to obtain counsel. — After defendant challenged the trial court's failure to appoint a lawyer to represent defendant even though defendant was not indigent, the action was remanded for a determination of whether the trial court delayed the proceedings long enough to ascertain whether the defendant acted with reasonable diligence in attempting to obtain an attorney and whether the absence of an attorney was attributable to reasons beyond the defendant's control. Nunnally v. State, 261 Ga. App. 198, 582 S.E.2d 173 (2003).

Defendant failed to show good reason to discharge court-appointed counsel. — Defendant did not have a good reason for discharging a court-appointed attorney and substituting another one after the attorney had interviewed all of the defendant's witnesses, except for one witness who had not returned calls; the trial court properly advised the defendant that the trial would take place in four days, as scheduled, and that the defendant could either be represented by the court-appointed attorney, another attorney, or the defendant could be self represented. Nicely v. State, 277 Ga. App. 140, 625 S.E.2d 538 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in giving the defendant the option of proceeding pro se and denying trial counsel's motion to withdraw from representation because the trial court conducted a thorough investigation of the allegations, and the defendant was unable to articulate any support for the claim of threats, beyond stating repeatedly the defendant's belief that counsel needed more time. Billings v. State, 308 Ga. App. 248, 707 S.E.2d 177 (2011).

Defendant not entitled to counsel in habeas proceeding. — Dismissal of an inmate's habeas petition without a hearing was proper as the petition failed to state any viable claim for pre-conviction habeas corpus relief since: (1) the inmate was not entitled to appointed counsel in the habeas corpus proceeding; (2) the habeas court was not required to make a determination of the inmate's mental state as it was an issue to be addressed in the context of the criminal prosecution; and (3) the inmate did not seek issuance of the writ on the ground that the inmate had tendered proper bail in connection with the inmate's then-pending prosecution on the criminal charge. Britt v. Conway, 281 Ga. 189, 637 S.E.2d 43 (2006).

Appointment of new counsel not warranted. — Because the defendant's sole claim of ineffectiveness of counsel on appeal lacked merit, the trial court did not err in denying a motion for the appointment of new counsel. Dingler v. State, 281 Ga. App. 721, 637 S.E.2d 120 (2006).

In the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault in connection with robbery of a fast food restaurant, trial court did not err by refusing to appoint new trial counsel after the defendant made it known that the defendant was dissatisfied with trial counsel and had filed a bar complaint against trial counsel; trial court gave the defendant choice between keeping current trial counsel or proceeding pro se, and the defendant chose to proceed with current counsel. Holsey v. State, 291 Ga. App. 216, 661 S.E.2d 621 (2008).

B. Employment of Counsel

Right to employ counsel of own selection. — This constitutional right entitles everyone to exercise one's own free choice in the selection of the attorney one wishes to employ to represent one. Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

Representation by associate of the lead attorney did not violate defendants' constitutional right to counsel because, although defendant made a post-trial claim that defendant did not approve of the substitution, defendant did not object when the attorney informed the trial court that defendant had given permission for the associate to assume the role of defense counsel should that prove necessary; the trial court was authorized to find that defendant failed to rebut the presumption of effectiveness of the trial counsel by clear and convincing evidence. Cox v.

State, 279 Ga. 223, 610 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Reasonable opportunity to procure counsel. — This provision guarantees a person who is unable to employ counsel the right to have counsel appointed for that person by the court; and such provision entitles an accused who is able to employ counsel a reasonable opportunity to procure counsel of the accused's own selection. Fair v. Balkcom, 216 Ga. 721, 119 S.E.2d 691 (1961).

This paragraph confers upon every person indicted for crime a most valuable and important constitutional right, and entitles the person to be defended by counsel of the person's own selection whenever the person is able and willing to employ an attorney and uses reasonable diligence to obtain those services. No person meeting these requirements should be deprived of the person's right to be represented by counsel chosen by that person, or forced to trial with the assistance only of counsel appointed for the person by the court. Long v. State, 119 Ga. App. 82, 166 S.E.2d 365 (1969); Wallis v. State, 137 Ga. App. 457, 224 S.E.2d 91 (1976).

Defendant must use reasonable diligence to obtain services of counsel.

— This paragraph has been interpreted to confer upon every criminal defendant the right to be represented by counsel of the defendant's own selection whenever the defendant is able and willing to employ one, and uses reasonable diligence to obtain counsel's services. Reid v. State, 237 Ga. 106, 227 S.E.2d 24 (1976); Lewis v. State, 188 Ga. App. 205, 372 S.E.2d 482 (1988).

When a non-indigent defendant, an "almost" illiterate chicken coop builder, acted with reasonable diligence in the defendant's attempts to obtain an attorney, an attorney should have been appointed for the defendant. Flanagan v. State, 224 Ga. App. 272, 480 S.E.2d 299 (1997).

No right to representation by someone unauthorized to practice law. —

While it is true that a defendant may proceed in a defense without counsel, a defendant may not expand the right to counsel to include representation by someone else unauthorized to practice law. Pfeiffer v. State, 173 Ga. App. 374, 326 S.E.2d 562 (1985).

Whether a particular defendant has exercised “reasonable diligence” in procuring counsel of choice is a factual question, and the grant or denial of a request for continuance on grounds of absence of retained counsel is a decision within the sound discretion of the trial judge, reversible only for an abuse of that discretion. Shaw v. State, 251 Ga. 109, 303 S.E.2d 448 (1983).

Inquiry as to defendant’s “reasonable diligence.” — Since the trial of the defendant had been continued in order to accommodate the defendant’s request to obtain different counsel and the defendant had been told when the case would be tried and warned of the dangers of proceeding without counsel and the defendant appeared without counsel on the date set, before proceeding to trial the court should have made an inquiry as to whether the defendant’s failure to obtain counsel was attributable to the defendant’s own lack of diligence. Hasty v. State, 210 Ga. App. 722, 437 S.E.2d 638 (1993).

Violation of rights when court denies postponement for procuring of counsel. — A judge’s refusal of the request of a defendant for postponement, which in effect deprives the defendant of an opportunity to use normal facilities and resources to procure counsel of defendant’s own choice, violates this paragraph. Walker v. State, 194 Ga. 727, 22 S.E.2d 462 (1942).

Trial court abused the court’s discretion when the court denied the defendant’s motion for a continuance and forced the defendant to proceed to trial without the assistance of counsel when, following the defendant’s discovery that the defendant’s retained attorney could not represent the defendant, the defendant makes a good faith, albeit unsuccessful, effort to obtain substitute counsel. Shaw v. State, 251 Ga. 109, 303 S.E.2d 448 (1983).

No error to refuse continuance when ample time for defendant to employ counsel. — It is not error for the trial court to refuse to grant a continuance in order to obtain the services of counsel when the defendant had ample time to employ counsel, had made no real attempt to employ counsel prior to trial, was represented by appointed counsel, and there was no evidence in the record that the defendant’s appointed counsel had inadequate time to prepare for trial. Miller v. State, 156 Ga. App. 469, 274 S.E.2d 818 (1980).

After continuance, defendant cannot reject appointed counsel. — After being afforded a continuance to obtain counsel, a defendant cannot reject appointed counsel and insist that the defendant’s preliminary hearing be further delayed while the defendant tries to obtain the services of one particular, prominent attorney who has not agreed to take the case. Eiland v. State, 246 Ga. 112, 268 S.E.2d 922 (1980).

Violation of rights to deny defendant counsel of defendant’s own selection. — Improper denial of the defendant’s right to be represented by counsel of the defendant’s own choosing is violative of this paragraph and former Code 1933, § 27-403 (see now O.C.G.A. § 17-7-24), and abrogates the right of procedural due process. Johnson v. State, 139 Ga. App. 829, 229 S.E.2d 772 (1976).

Disqualification of defense counsel in a criminal matter was an abuse of discretion, although a client of the defense attorney’s law firm was the employer of a witness for the state, because the relationship between the law firm and the firm’s client was not reasonably likely to impair a thorough and sifting cross-examination of the witness. Lewis v. State, 312 Ga. App. 275, 718 S.E.2d 112 (2011), cert. denied, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 238 (Ga. 2012).

Party may select chief counsel. — The spirit of this constitutional provision entitles a person charged with a crime to the privilege and benefit of counsel of the person’s own selection, and this right of selection must also extend to the right to select the counsel who shall lead in the conduct of the person’s case. Chivers v. State, 5 Ga. App. 654, 63 S.E. 703 (1909).

Indigent defendant has no absolute right to discharge counsel and have another substituted. — A criminal defendant has a constitutional right to be defended by counsel of defendant’s own selection whenever the defendant is willing and able to employ such counsel. However, an indigent criminal defendant does not have an absolute right to discharge one court-appointed counsel and have another substituted in that counsel's place. A request of this sort addresses itself to the sound discretion of the trial court. Burney v. State, 244 Ga. 33, 257 S.E.2d 543 (1979).

Court under no obligation to appoint counsel for accused who has means. — If the accused has means to employ counsel, and is out upon bond and has opportunity to secure counsel, and neglects or refuses to do so, the court is under no obligation or duty to appoint counsel to represent the accused. Elam v. Rowland, 194 Ga. 58, 20 S.E.2d 572 (1942).

When the accused has exercised the accused's own free choice of counsel and has engaged an attorney to represent the accused, the accused has no right under the Constitution to have the court appoint an attorney to represent the accused without charge. Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

When a defendant is financially able to employ counsel and is given the privilege to do so, it is not error for the court to fail to appoint counsel for the defendant. McGhee v. State, 71 Ga. App. 52, 30 S.E.2d 54 (1944).

When counsel whom the defendant believed the defendant had employed informed the court on the day of the defendant's hearing for probation violation that the defendant had not made the necessary arrangements with counsel and that counsel could not represent the defendant, but there was nothing in the record to show that the defendant was financially unable to employ counsel, it was not error for the court to fail to appoint counsel for the defendant. McGhee v. State, 71 Ga. App. 52, 30 S.E.2d 54 (1944).

Obtaining of counsel is matter of contract between party and attorney. Walker v. State, 17 Ga. App. 321, 86 S.E. 735 (1915).

No deprivation of rights when court honors request to conduct own defense. — Defendant is not deprived of the defendant's constitutional rights when a trial court honors defendant's request to conduct the defendant's own defense. Taylor v. Hopper, 596 F.2d 1284 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 1083, 100 S. Ct. 1039, 62 L. Ed. 2d 768 (1980).

3. Time to Prepare

One accused of a crime is entitled as matter of right to reasonable time in which to prepare for trial. Cartee v. State, 85 Ga. App. 532, 69 S.E.2d 827 (1952).

Appointed counsel entitled to reasonable time for preparation. — Right to "benefit of counsel" includes a reasonable time for preparation of the case. Blackman v. State, 76 Ga. 288 (1886).

The constitutional guaranty of "benefit of counsel" means something more than the mere appointment by the court of counsel to represent the accused; the accused is entitled to a reasonable time for preparation by such counsel to properly represent the accused on the trial. Sheppard v. State, 165 Ga. 460, 141 S.E. 196 (1928); Edwards v. State, 204 Ga. 384, 50 S.E.2d 10 (1948); Burkett v. State, 131 Ga. App. 662, 206 S.E.2d 848 (1974).

Benefit of counsel guaranteed by this paragraph is not satisfied merely by the defendant being represented by counsel on defendant's trial, but defendant's counsel is entitled to a reasonable time after counsel's employment to prepare for defendant's defense in order that counsel may adequately and effectively represent the client. Smith v. Greek, 226 Ga. 312, 175 S.E.2d 1 (1970); Tucker v. State, 136 Ga. App. 456, 221 S.E.2d 664 (1975).

Constitutional privilege would amount to nothing if counsel for accused not allowed sufficient time to prepare defense. — The Constitution of this state provides that every person accused of a crime shall have the privilege and benefit of counsel, but it is useless to appoint counsel to represent one so accused unless the attorney so appointed is given at least a reasonable opportunity to prepare the case entrusted to the counsel.

Edwards v. State, 204 Ga. 384, 50 S.E.2d 10 (1948).

This constitutional guaranty amounts to nothing unless the counsel selected by the accused or appointed by the court are given a reasonable time to ascertain the character of the case that the accused is called upon to defend. Fair v. Balkcom, 216 Ga. 721, 119 S.E.2d 691 (1961).

Accused denied benefit of counsel when reasonable time to prepare not given. — When it appears that the defendant was put to trial upon an indictment for a capital felony, the defendant has not been apprised that an indictment had been found against the defendant, and that counsel appointed for the defendant were only permitted to confer with their client for two or three minutes before the court announced that “the case would go to trial,” the defendant was denied the constitutional benefit of counsel. Jackson v. State, 176 Ga. 148, 167 S.E. 109 (1932).

Constitutional requirement of benefit of counsel is, in effect, denied when counsel appointed to defend the accused is not given a reasonable time to prepare a defense before trial. Edwards v. State, 204 Ga. 384, 50 S.E.2d 10 (1948).

Constitutional requirement of counsel is denied in substance when court-appointed counsel is not given a reasonable time to prepare a defense before trial. If reasonable time is not given for such preparation, the accused is afforded only the privilege of counsel and not the benefit of counsel. Edwards v. State, 106 Ga. App. 535, 127 S.E.2d 475 (1962).

Facts and circumstances determine sufficiency of time allowed for preparation. — Whether or not a reversal is to be adjudged because counsel were not allowed sufficient time to prepare a case for trial is to be determined by the particular facts and circumstances of each case. Cannady v. State, 190 Ga. 227, 9 S.E.2d 241 (1940).

When counsel was appointed to represent a defendant charged with rape, assault, possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, and cruelty to children on the Friday before the week trial was scheduled to begin, and was given a one-week continuance, counsel should have had more time to prepare, given the gravity of the charges, but defendant showed no prejudice from counsel’s short preparation time, as it was not shown that any of the things counsel would have done, given more time, would have resulted in evidence favorable to defendant or a different result of the trial in which defendant was found guilty. Johnson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 1, 601 S.E.2d 392 (2004).

Preparation of defendant for trial adequate. — Defendant failed to demonstrate that trial counsel was ineffective in insisting that the defendant testify without adequate preparation because the defendant’s contention that counsel forced the defendant to testify was refuted by trial counsel’s testimony to the contrary at the new trial hearing; trial counsel testified that trial counsel prepared the defendant to testify by telling the defendant to explain about the relationship with the victim, the defendant’s location at the time of the crime, why the defendant made a telephone call from a neighbor’s house, and various other matters. Although the defendant denied having this discussion, the trial court was authorized to disbelieve the defendant. Ransom v. State, 297 Ga. App. 902, 678 S.E.2d 574 (2009).

Instance when insufficient time allowed. — Peremptorily forcing one indicted for a criminal offense to trial immediately after the appointment of counsel not familiar with the case to defend that defendant, without giving counsel an opportunity to make an investigation of the case or prepare for the defense is, although no other ground for a postponement or continuance of the case be urged, cause for a new trial. Long v. State, 119 Ga. App. 82, 166 S.E.2d 365 (1969).

Continuance denied despite short period given appointed counsel to prepare. — When counsel were appointed to defend the accused on the charge of murder, slightly less than 24 hours before the case was called for trial, the court did not abuse the court’s discretion in overruling a motion then made for a continuance on the ground that the defendant’s counsel had not had sufficient time within which to prepare for trial.

Benefit of Counsel (Cont'd)3. Time to Prepare (Cont'd)

Cannady v. State, 190 Ga. 227, 9 S.E.2d 241 (1940), commented on in 3 Ga. B.J. 55 (1940).

Ten minute period is too short a time. Reliford v. State, 140 Ga. 777, 79 S.E. 1128 (1913).

Court abused discretion in denying continuance. — When facts show that court-appointed attorney was wholly unprepared for trial, after retained counsel withdrew on date of trial from case, and the court denied the motion for continuance or postponement, this was an unconstitutional abuse of discretion. Smith v. State, 215 Ga. 362, 110 S.E.2d 635 (1959).

Defendant's duty to employ or request attorney in advance. — Defendant must be afforded benefit of counsel, and this includes time sufficient for counsel to prepare for trial, but when the defendant was apprised of the charge against the defendant at a previous term of court and fails and neglects to procure counsel or ask the court to do so for the defendant there is no error in refusing a request for additional time on the ground that the counsel has had insufficient time to prepare the defense. It is the defendant's duty to employ an attorney to aid in the preparation of the defendant's defense sufficiently in advance of the trial of the case. Duke v. State, 104 Ga. App. 494, 122 S.E.2d 127 (1961); Bradshaw v. State, 132 Ga. App. 363, 208 S.E.2d 173 (1974).

Accused has right to private consultation with the accused's attorney. Hill v. State, 119 Ga. App. 612, 168 S.E.2d 327 (1969).

A prisoner should always be accorded the privilege of conferring freely with counsel at all reasonable times. Morris v. Peacock, 202 Ga. 524, 43 S.E.2d 531 (1947).

4. Right to Benefit of Counsel

Clear mandate of this paragraph requires that every person accused of crime shall have "benefit of counsel." Edwards v. State, 204 Ga. 384, 50 S.E.2d 10 (1948).

Denial of counsel within meaning of Constitution renders judgment of conviction void. Morris v. Peacock, 202 Ga. 524, 43 S.E.2d 531 (1947).

Attorney hired by mother could not invalidate defendant's Miranda waiver. — Waiver of Miranda rights was not invalid due to police officers' failure to tell a defendant that an attorney hired by the defendant's mother had arrived at the station, because the attorney, without having consulted the defendant, was not empowered to invoke the defendant's personal rights. Bell v. State, 280 Ga. 562, 629 S.E.2d 213 (2006).

Accused entitled to new trial when right to counsel denied. — It is a constitutional right of a defendant in a criminal case to have the benefit of counsel but the defendant can waive this right. If the record shows that the accused did not have counsel, it is not cause for a new trial unless it further appears that the right to have counsel was denied the accused. Bailey v. State, 50 Ga. App. 92, 176 S.E. 909 (1934); Fortson v. State, 96 Ga. App. 350, 100 S.E.2d 129 (1957).

Right to counsel aids in protection of right to fair and impartial trial. — Right to counsel is guaranteed to the accused by the fundamental law of this state, in order that the accused and the accused's counsel may see to it that the accused has a fair and impartial trial and that nothing is done that would in any wise tend to the accused's prejudice. Jones v. State, 57 Ga. App. 344, 195 S.E. 316 (1938).

Trial court's actions did not deny defendant's right to counsel. — Because the trial court questioned both the defendant and trial counsel about their communications, made several suggestions about how to settle any differences, allowed the defendant and counsel a break during trial to attempt to settle any differences, and then continued the trial on the premise that it would be unfair to the defendant to bring in a new lawyer halfway through the trial to continue representing the defendant, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in requiring the defendant to proceed with trial counsel and did not deny the defendant a right to counsel; moreover, there was no indication in the record that trial counsel was unwilling or unable to effectively represent the defendant. McCoy v. State, 285 Ga. App. 246, 645 S.E.2d 728 (2007).

Subsequent custodial police interview violated right to counsel. — While non-custodial and custodial statements were properly admitted, as not vitiating the defendant's constitutional rights once defendant invoked the right to counsel, a subsequent interview initiated by police violated this right; as a result, cocaine seized through information obtained from the interview had to be suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree. Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Counsel protects accused from ignorance of the accused's constitutional and legal rights. — Purpose of the constitutional guaranty of a right to counsel is to protect an accused from conviction resulting from the accused's own ignorance of the accused's legal and constitutional rights, and the guaranty would be nullified by a determination that an accused's ignorant failure to claim the accused's rights removes the protection of the Constitution. Wilcoxon v. Aldredge, 192 Ga. 634, 15 S.E.2d 873 (1941), later appeal, 193 Ga. 661, 19 S.E.2d 499, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 626, 63 S. Ct. 36, 87 L. Ed. 506 (1942).

Constitutional provision restrains courts and legislature from denying right to counsel. — This provision absolutely guarantees one accused of a crime the right to have the assistance of counsel and be heard at one's trial, and was no doubt inserted in the Constitution to abrogate the common-law practice under which prisoners accused of a felony were denied such right, and to restrain the legislature from denying it by statute. Harris v. Norris, 188 Ga. 610, 4 S.E.2d 840 (1939).

The right of benefit and privilege of counsel should be strictly guarded and preserved. Jones v. State, 57 Ga. App. 344, 195 S.E. 316 (1938); McGhee v. State, 71 Ga. App. 52, 30 S.E.2d 54 (1944).

Privilege belongs to every citizen and cannot be denied. — This is a privilege which belongs to every citizen of this state without the slightest reference to the citizen's condition in life, and cannot be legally denied the citizen by the courts. Summerour v. Fortson, 174 Ga. 862, 164 S.E. 809 (1932).

Threshold right to assistance of counsel is no less momentous to accused deciding whether to plead guilty than to an accused who stands trial. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

Conflict of interest not proven. — Because, at the time of trial, the public defender's office was no longer representing the confidential informant involved in two sales of cocaine charged against defendant, and no evidence was presented that counsel was less vigorous in counsel's cross-examination, the trial court did not err in denying counsel's motion to withdraw. Banks v. State, 270 Ga. App. 221, 606 S.E.2d 34 (2004).

Average defendant does not have skill for self representation. — The right to counsel embodies a realistic recognition of the obvious truth that the average defendant does not have the professional legal skill to protect oneself when brought before a tribunal with power to take the defendant's life or liberty. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

Georgia Supreme Court's interpretation of right to counsel for misdemeanor prosecutions. — Although the right to counsel extends to misdemeanor prosecutions when imprisonment may result (Argersinger v. Hamlin, 407 U.S. 25, 92 S. Ct. 2006, 32 L. Ed. 2d 530 (1972)), the Georgia Supreme Court has interpreted Argersinger as requiring that a defendant in a misdemeanor criminal prosecution be entitled to counsel only when the defendant is sentenced to actual imprisonment. Capelli v. State, 203 Ga. App. 79, 416 S.E.2d 136 (1992).

Right extends to all prosecutions. — Right to private counsel attached in all criminal prosecutions not merely those resulting in imprisonment or fine; the defendant did not knowingly and intelligently waive the right to counsel since there was no evidence of relinquishment of the right. Barnes v. State, 261 Ga. App. 112, 581 S.E.2d 727 (2003).

Pro se defendant has no right to standby counsel, and therefore, since the defendant made a knowing and intelligent waiver of defendant's right to counsel, including the presence of standby counsel, the defendant had no room to complain when the trial court did not provide defendant with standby counsel. Bush v. State, 268 Ga. App. 200, 601 S.E.2d 511 (2004).

Pro se defendant's failure to subpoena witnesses. — When the defendant was offered ample opportunity to subpoena witnesses, but did not comply with basic rules of criminal procedure, declining assistance, declining to make a proffer of their testimony, and failing to present the state with a list 10 days before trial, the defendant was not denied the Sixth Amendment right to represent oneself effectively, based on a failure to timely serve subpoenas on defense witnesses. Clark v. State, 278 Ga. App. 412, 629 S.E.2d 103 (2006).

Question was not a request for counsel. — Question by a defendant as to whether the defendant would have been arrested if the defendant asked for an attorney was not a clear request for counsel that required cessation of police questioning or clarification before continuing the interrogation and there was no evidence that the statement was given in fear of injury or for a hope of benefit; additionally, while the investigator lied to the defendant throughout the interview about the existence and amount of inculpatory evidence, nothing suggested that the investigator sought to procure a false statement. Wright v. State, 279 Ga. App. 155, 630 S.E.2d 656 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress because the defendant's question about counsel was equivocal. Dunlap v. State, 291 Ga. 51, 727 S.E.2d 468 (2012).

Right to choice of counsel. — Because the defendant was properly advised about retaining appointed counsel, but requested a change of counsel at trial, the trial court could have concluded that the request was a dilatory tactic; consequently, the trial court did not err in requiring the defendant to choose between representation by appointed counsel and proceeding pro se. Mondragon v. State, 270 Ga. App. 780, 607 S.E.2d 914 (2004).

Right to self-representation. — Because the defendant failed to make an unequivocal assertion of a right to self-representation, and raised no objection after being informed that defense counsel and an associate would assist in the defense, the right was not violated. Moore v. State, 280 Ga. App. 894, 635 S.E.2d 253 (2006).

Defendant's pro se representation did not warrant reversal of convictions, despite the fact that the defendant's waiver of counsel was not knowingly and voluntarily made, as any error in the waiver was harmless, given that: (1) stand-by counsel assisted the defendant with procedural matters, jury instructions, and closing argument; (2) the state presented strong evidence of the defendant's guilt; (3) the defendant understood the nature of the charges filed; and (4) the defendant filed numerous pro se motions prior to trial, and successfully moved to exclude two potential jurors and to sequester witnesses; thus, as a result of the defendant's actions, the defendant was not mentally incompetent. Granville v. State, 281 Ga. App. 465, 636 S.E.2d 173 (2006).

Trial court did not err in refusing to appoint the defendant counsel at the motion to suppress hearing and allowing the defendant to represent oneself at trial as the trial court found that the defendant made an informed and voluntary choice to relinquish the right to counsel; the trial court repeatedly informed the defendant of the dangers of self-representation and the defendant was advised of the nature of the charges and the possible punishment. Horne v. State, 318 Ga. App. 484, 733 S.E.2d 487 (2012).

Right to counsel in one case did not extend to unrelated murder investigation. — Defendant was not deprived of counsel in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 when the defendant made statements to police in the murder case after the defendant had been assigned counsel on a theft charge that occurred in a different county hours after the murder; the appointment of counsel in the theft case did not extend to the murder case, as they were not closely related, and the theft involved different victims from the murder, occurred well after the murder, and occurred at a different location than the murder. Chenoweth v. State, 281 Ga. 7, 635 S.E.2d 730 (2006).

Assistance of counsel denied. — Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal of the denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea. It was obvious that the defendant had attempted to appeal the denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw and that the defendant's request for counsel to help the defendant pursue the defendant's appeal had never been ruled upon; prejudice was presumed and the harmless error analysis did not apply since there had been a total denial of the assistance of counsel. Stockton v. State, 298 Ga. App. 84, 679 S.E.2d 109 (2009).

5. Effective Assistance of Counsel

A. In General

Right to counsel is right to effective counsel. Jones v. State, 243 Ga. 820, 256 S.E.2d 907, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 957, 100 S. Ct. 437, 62 L. Ed. 2d 329 (1979).

Elements of effective and competent counsel. — As to the requirement under the Fourteenth Amendment, the services of counsel meet the requirement of the due process clause when the counsel is a member in good standing at the bar, gives the client complete loyalty, serves the client in good faith to the best of counsel's ability, and counsel's service is of such character as to preserve the essential integrity of the proceedings at a trial in a court of justice. Counsel is not required to be infallible. Counsel may make some mistakes. A client is entitled to a fair trial, not a perfect one. Jones v. Balkcom, 210 Ga. 262, 79 S.E.2d 1 (1953), cert. denied, 347 U.S. 956, 74 S. Ct. 682, 98 L. Ed. 1101 (1954).

When inadequate representation of counsel is alleged, the reviewing court normally considers whether the defendant had a defense which was not presented; whether trial counsel consulted with the accused and adequately investigated the facts and the law; and whether the omissions charged to trial counsel resulted from inadequate preparation, rather than from unwise trial tactics. Ealy v. State, 251 Ga. 426, 306 S.E.2d 275 (1983).

To show ineffective assistance of counsel, a defendant who pleads guilty must show that the defendant's counsel erred and that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's errors, the defendant would not have pled guilty and would have insisted on going to trial. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 897, 581 S.E.2d 407 (2003).

First defendant did not show that the first defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel; the first defendant could not show that the failure to challenge the joint trial of the first defendant and the second defendant was error and the first defendant's claim that the first defendant should have challenged the opening and closing statements of the second defendant's counsel that the first defendant was the gunman did not show ineffective assistance because an objection would have been futile given the fact that the statements of the second defendant's counsel were not evidence. Bennett v. State, 266 Ga. App. 502, 597 S.E.2d 565 (2004).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit because the defendant failed to: (1) show prejudice resulting from counsel's alleged ineffectiveness by failing to impeach two witnesses on cross-examination with prior statements they made; and (2) make and, in all likelihood, could not have made, a strong showing that the identification testimony would have been suppressed had trial counsel so moved. Rivers v. State, 283 Ga. 1, 655 S.E.2d 594 (2008).

In determining prejudice on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim under Strickland, a defendant has to show that there was a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different; Georgia cases that deviated from that standard by eliminating the reasonable probability language, thereby putting a more stringent burden on the defendant, are thus disapproved. Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009).

Case was remanded for a hearing on the issue of ineffective assistance of first appellate counsel because the supreme court could not determine from the record whether the defendant was unable to meet the standard for ineffective assistance of first appellate counsel since the trial court's order did not specifically address the issue. Lewis v. State, 291 Ga. 273, 731 S.E.2d 51 (2012).

Defendant not entitled to perfect counsel but reasonably competent counsel. — Constitutional right to assistance of counsel means not errorless counsel and not counsel judged ineffective by hindsight, but counsel reasonably likely to render and rendering reasonably effective assistance. Jones v. State, 243 Ga. 820, 256 S.E.2d 907, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 957, 100 S. Ct. 437, 62 L. Ed. 2d 329 (1979); Suits v. State, 150 Ga. App. 285, 257 S.E.2d 306 (1979); Zant v. Campbell, 245 Ga. 368, 265 S.E.2d 22 (1980); Birt v. Hopper, 245 Ga. 221, 265 S.E.2d 276 (1980); Rosser v. State, 156 Ga. App. 463, 274 S.E.2d 812 (1980); Galloway v. State, 165 Ga. App. 536, 301 S.E.2d 894 (1983); Johnson v. State, 165 Ga. App. 773, 302 S.E.2d 626 (1983); Jackson v. State, 167 Ga. App. 509, 306 S.E.2d 757 (1983); Veit v. State, 182 Ga. App. 753, 357 S.E.2d 113 (1987).

United States Constitution does not guarantee every criminal defendant the assistance of perfect, errorless counsel, or counsel judged by hindsight nor will the court grant habeas relief upon a mere showing that the defense counsel's strategy foundered; even an erroneous sentence estimate by defense counsel does not vitiate the voluntariness of the defendant's plea. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

Defendant is entitled to counsel likely to render and in fact rendering reasonably effective assistance; of course, this standard does not require errorless counsel, nor is it intended to require that an attorney's performance be ideal in every strategic or substantive particular. Blake v.

Zant, 513 F. Supp. 772 (S.D. Ga. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 718 F.2d 979 (11th Cir. 1983), vacated on other grounds sub nom., Burger v. Zant, 467 U.S. 1212, 104 S. Ct. 2652, 81 L. Ed. 2d 360 (1984).

It is only necessary that counsel's performance fall within a sphere of reasonable legal skill and practice. Blake v. Zant, 513 F. Supp. 772 (S.D. Ga. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 718 F.2d 979 (11th Cir. 1983), vacated on other grounds sub nom., Burger v. Zant, 467 U.S. 1212, 104 S. Ct. 2652, 81 L. Ed. 2d 360 (1984).

Relief from conviction when trial was farce, or representation in bad faith. — It is the general rule that relief from a final conviction on the ground of incompetent or ineffective counsel under this paragraph will be granted only when the trial was a farce, or a mockery of justice, or was shocking to the conscience of the reviewing court, or the purported representation was only perfunctory, in bad faith, a sham, a pretense, or without adequate opportunity for a conference and preparation. Lawyers are not required to be infallible. The ability and faithfulness of an attorney is not to be judged by whether the lawyer won or lost the verdict. Beavers v. State, 132 Ga. App. 94, 207 S.E.2d 550 (1974).

Lack of skill and incompetency of attorney is imputed to defendant who employed the attorney, the acts of the attorney thus becoming those of the client and so recognized and accepted by the court, unless the defendant repudiates them by making known to the court at the time of the defendant's objection to or lack of concurrence in them. A defendant cannot seemingly acquiesce in the attorney's defense of the defendant or the defense's lack of it and, after the trial has resulted adversely to the defendant, obtain a new trial because of the incompetency, negligence, fraud, or unskillfulness of the defendant's attorney. Jones v. Balkcom, 210 Ga. 262, 79 S.E.2d 1 (1953), cert. denied, 347 U.S. 956, 74 S. Ct. 682, 98 L. Ed. 1101 (1954).

Requirements for showing ineffective counsel. — Defendant did not show that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel, as defendant did not show either part of the two-part

Strickland test for establishing ineffective assistance of counsel, namely that counsel performed deficiently or that defendant was sufficiently prejudiced by counsel's deficient performance; accordingly, defendant's allegation that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel was insufficient to overcome the strong presumption that counsel performed effectively. Bishop v. State, 266 Ga. App. 129, 596 S.E.2d 674 (2004).

In order to show counsel was ineffective, a defendant must show both that counsel's performance was deficient and that the deficient performance was prejudicial to the defense. Defendant did not show ineffective assistance of counsel: (1) since counsel was not obligated to raise a novel legal issue challenging the vagueness of the robbery by snatching statute; (2) since counsel was not obligated to raise a challenge under O.C.G.A. § 17-7-53.1 as there was no showing that two prior indictments were quashed, which was a prerequisite to application of the statute; and (3) since there was no prejudice to the defendant in counsel failing to request a verbal description from the victim of the victim's reenactment of the crime. Hughes v. State, 266 Ga. App. 652, 598 S.E.2d 43 (2004).

When issue must be raised. — Since appellate counsel did not raise the issue of ineffective assistance of trial counsel at the earliest possible moment, namely defendant's motion for a new trial, that claim was procedurally barred. Harden v. State, 278 Ga. 40, 597 S.E.2d 380 (2004).

When the defendant attempted to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim related to appointed counsel's pre-trial ineffectiveness, but was cut off from making this argument by the trial court, apparently because the trial court mistakenly believed that the claim related to the defendant's own ineffectiveness, the claim was raised at the earliest practicable moment. Robinson v. State, 288 Ga. App. 219, 653 S.E.2d 810 (2007).

Defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel with respect to the defendant's guilty plea was waived because it was not raised below. Blackmon v. State, 297 Ga. App. 99, 676 S.E.2d 413 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal to vacate a void sentence because the defendant's remedy had to be pursued in a habeas corpus action; the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims could not be resolved by reference to facts contained in the record and had to be developed in a post-plea hearing. Shelton v. State, 307 Ga. App. 599, 705 S.E.2d 699 (2011).

Right does not attach before defendant charged. — Given the totality of the circumstances, and the defendant's age, education, and knowledge of both the substance of the charge and nature of the rights to an attorney and to remain silent, because the defendant voluntarily gave a statement to a police detective about an uncharged armed robbery, absent any threats, coercion, or promises in exchange for doing so, the statement was admissible. Swain v. State, 285 Ga. App. 550, 647 S.E.2d 88 (2007).

Claim of ineffective assistance not preserved. — Because the defendant failed to provide any citations to either the law or the record, let alone an application of authority to that record amounting to legal argument, in support of an ineffective assistance of counsel assertion, this issue was deemed abandoned on appeal. Gore v. State, 272 Ga. App. 156, 611 S.E.2d 764 (2005).

Defendant's failure to file a motion for new trial asserting the ineffectiveness of trial counsel barred review of the claim on appeal. Swan v. State, No. A05A0891, 2005 Ga. App. LEXIS 906 (Aug. 15, 2005).

Defendant failed to preserve defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim as the defendant failed to raise it in defendant's motion for a new trial; additionally, defendant failed to request an evidentiary hearing on defendant's claim, which waived defendant's right to an evidentiary hearing. Capps v. State, 273 Ga. App. 696, 615 S.E.2d 821 (2005).

Because the defendant failed to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim at the first practicable opportunity, specifically when newly appointed counsel filed an amended motion for a new trial, the claim was waived. Simmons v. State, 281 Ga. 437, 637 S.E.2d 709 (2006).

Defendant waived the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim as if a motion for new trial filed by a trial counsel was without effect because the defendant was not then represented by the trial counsel, and if the defendant filed a timely and effective pro-se notice of appeal, then the defendant was in the same position as a new counsel, and the defendant was required to raise the ineffectiveness of the trial counsel at the defendant's first opportunity and the failure to timely raise the ineffectiveness issue in the trial court barred consideration of the issue on appeal; alternatively, if the defendant was represented by the trial counsel when the latter filed a motion for new trial, then the pro-se notice of appeal was premature so long as the motion remained pending and the defendant then could have pursued an ineffective assistance claim through the defendant's post-trial counsel, but elected not to do so. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Defendant abandoned claims of insufficient investigation and trial preparation when the claims were merely general and bald assertions, unsupported by argument or citation of authority. Sampson v. State, 282 Ga. 82, 646 S.E.2d 60 (2007).

In a battery prosecution, setting aside the defendant's failure to object to a second attorney's representation at trial, a denial from the defendant's first attorney of an alleged promise to represent the defendant after that counsel's suspension had expired gave the trial court sufficient grounds for finding that no such promise occurred, eliminating the defendant's denial of the right to counsel claim; moreover, inasmuch as the defendant failed to challenge the trial court's finding that the second attorney's representation was effective, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial. Northington v. State, 287 Ga. App. 96, 650 S.E.2d 760 (2007).

A defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective in failing to reserve objections to a "level of certainty" jury charge was waived because the defendant did not raise the issue in the defendant's written motion for new trial or at the hearing on the motion. Olivaria v. State, 286 Ga. App. 856, 650 S.E.2d 422 (2007).

Because the defendant did not claim below that trial counsel was ineffective for opening the door to impeachment, the defendant failed to timely raise this argument, and thus the claim was waived for purposes of appeal; as a result, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on ineffective assistance of counsel grounds. Lipsey v. State, 287 Ga. App. 835, 652 S.E.2d 870 (2007).

Because the record on appeal failed to show that the defendant moved to withdraw a guilty plea due to ineffective assistance of counsel, and the only evidence on this issue was the transcript of the guilty plea hearing, none of the defendant's complaints could be resolved by the transcript, and, thus, the defendant was not entitled to any further relief on the claim. Duffey v. State, 289 Ga. App. 141, 656 S.E.2d 167 (2007).

Because the defendant abandoned a claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to call a witness necessary to the defense, as the defendant completely failed to identify the witness, and presented no argument, reference to the record, nor citations of authority to support the claim, that claim presented no basis to support the defendant's amended motion for a new trial. Moreover, even if the claim had not been deemed abandoned, the appeals court found it lacked merit. Bennett v. State, 289 Ga. App. 110, 657 S.E.2d 6 (2008).

Because the defendant had not sought a new trial on the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel, defendant had not preserved the issue for appellate review; moreover, because defense counsel had not been called upon to explain counsel's actions, those actions were presumed strategic. Banks v. State, 290 Ga. App. 887, 660 S.E.2d 873 (2008).

Defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective for not raising the issue of the validity of the defendant's prior convictions was procedurally barred because the defendant had not raised the issue in the defendant's motion for new trial. The defendant could not resuscitate the issue by raising the issue under the guise of an ineffective assistance of appellate counsel claim. McGlocklin v. State, 292 Ga. App. 162, 664 S.E.2d 552 (2008).

Because the defendant, through new counsel, could have, but did not, raise an ineffectiveness claim at the hearing on the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea, the issue was waived. Boykins v. State, 298 Ga. App. 654, 680 S.E.2d 665 (2009).

Although the defendant claimed that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to file a special demurrer regarding the time frame for molestation claims, this issue was not raised in the motion for new trial or the amended motion for new trial filed by appellate counsel, and was never raised or argued in the hearing on the motion for new trial; this constituted a failure to assert the matter at the earliest practicable opportunity and, thus, was a waiver of the right to pursue the issue on appeal. Sarratt v. State, 299 Ga. App. 568, 683 S.E.2d 10 (2009).

Because the defendant's allegation of ineffective assistance based on unconstitutional vagueness was not raised on motion for new trial by appellate counsel, who had been appointed following the defendant's conviction, it was waived; the defendant did not raise the purported deficient performance at the hearing on the amended motion for new trial. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. 392, 687 S.E.2d 799 (2010).

Defendant's contentions that defendant's trial counsel provided ineffective assistance by presenting inconsistent theories of defense, which did not directly rebut the state's case, and by failing to request a charge on theft by taking as a lesser included offense of armed robbery were not before the court of appeals to review and were deemed waived because the contentions were not presented to the trial court as bases for the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, and the trial court did not rule on those claims. Miller v. State, 305 Ga. App. 620, 700 S.E.2d 617 (2010).

Because the defendant did not support the assertion that trial counsel was ineffective by citation to the record or argument or even a description of the manner in which the defendant alleged trial counsel's performance was deficient, the enumeration of error was deemed abandoned. Arroyo v. State, 309 Ga. App. 494, 711 S.E.2d 60 (2011).

Defendant's enumerations asserting ineffective assistance were deemed abandoned because the enumerations were not supported by argument or by citations to the record or to relevant authority as required by Ga. Ct. App. R. 25(c)(2); to the extent the claims involve trial counsel's decisions as to whether to object to testimony, to introduce evidence, or to request a particular jury charge, the enumerations concerned matters of trial tactics and strategy. Sevostyanova v. State, 313 Ga. App. 729, 722 S.E.2d 333 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C0968, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 612 (Ga. 2012).

Habeas court erred in granting the petitioner's application for habeas corpus relief because the court should not have reached the petitioner's claims of ineffective assistance since those claims had been waived; the petitioner never claimed that appellate counsel committed ineffective assistance by failing to timely raise claims that trial counsel was ineffective. Tompkins v. Hall, 291 Ga. 224, 728 S.E.2d 621 (2012).

Ineffective assistance of counsel not properly before appellate court.

— Whether trial counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel was not properly before the appellate court as the defendant was represented on appeal by trial counsel; the defendant was apprised of the need for new counsel to pursue the ineffectiveness issue and waived appellate review by electing to retain the defendant's trial counsel as the defendant's counsel on appeal. Capps v. State, 273 Ga. App. 696, 615 S.E.2d 821 (2005).

Claims of ineffective assistance were not properly before the court on appeal because they were not raised as ineffective assistance claims in the defendant's motion for new trial. Bryant v. State, 282 Ga. 631, 651 S.E.2d 718 (2007).

Remand warranted when ineffectiveness claim could not be resolved by the appellate record. — Because the defendant's claim as to the pre-trial ineffective assistance of appointed counsel could not be resolved by the record on appeal, the trial court's denial of a new trial as to that claim was reversed, and the case was remanded for a hearing on that claim only. Robinson v. State, 288 Ga. App. 219, 653 S.E.2d 810 (2007).

Case was remanded to the trial court for a hearing and determination on the defendant's ineffective assistance claim because the defendant's argument that the defendant was prejudiced by trial counsel's failure to call an expert could not be decided as a matter of law based on the existing record. Elrod v. State, 316 Ga. App. 491, 729 S.E.2d 593 (2012).

Defendant failed to proffer testimony of witness whom defendant argued counsel should have contacted.

— A defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel argument failed because the defendant had not proffered at the hearing on the defendant's motion for new trial the testimony of the witnesses whom the defendant argued that defense counsel should have contacted. Williams v. State, 287 Ga. App. 361, 651 S.E.2d 768 (2007).

Hearing required on pro se motion for substitute counsel. — When the issue of the effectiveness of appointed counsel is raised in motions for substitute counsel and for a new trial, the trial court, in order to insure that the defendant's right to counsel has been and will continue to be afforded, should conduct a hearing as to the basis of the defendant's motion for appointment of new counsel. DeLoach v. State, 198 Ga. App. 880, 403 S.E.2d 866 (1991).

Effective counsel regardless of whether attorney is retained or court-appointed. — Unless a defendant charged with a serious offense has counsel able to invoke the procedural and substantive safeguards that distinguish the system of justice, a serious risk of injustice infects the trial itself and, when a state obtains a criminal conviction through such a trial, it is the state that unconstitutionally deprives the defendant of liberty; thus, since the state's conduct of a criminal trial itself implicates the state in the defendant's conviction, there is no basis for drawing a distinction between retained and appointed counsel that would deny equal justice to defendants who must choose their own lawyers. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

A defendant is entitled to an attorney likely to render and, in fact, rendering reasonably effective assistance, whether that attorney be retained or court-appointed; this standard is to be applied with particular care in capital cases. Blake v. Zant, 513 F. Supp. 772 (S.D. Ga. 1981), rev'd on other grounds, 718 F.2d 979 (11th Cir. 1983), vacated on other grounds, Burger v. Zant, 467 U.S. 1212, 104 S. Ct. 2652, 81 L. Ed. 2d 360 (1984).

General rule that incompetence of counsel does not constitute ground for new trial.

— Incompetence, negligence, or unfaithfulness of the defendant's counsel who was selected by the defendant in the trial of a criminal case does not as a general rule constitute a ground for a new trial, nor call for application of constitutional guarantees of the defendant's full right to the benefit of counsel, nor for application of the Fourteenth Amendment. Jones v. Balkcom, 210 Ga. 262, 79 S.E.2d 1 (1953), cert. denied, 347 U.S. 956, 74 S. Ct. 682, 98 L. Ed. 1101 (1954).

Receipt of fee from family and indigent fund was not proven to have made counsel ineffective based upon a conflict of interest argument even though counsel was wrong to have accepted money from both sources. Franks v. State, 278 Ga. 246, 599 S.E.2d 134 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1058, 125 S. Ct. 870, 160 L. Ed. 2d 784 (2005).

Responsibility of appointed counsel to give full representation. — However low or poor the defendant may be, the defendant can rely upon this right, and the same due responsibility rests upon counsel appointed by the court to represent the defendant as if counsel received the fullest pecuniary compensation. Jones v. State, 57 Ga. App. 344, 195 S.E. 316 (1938).

Presumption that appointed counsel properly represented client. — When one accused of crime was upon one's trial defended by an attorney at law appointed for this purpose by the presiding judge, it will, unless there be clear and convincing proof to the contrary, be presumed that this attorney did the attorney's duty in the premises and properly represented the client. Brown v. State, 76 Ga. App. 7, 45 S.E.2d 80 (1947).

In evaluating an attorney's performance for purposes of considering a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, there is a strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance. Horne v. State, 260 Ga. App. 640, 580 S.E.2d 644 (2003).

With regard to the defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation and two counts of child molestation after a bench trial, because the defendant failed to call trial counsel at the hearing on the defendant's motion for a new trial, the defendant was unable to establish that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel at trial based on trial counsel: (1) failing to adequately investigate the case; (2) failing to present an interview report as evidence; and (3) failing to object to hearsay testimony regarding the victims' abuse allegations; therefore, the presumption remained that trial counsel strategically elected not to offer the interview report as evidence. Further, even if the child victim's statements were not admissible under the child hearsay statute, there was no ineffective assistance since the defendant confirmed the statements through the defendant's own trial testimony. Brumbelow v. State, 289 Ga. App. 520, 657 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

Strong and convincing proof to contrary necessary to overcome presumption that counsel properly represented client. — Attorneys are officers of the court and are presumed to do as the law and their duty require them. When an attorney is appointed by the court to defend a person accused of crime who is unable to employ counsel, it is to be presumed that the attorney will discharge the attorney's full duty in the premises. It is also to be presumed that the court, in appointing counsel for this purpose, will appoint attorneys who have sufficient skill and learning to defend the accused properly. Before a court should grant a new trial upon the ground that counsel failed to do their duty in this respect, there should be strong and convincing proof to overcome the presumption to the contrary. Wilcoxon v. Aldredge, 193 Ga. 661, 19 S.E.2d 499, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 626, 63 S. Ct. 36, 87 L. Ed. 506 (1942).

In the absence of satisfactory proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that counsel assigned to represent the interests of an accused are of sufficient experience and possess the requisite legal attainment to satisfy the constitutional requirement of the privilege and benefit of counsel. Wilcoxon v. Aldredge, 193 Ga. 661, 19 S.E.2d 499, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 626, 63 S. Ct. 36, 87 L. Ed. 506 (1942).

In a burglary case, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial, which was based on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, because the defendant did not carry the burden of showing that the counsel's performance was deficient. Burdette v. State, 276 Ga. App. 695, 624 S.E.2d 253 (2005).

Acquittal on most serious charges supports effectiveness of counsel. — Defendant's acquittal on the three most serious charges strongly supported the conclusion that defense counsel was effective. Noellien v. State, 298 Ga. App. 47, 679 S.E.2d 75 (2009).

Acquittal on number of counts shows effectiveness. — Trial counsel successfully obtained directed verdicts of acquittal on a number of the charges against defendant, which strongly supported the conclusion that the assistance actually rendered fell within that broad range of reasonably effective assistance. Sarratt v. State, 299 Ga. App. 568, 683 S.E.2d 10 (2009).

Defense counsel's decision to have the defendant's entire interview with police played to the jury did not amount to ineffective assistance, but was one of informed trial strategy, as counsel was able to use the entire interview to show that it was improperly conducted; moreover, such was particularly true when the jury acquitted the defendant of several offenses charged in the indictment. Jackson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 506, 636 S.E.2d 694 (2006).

Differences in conduct of defense amongst varying lawyers does not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. — While another lawyer or other lawyers, had they represented the petitioner upon petitioner's trial, might have conducted petitioner's defense in a different manner, and might have exercised different judgments with respect to the matters referred to in the petition, the fact that petitioner's attorneys chose to try the petitioner's case in the manner in which it was tried and made certain decisions as to the conduct of the defense with which the petitioner and the petitioner's presently employed attorneys now disagree, does not require a finding that their representation of the petitioner was so inadequate as to amount to a denial to petitioner of the effective assistance of counsel. Johnson v. Caldwell, 228 Ga. 776, 187 S.E.2d 844 (1972); Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 192, 264 S.E.2d 715 (1980); Chapman v. State, 154 Ga. App. 532, 268 S.E.2d 797 (1980).

Decisions as to what witnesses to call and what motions to file are the exclusive province of the lawyer after consultation with the client. Jackson v. State, 167 Ga. App. 509, 306 S.E.2d 757 (1983).

Simply because other lawyers might have exercised different judgments and conducted the defendant's defense in a different manner does not require a finding that defense counsel's representation of the defendant was so inadequate as to amount to a denial of effective assistance of counsel. Mason v. State, 180 Ga. App. 235, 348 S.E.2d 754 (1986).

Competence of counsel was issue of fact and properly decided by trial court. — When a ground of the motion for new trial was that the attorney who was employed by the defendant and who represented the defendant upon the trial was of unsound mind and incompetent to try the case, and was supported by the affidavits of two lawyers, and the state made a countershowning by introducing affidavits of four lawyers to the effect that the attorney was of sound mind and was skilled and competent, an issue of fact for decision by the trial judge was presented, and the judge's decision thereon would not be disturbed by the Supreme Court. Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955).

Defendant must make affirmative showing of counsel's incompetency.

— Because the defendant failed to support an ineffective assistance of counsel claim with affirmative evidence showing an infringement of rights or a procedural irregularity in the taking of a prior guilty plea, and the defendant failed to show that an objection by trial counsel to the introduction of the prior plea would have been successful, a claim that trial counsel was ineffective, thus warranting a new trial, lacked merit. Lattimore v. State, 282 Ga. App. 435, 638 S.E.2d 848 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea to five counts of theft by taking as the defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective by failing to show how counsel's alleged failure to review the evidence until shortly before trial either prejudiced the trial or influenced the defendant's decision to plead guilty. Pruitt v. State, 323 Ga. App. 689, 747 S.E.2d 694 (2013).

Ineffective counsel established as to one charge but not as to other.

— Because the defendant presented sufficient evidence to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to stipulate to the defendant's felon status or to obtain a jury charge limiting the jury's consideration of the defendant's criminal history, such failures prejudiced the defendant's defense sufficiently to require a new trial on a charge of aggravated assault; however, given the defendant's admission to possessing a gun at the time of the altercation, no prejudice resulted to warrant reversal and a new trial on the possession of a firearm by a convicted felon conviction. Starling v. State, 285 Ga. App. 474, 646 S.E.2d 695 (2007).

A new trial based on counsel's alleged ineffectiveness was properly denied because the defendant's numerous claims of ineffective assistance of counsel lacked merit; the defendant failed to show that: (1) the number of different instructions sought; (2) any additional investigation or preparation; (3) an objection to evidence of the prior difficulties between the defendant and the victim, and request for a contemporaneous limiting instruction; and (4) a request for an instruction on a defense not alleged, would have changed the outcome of the trial, and the tactical decision as to which defense to pursue was part of a reasonable trial strategy. Breazeale v. State, 290 Ga. App. 632, 660 S.E.2d 376 (2008).

Because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to request jury voir dire to determine whether jurors had seen the defendant wearing handcuffs, and because sufficient evidence supported the defendant's burglary conviction to make a directed verdict of acquittal unnecessary, a motion for a new trial was properly denied. Brown v. State, 289 Ga. App. 297, 656 S.E.2d 582 (2008).

Because the trial court was entitled to believe counsel's testimony at the hearing on the motion for new trial that counsel advised the defendant of the right to testify at trial and that counsel met numerous times with the defendant, with ample opportunity to discuss all aspects of the case with counsel, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim in support of a motion for a new trial had to be rejected. Warren v. State, 283 Ga. 42, 656 S.E.2d 803 (2008).

Court of appeals rejected the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim, because, even if: (1) the arrest warrant had been excluded; (2) two witnesses had been cross-examined regarding their identification of the defendant as the shooter; and (3) the nontestifying eyewitnesses' statements had not been relayed to the jury by the police officer, there was no reasonable probability that the defendant would have been acquitted of both crimes. Bradley v. State, 283 Ga. 45, 656 S.E.2d 842 (2008).

Ineffective counsel not shown. — A new trial was unwarranted because: (1) the decision not to present the defendant's love interest as an alibi witness was clearly strategic, and thus, could not serve as the basis for an ineffectiveness claim; and (2) counsel's alleged failure to specifically object to the victim's testimony on bolstering and not on leading and speculation grounds impermissibly expanded the enumerated error. Scott v. State, 288 Ga. App. 738, 655 S.E.2d 326 (2007).

Since defendant's trial counsel testified at the hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial as to the strategic reasons counsel had for taking certain actions that counsel did in the defense of defendant and counsel's explanations were supported by the record, defendant did not show that counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel in defending the defendant because no showing was made that counsel performed deficiently. Glenn v. State, 279 Ga. 277, 612 S.E.2d 478 (2005).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied because defendant did not establish that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel. Defendant was aware of all of the charges against the defendant, defendant did not inform counsel that there were jurors that defendant wished to have stricken, it was sound trial strategy to not cross-examine the witness because the witness's testimony would have hurt defendant, counsel did not request a charge on the voluntariness of defendant's confession because it contradicted the defense of coercion, the evidence adequately demonstrated that defendant was intoxicated when defendant committed the assault and robbery, and the discrepancy in the victim's testimony regarding the car the perpetrator drove was not material since defendant confessed to the crime. Blocker v. State, 265 Ga. App. 846, 595 S.E.2d 654 (2004).

Because trial counsel's actions involved strategic decisions or failed to harm defendant and defendant could only pursue a claim against appellate counsel through a habeas corpus proceeding, defendant did not carry the burden of proving ineffective assistance. Miller v. State, 273 Ga. App. 171, 614 S.E.2d 796 (2005), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 90 (Ga. 2007).

Despite the fact that defendant failed to satisfy defendant's responsibility under the Rules of the Georgia Court of Appeals after a review of the record in the appellate court's discretion, defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed as defendant's trial counsel's stipulation to a witness's prior testimony, made under oath, before the judge, and subject to trial counsel's searching cross-examination on defendant's behalf regarding this same case, did not constitute an unreasonable or incompetent strategy. Stuart v. State, 274 Ga. App. 120, 616 S.E.2d 855 (2005).

Because, inter alia, defendant's counsel requested a full and complete recollection of the trial, there was no evidence that a change of venue was warranted, counsel thoroughly investigated the case, and there was no evidence of prosecutorial misconduct, defendant failed to demonstrate any deficiency by trial counsel or that defendant was prejudiced thereby. Hampton v. State, 279 Ga. 625, 619 S.E.2d 616 (2005).

Despite defendant's numerous claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, none had merit as counsel was not ineffective in failing to: (1) raise a statute of limitations defense concerning the conviction for voluntary manslaughter; (2) challenge the constitutionality of O.C.G.A. § 17-2-2(h); (3) object to testimony by defendant's former spouse that defendant was a beneficiary of the victim's life insurance policy; (4) make a contemporaneous objection to the prosecutor's comment in opening argument that defendant failed to contact the police, as such would have been meritless; (5) object to inadmissible evidence of defendant's bad character; (6) request a limiting similar transaction instruction contemporaneously with the testimony of the similar acts; (7) object when the prosecutor gave a personal opinion as to defendant's guilt; (8) object to testimony and argument as to defendant's future dangerousness; (9) file a motion to suppress statements defendant made to law enforcement after the defendant retained counsel; (10) request a jury charge with respect to the potential motive, interest, or bias of the state's witnesses; (11) object when a state's witness testified to the witness's belief of the veracity of another witness; (12) reserve objections to the final charge of the trial court; and (13) object to the prosecutor's argument of facts not in evidence. Glidewell v. State, 279 Ga. App. 114, 630 S.E.2d 621 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Reynolds v. State, 285 Ga. 70, 673 S.E.2d 854 (2009).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected as the defendant's broad assertions that trial counsel was not adequately prepared, provided weak advocacy, engaged in superficial cross-examination, and failed to object to certain testimony regarding trial tactics. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial on grounds that trial counsel was ineffective as the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different if counsel would have: (1) filed a motion for funds to hire an expert on the reliability of cross-racial eyewitness identification and proffer what the testimony of this expert would have been; (2) verified that funds had been withdrawn from the respective ATM machines on the date of the crime or ascertain whether surveillance cameras might have refuted the state's evidence that the defendant was in the carjacked vehicle; and (3) proffered favorable testimony the defendant alleged could have been provided by the two victims suggesting complicity. Pringle v. State, 281 Ga. App. 230, 635 S.E.2d 843 (2006).

Because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to remove biased jurors from the panel, object to the admission of a shotgun shell and jewelry that were the subject of the motion to suppress, and properly address material inconsistencies in one codefendant's testimony, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit. Vega v. State, 285 Ga. App. 405, 646 S.E.2d 501 (2007).

Because trial counsel was not ineffective in: (1) failing to seek suppression of criminal acts which took place in other jurisdictions and to which the defendant was connected because they were part of the crime spree that began with the murder of the victim, as such was admissible;

(2) failing to seek a mistrial when an objection to the state's opening statement, although overruled, had some merit; (3) failing to object to jury instructions on mere presence and parties to a crime, as the charges were correct statements of the law and supported by the evidence; (4) making statements in closing argument that were actually in furtherance of the defense's theory of the case; (5) entering into a stipulation with the prosecutor; and (6) failing to move for a directed verdict of acquittal, as the evidence supported the defendant's convictions, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit. Pruitt v. State, 282 Ga. 30, 644 S.E.2d 837 (2007).

Because the defendant failed to identify any defense strategy that trial counsel failed to pursue, the defendant failed to carry the burden of showing either deficient performance by counsel or any resulting prejudice that had to be established in order to succeed on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Zapien-Chavez v. State, 285 Ga. App. 319, 646 S.E.2d 311 (2007).

Despite the defendant's contrary claims, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to subpoena witnesses necessary to support a defense and failing to adequately raise all issues in the defendant's motion to suppress and motion for independent analysis of the suspected narcotics as: (1) the defendant failed to supply sufficient information about the whereabouts of the witnesses; (2) the defendant failed to produce those witnesses at the motion for a new trial hearing; (3) counsel's strategy in handling the suppression motion showed an appropriate exercise of discretion; and (4) under the theory of defense presented, counsel was not ineffective by failing to obtain an independent examination of the substance tested. McTaggart v. State, 285 Ga. App. 178, 645 S.E.2d 658 (2007).

The trial court properly denied the defendant a new trial based on numerous claims of ineffective assistance of trial counsel as counsel was not ineffective in failing to: (1) make meritless objections; (2) raise what was considered a novel legal argument; (3) file futile motions that would not have changed the outcome of trial; (4) require corroboration of the defendant's confession; and (5) anticipate that the defendant's wife might mislead the defense; moreover, the defendant's claim that counsel was inadequately prepared for trial was belied by the record. Daly v. State, 285 Ga. App. 808, 648 S.E.2d 90 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 659 (Ga. 2007); 553 U.S. 1039, 128 S. Ct. 2441, 171 L. Ed. 2d 241 (2008).

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on claims of the ineffective assistance of trial counsel as the only evidence offered to support this claim was the defendant's own hearsay testimony as to what the desired witnesses were expected to testify to at trial, and such evidence was insufficient; further, defendant failed to show that counsel's decision to forgo calling such witnesses was unreasonable. Brigman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 481, 639 S.E.2d 359 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims were without merit, because counsel: (1) adequately explained the decision not to call the defendant's spouse; (2) adequately met with the defendant to discuss the trial strategy and regarding the defendant's decision to waive the right to a jury trial; and (3) had reason to decline objection to the admission of an audio recording of the colloquy between the officers and the defendant at the scene, as that decision supported counsel's trial strategy. Defrancisco v. State, 289 Ga. App. 115, 656 S.E.2d 238 (2008).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit because: (1) the evidence supported the defendant's convictions, and thus a directed verdict was unwarranted; (2) Georgia law did not authorize a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in criminal cases; and (3) the defendant failed to show that counsel's representation and trial strategy was patently unreasonable. Arellano v. State, 289 Ga. App. 148, 656 S.E.2d 264 (2008).

Defendant did not prove that trial counsel was ineffective when the defendant did not cite to any facts in the record to support the claim, when the defendant failed to present any admissible evidence regarding what an alleged alibi witness would have said if counsel had called the witness to testify at trial, and when contrary to the defendant's claim, counsel cross-examined the victim about past drug convictions. Moreover, even if counsel was ineffective, the evidence of the defendant's guilt was overwhelming, so the defendant did not show prejudice. Rouse v. State, 295 Ga. App. 61, 670 S.E.2d 869 (2008).

Defense counsel's failure to object or move for a mistrial based on the state's introduction of evidence relating to a witness's misconduct that fell short of a conviction was not ineffective assistance under circumstances in which counsel's decisions not to object to the state's pursuit of the topic of the witness's misdemeanor driving violations, and to attempt to rehabilitate the defendant by showing the minor nature of one of them, were objectively reasonable; when the state broached the subject of the witness's incarceration just before the night in question, it might have gone on to uncover proof of that fact, which would have been admissible as contradictory of the witness's testimony that the witness was in the car with the defendant on the night before the defendant's arrest. Defense counsel could not have been faulted for failing to complete the state's work for it, or for declining to highlight any of this testimony. Noellien v. State, 298 Ga. App. 47, 679 S.E.2d 75 (2009).

Although the defendant's prior convictions might or might not have been actually admissible against the defendant under former O.C.G.A. § 24-9-84.1(b) (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-6-609), trial counsel's belief in that regard was only one of several reasons for advising the defendant not to testify; thus, evidence supported the trial court's finding that such advice was not deficient performance. Clements v. State, 299 Ga. App. 561, 683 S.E.2d 127 (2009).

Denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw defendant's guilty plea to possession of cocaine with intent to distribute was appropriate because the defendant did not prove that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel. The defendant never testified that, had the defendant proceeded to trial, the defendant wished to take the stand despite the defendant's extensive criminal history, nor did the defendant explain how the defendant or the defendant's lawyer could have made more effective use of a photograph had the defendant had more time to study the photograph prior to trial. Sims v. State, 299 Ga. App. 698, 683 S.E.2d 668 (2009).

Defendant failed to establish an ineffective assistance of counsel claim because, inter alia, with regard to counsel's failure to call various witnesses at trial, counsel testified at the motion for new trial hearing that counsel made a strategic decision not to call these witnesses as the witnesses' testimony would have undermined the defendant's justification defense at trial. Rector v. State, 285 Ga. 714, 681 S.E.2d 157, cert. denied, 558 U.S. 1081, 130 S. Ct. 807, 175 L. Ed. 2d 567 (2009).

After defendant was convicted of aggravated child molestation, child molestation, three counts of aggravated sodomy, and two counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on counsel's performance; counsel's waiver of opening argument and decision to provide a brief closing statement were strategic determinations falling within the realm of trial tactics. Counsel discussed the discovery materials with defendant, prepared a trial notebook, and consulted with defendant while preparing to cross-examine the state's witnesses; counsel was not required to object to properly admitted evidence of similar transactions. Bazin v. State, 299 Ga. App. 875, 683 S.E.2d 917 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant did not show that: (1) the defense counsel was ineffective in failing to file a motion for immunity from prosecution/plea in bar based upon the defendant's claim of self-defense as it was a matter of trial strategy and the defendant could not demonstrate how the failure to pursue such a claim harmed the defendant; (2) the defense counsel was ineffective in failing to request a jury charge on the use of force in defense of habitation; (3) the defense counsel was ineffective in failing to test the thoroughness and good faith of the State of Georgia's investigation; (4) the defense counsel was ineffective in failing to adequately investigate the case or meet with the defendant prior to trial; and (5) the defense counsel was ineffective in failing to interview and cross-examine the prosecution's witnesses as the defendant did not establish a reasonable probability that further interviews and cross-examination would have resulted in a different outcome at trial. Smith v. State, 309 Ga. App. 241, 709 S.E.2d 823 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1266, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 954 (Ga. 2011).

During the defendant's trial for child molestation and sexual exploitation of children, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to properly follow-up on other cases involving the child victims because there was only one other instance involving the children and the allegations were that their mother's new husband had touched the children improperly while bathing the children; there was no evidence in the record to show that the allegations were false, and it appeared that that was a separate case that was being investigated at the time of trial. Vaughn v. State, 307 Ga. App. 754, 706 S.E.2d 137 (2011).

Defendant's trial counsel did not represent the defendant under an impermissible conflict of interest because the representation of a testifying witness in a prior case was by another attorney in the public defender's office, not the defendant's counsel, and the prior representation was concluded and was wholly unrelated to the defendant's case. Furthermore, the defendant's attorney did not impeach the witness because the testimony of the witness was not harmful to the defendant. Finally, the defendant also failed to establish deficient performance based upon any alleged failure of the defendant's attorney to object to the admission of a DVD containing a recording of a five-hour police interview with an accomplice as this decision was part of the defense attorney's trial strategy and the trial court gave a curative instruction to the jury stating that the jury had to disregard any police statements in the recording opining on the character of the defendant. Moon v. State, 288 Ga. 508, 705 S.E.2d 649 (2011).

Defendant did not demonstrate either a Fifth Amendment or Sixth Amendment violation because the defendant made no showing of deficient performance by appointed defense counsel and pointed to no particular instance manifesting a conflict with counsel; because counsel did not entirely fail to subject the prosecution's case to meaningful adversarial testing, the defendant was not constructively denied counsel. Smith v. State, 312 Ga. App. 174, 718 S.E.2d 43 (2011).

In light of the defendant's statements to the police that placed the defendant at the scene of a crime and showed that the defendant carried a gun, the defendant was not prejudiced by trial counsel's explanation of the defendant's right to testify and explanation regarding the potential benefits of testifying. Lytle v. State, 290 Ga. 177, 718 S.E.2d 296 (2011).

Because a search warrant affidavit established probable cause even without the representation that the affiant saw the informant buy drugs from the defendant, and because the state introduced sufficient corroborating evidence of an accomplice's testimony that the drugs found in the basement of the house belonged to the defendant, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to file a motion to suppress or request a jury charge on accomplice testimony. Dickerson v. State, 312 Ga. App. 320, 718 S.E.2d 564 (2011).

Because the testimony by defendant's accomplices, a confidential informant, and the officer who participated in the drug sale, in conjunction with the audio and video tapes of the transaction, overwhelmingly established the defendant's guilt, there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been any different; consequently, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective. Williams v. State, 312 Ga. App. 693, 719 S.E.2d 501 (2011).

Defendant failed to prove ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant did not show that the result of the defendant's trial would have been different if the defense counsel had provided argument to support a motion for directed verdict, or if the counsel had been fully aware of the defendant's immigration status. Medrano v. State, 315 Ga. App. 880, 729 S.E.2d 37 (2012).

Although the defendant contended the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective because the defendant chose to pursue a theory of defense in which the defendant argued that the defendant was unaware that the defendant was being arrested and, thus, could not have knowingly resisted, instead of pursuing a defense in which the defendant argued that defendant legally resisted an unlawful arrest, counsel's decision as to which theory of defense to pursue is a matter of strategy and tactics; and, as a general rule, matters of tactics and strategy, whether wise or unwise, did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Defendant had not shown that counsel's strategy was so patently unreasonable that no competent attorney would have chosen that strategy. Zeger v. State, 306 Ga. App. 474, 702 S.E.2d 474 (2010).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective because counsel made a strategic decision not to make a frivolous objection to identification testimony, failure to object to admissible evidence was not ineffective assistance, and a motion to sever the defendant's trial from that of a codefendant would not have been successful. Jackson v. State, 316 Ga. App. 80, 729 S.E.2d 404 (2012).

Because mere allegations, without evidence explaining how trial counsel's alleged failures affected the outcome of the trial, could not support the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims, and counsel's reasons for not objecting to an officer's testimony amounted to trial strategy, the defendant's claims were rejected on appeal. Slaughter v. State, 282 Ga. App. 276, 638 S.E.2d 417 (2006).

B. Obligations of Counsel

Joint representation. — When three of four defendants each confirmed, on the record, that the defendants had discussed the case thoroughly with their counsel, and each stated that there were no conflicts of interest and each of them also stated that they were satisfied to proceed with one counsel representing all three of them, and since the trial court's decision to allow one counsel to represent the three was based on their statements to the court, if any error occurred, it was induced by these defendants' statements and induced error is impermissible. Accordingly, it was not error under the circumstances to allow one attorney to represent three of the four defendants, and the multiple representation did not result in ineffective assistance of counsel. Shirley v. State, 166 Ga. App. 456, 304 S.E.2d 468, cert. vacated, 251 Ga. 544, 307 S.E.2d 491 (1983).

Since counsel's testimony contradicted the defendant's regarding the nature and quantity of consultation and counsel's decision not to consider a co-indictee as a valuable witness was strategic or tactical, the defendant's guilty plea was not void due to ineffective assistance of counsel. McCutchen v. State, 276 Ga. 532, 579 S.E.2d 732 (2003).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel under the Sixth Amendment since: (1) trial counsel jointly represented defendants, a husband and a wife; (2) the trial court questioned the defendants about the joint representation and they testified that they understood the potential problems with joint representation; (3) any error was induced by the defendants; (4) there was no evidence that defendant husband would have been offered a better deal if he had testified against defendant wife; and (5) defendant wife's argument that trial counsel was unable to argue that the methamphetamine in the safe belonged to the defendant husband completely ignored the defendant wife's testimony that she put the methamphetamine in the safe and that her husband was lying to protect her, and the notes about the various drug sales. Christopher v. State, 262 Ga. App. 257, 585 S.E.2d 107 (2003).

Trial counsel was not ineffective because counsel initially represented second defendant as well as third defendant when counsel withdrew from representing both defendants after counsel sensed a potential conflict. Baggs v. State, 265 Ga. App. 282, 593 S.E.2d 734 (2004).

Trial counsel's failure to file a motion to sever a defendant's case from a codefendant's did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel; since trial counsel testified that counsel made a tactical decision not to file a motion to sever after consultation with the defendant, and since the defendant had not shown that defendant would have benefited from a separate trial, there was evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that trial counsel rendered effective assistance. Hubbard v. State, 274 Ga. App. 184, 617 S.E.2d 167 (2005).

Codefendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel in a case in which the codefendant and defendant were represented by different attorneys from the same public defender's office as no actual conflict of interest developed and the codefendant did not show that the codefendant's attorney would have done anything differently to defend the codefendant had the same office not been representing both defendants or that any conflict of interest impaired the codefendant attorney's performance; the codefendant's claim that the codefendant did not knowingly waive on the record any conflicts of interest stemming from the joint representation was rejected as the codefendant failed to show that an actual conflict of interest resulted from the joint representation. Burns v. State, 274 Ga. App. 687, 618 S.E.2d 600 (2005), aff'd, 281 Ga. 338, 638 S.E.2d 299 (2006).

Since the defendant did not object at trial to defense counsel's joint representation of the defendant and a codefendant, the defendant was required to demonstrate that an actual conflict of interest adversely affected defense counsel's performance in order to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on the joint representation; because there was no testimony to the contrary, an appellate court presumed that counsel's actions were strategic and fell within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance. Kendrick v. State, 279 Ga. App. 263, 630 S.E.2d 863 (2006).

With regard to defendant's convictions for first degree arson, criminal damage to property in the second degree, threatening a witness in an official proceeding by unlawfully causing economic harm to a family member, and use of intimidation with the intent of influencing a witness to change the witness's testimony in an official proceeding, the defendant was not denied the right to legal representation free from conflicts of interest because the defendant's attorney also represented the codefendant as the defendant's alibi defense was not inconsistent with codefendant's, rather, the alibis were corroborative of each other and mutually supportive since the defendant and the codefendant both stated that each returned to the codefendant's house without incident and the defendant thereafter went to the defendant's parent's house. The defenses were synergistic rather than antagonistic, and the representation by the same attorney did not give rise to any conflict of interest, potential or actual. Shelnutt v. State, 289 Ga. App. 528, 657 S.E.2d 611 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C0977, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 518 (Ga. 2008).

Habeas court did not err in granting the appellee's petition for writ of habeas corpus because there was no error in the habeas court's finding of an actual conflict of interest that adversely affected plea counsel's performance since the fact that the codefendant alone was paying counsel's fees created a strong incentive for counsel to prioritize the codefendant's interests in the matter over the appellee's interest, and counsel not only failed to pursue an alternative defense theory on behalf of the appellee, counsel failed even to recognize the possibility that one could exist; even though the appellee and the codefendant pursued a unified defense in that their accounts of the incident were consistent, the record reflected that the appellee was the less culpable of the two in the crime, as it appeared that the appellee's participation was limited to the role of a passive witness who happened to be driving when the codefendant initiated the brief, apparently unpremeditated interaction with the victim. State v.

Mamedov, 288 Ga. 858, 708 S.E.2d 279 (2011).

Advising on the right to testify. — Because defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective for failing to advise on the right to testify and by failing to object to the admission of certain hearsay testimony by child witnesses, the trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for new trial. Brock v. State, 270 Ga. App. 250, 605 S.E.2d 907 (2004).

No Georgia authority existed for expanding the constitutional obligation to advise the defendant of the right to testify to require counsel to "re-advise" the defendant of the right to testify after the state presented rebuttal evidence. Thomas v. State, 282 Ga. 894, 655 S.E.2d 599 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for pressuring defendant into waiving defendant's right to testify as the trial court painstakingly informed defendant that defendant had a right to testify and that the decision was up to the defendant, not defendant's counsel; further, defendant was given the night to make a decision and affirmed defendant's intention not to testify the next day. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. 304, 612 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by not adequately advising the defendant of the right to testify, as the record showed that counsel discussed the issue both before and at trial and advised the defendant to avoid cross-examination, as the defendant had made a complete statement to the police which was played for the jury. Giddens v. State, 276 Ga. App. 353, 623 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Advice of counsel as to whether or not to testify was trial strategy generally not subject to challenge for ineffectiveness, and since the defendant presented no evidence that defense counsel prevented the defendant from making the decision about testifying, the defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel; additionally, the defendant failed to show how the defense case was prejudiced by having a codefendant's attorney at counsel table or how the refusal of the trial court to allow defendant access to the victim's email prejudiced the defense. King v. State, 279 Ga. App. 302, 630 S.E.2d 905 (2006).

Defendant's claim that counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to adequately advise the defendant of the defendant's right not to testify failed as the defendant did not rebut the presumption that counsel acted as an effective legal representative and properly advised the defendant of the defendant's rights since there was no testimony that counsel failed to inform the defendant of the defendant's constitutional rights or the risks of testifying. Mayberry v. State, 281 Ga. 144, 635 S.E.2d 736 (2006).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as the defendant followed the trial counsel's advice not to testify; the trial counsel did not improperly prevent the defendant from doing so. Revells v. State, 283 Ga. App. 59, 640 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Appeals court rejected the defendant's claims that trial counsel forced the defendant into testifying without adequately preparing the defendant to do so, as that claim was refuted by counsel's contrary testimony, which the trial court was authorized to believe. Thomas v. State, 285 Ga. App. 290, 645 S.E.2d 713 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 610 (Ga. 2007).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for advising a defendant not to testify on the defendant's own behalf because the defendant lied to counsel about two other men killing the victim and defense counsel found that the evidence did not support that claim. Hamilton v. State, 297 Ga. App. 47, 676 S.E.2d 773 (2009).

Defendant failed to make a case for the ineffective assistance of trial counsel because trial counsel could hardly be found to be deficient for not considering the defendant as a key witness in the defendant's own defense and for having to move forward with defendant's defense without the defendant's cooperation; trial counsel testified that counsel went to the jail to visit the defendant perhaps two or three times and then ceased to do so because the defendant refused to answer most of counsel's questions, would not give counsel defendant's version of events, would not help with the defense, and told counsel that the defendant did not want to talk to counsel. Sanford v. State, 287 Ga. 351, 695 S.E.2d 579 (2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1514, 179 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for advising the defendant not to testify because the defendant acknowledged that counsel told the defendant that the defendant would cause more damage to the defendant's case if the defendant testified and acknowledged trusting counsel thereby choosing not to testify; even assuming that trial counsel did advise the defendant that the defendant could be impeached by certain evidence and that such advice was incorrect, the defendant did not show that the defendant was prejudiced thereby because the defendant never said what the defendant's testimony would have been had the defendant testified at trial. Johnson v. State, 290 Ga. 382, 721 S.E.2d 851 (2012).

Advising on the right to jury trial.

— Defendant failed to show ineffective assistance for advising the defendant to waive a jury trial and not to testify because trial counsel discussed the advantages and disadvantages of waiving a jury, filed the waiver of jury trial form with defendant's understanding and consent, and the defendant made the decision not to testify at the close of the state's case. Wroge v. State, 278 Ga. App. 753, 629 S.E.2d 596 (2006).

On a claim that trial counsel was ineffective in advising a defendant to waive the right to a jury trial, the proper inquiry is whether the defendant has demonstrated a reasonable probability that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different had the defendant not waived the right to a jury trial on advice of counsel. Given the strength of the evidence against the defendant, the defendant failed to demonstrate a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different if tried before a jury; accordingly, the defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective in advising the defendant to waive a jury trial failed. Hendrix v. State, 284 Ga. 420, 667 S.E.2d 597 (2008).

In a defendant's prosecution for criminal trespass, ineffective assistance of counsel was not shown because trial counsel testified that counsel had discussed the issue of whether or not to waive a jury trial in counsel's initial consultation with the defendant and the defendant's parent and received no indication that the defendant did not understand the defendant's rights. Thomas v. State, 297 Ga. App. 416, 677 S.E.2d 433 (2009).

Advice to waive jury trial. — Counsel was not ineffective for advising a murder defendant to waive the right to a jury trial. This advice was based on reasonable trial strategy as the defendant testified that counsel believed that a judge, having been exposed to cases involving similar violence, would be more lenient than a jury; moreover, the defendant's acquittal of murder and conviction on the lesser offense of voluntary manslaughter strongly supported the conclusion that counsel was effective, and the defendant was advised by the trial court that the decision to waive a jury trial rested with the defendant. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 725, 662 S.E.2d 817 (2008).

Failure to challenge arrest warrant. — Defendant's plea counsel did not render ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to challenge the legality of arrest warrants because all four of the supporting affidavits unquestionably satisfied the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 17-4-41(a), and based on the information provided in the supporting affidavits, the officer in the case supplied the issuing magistrate with sufficient information to support an independent finding that probable cause existed for the issuance of the warrants; the defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant's plea counsel's failure to challenge the legality of the warrants prejudiced the defendant because even if counsel had challenged the warrants and was able to suppress any inculpatory statement the defendant made, there was nothing to suggest that the defendant's guilty plea resulted from such a statement. Murray v. State, 307 Ga. App. 621, 705 S.E.2d 726 (2011).

Failure to file plea in abatement to dismiss arrest warrant and indictment. — Defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to file a plea in abatement to dismiss an arrest warrant and an indictment because the allegedly inaccurate and incomplete information in the affidavit supporting the warrant did not suggest an intentional or reckless falsehood on the part of the affiant and was not necessary to a finding of probable cause. Jones v. State, 287 Ga. 770, 700 S.E.2d 350 (2010).

Failure to challenge indictment. — Defendant failed to prove that both defendant's appointed and retained counsel were ineffective since it was not error for the defendant's appointed counsel not to file a demurrer challenging certain counts of the indictment, and the defendant's retained lawyer consulted with the defendant on numerous occasions, thoroughly investigated the case, and was fully prepared for trial. Silvers v. State, 278 Ga. 45, 597 S.E.2d 373 (2004).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to move to quash the indictment as the failure to raise a meritless motion could not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. Hall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 203, 614 S.E.2d 844 (2005).

Because the indictment complied with O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), counsel was not ineffective for not challenging it. Smith v. State, 274 Ga. App. 568, 618 S.E.2d 182 (2005).

Since the record showed that the victim could not recall the exact dates when the events alleged in the indictment occurred, the state was not able to identify a specific date for the offenses, and the defendant offered no other evidence that the indictment was imperfect in form or substance or that the defendant's ability to present a defense was impaired, the defendant failed to establish that a special demurrer would have been successful or that defense counsel's failure to file such pleading before trial affected the outcome of the proceedings. Therefore, the defendant's ineffective assistance claim lacked merit. Berman v. State, 279 Ga. App. 867, 632 S.E.2d 757 (2006).

Despite an inmate's claim to the contrary in a petition for habeas relief, trial counsel was not ineffective in not contesting the failure of the indictment to state venue, by inducing the inmate's guilty plea, in failing to advise the inmate of the inmate's Boykin rights, by failing to object to the prosecutor's conduct at the plea hearing, and by failing to advise the inmate about parole eligibility. Wright v. Hall, 281 Ga. 318, 638 S.E.2d 270 (2006).

Defense counsel's performance was deficient in failing to challenge the defendant's charge of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon on the basis that the indictment erroneously alleged that the crime was committed on a date after the indictment was issued; since this was the second time the defendant had been indicted for that offense, if trial counsel had timely challenged that count, any future prosecution for that crime would have been barred, and thus prejudice to the defendant was shown. Langlands v. State, 280 Ga. 799, 633 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

In a child molestation prosecution, since the defendant did not show that the state could have identified a specific date of the crimes in the indictment, or that the state's failure to do so prejudiced the defense, trial counsel's failure to pursue a special demurrer to the indictment did not effect the outcome of the trial and hence was not ineffective assistance. Stillwell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 805, 670 S.E.2d 452 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0493, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2009).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to challenge the felony murder count of an indictment because the indictment contained sufficient facts to put the defendant on notice that the defendant was accused of the death of the victim as a result of an aggravated assault when the indictment alleged a specific, offensive use of the defendant's hands and feet and that when the defendant's hands and feet were used in a particular way they were objects which were likely to and actually did result in serious bodily injury; the absence of self-defense, like general intent, did not have to be expressly alleged in an indictment, and even if some such allegation were necessary, language in the indictment asserting that defendant acted unlawfully and contrary to the laws of the state, the good order, peace and dignity thereof was sufficient. Lizana v. State, 287 Ga. 184, 695 S.E.2d 208 (2010).

Defendant's ineffective assistance claims failed because the defendant could not show deficient performance on the ground that defense counsel erroneously advised the defendant to enter a plea of guilty upon a defective indictment since the indictment was valid and sufficient. Belcher v. State, 304 Ga. App. 645, 697 S.E.2d 300 (2010).

Defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to file a plea in abatement to dismiss an arrest warrant and an indictment because the allegedly inaccurate and incomplete information in the affidavit supporting the warrant did not suggest an intentional or reckless falsehood on the part of the affiant and was not necessary to a finding of probable cause. Jones v. State, 287 Ga. 770, 700 S.E.2d 350 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge the validity of an indictment because pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-54 the indictment showed that it was a "True Bill," was signed by the grand jury foreperson, and was filed with the clerk's office with the clerk of the court's name prior to the defendant's arraignment, since the defendant and counsel signed the indictment; even if the defendant was able to show that counsel was deficient for failing to challenge an imperfect indictment, the defendant was unable to establish prejudice because the filing of a demurrer would not have prevented the state from reindicting and trying the defendant. White v. State, 312 Ga. App. 421, 718 S.E.2d 335 (2011).

Because the armed robbery count of the indictment sufficiently alleged the elements of armed robbery, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge the armed robbery charge, and the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial as to the ineffective assistance claim; that the property was taken from the person or immediate presence of another is necessarily inferred from the allegation of a use of an offensive weapon to accomplish the taking, and the alleged offense of "armed robbery" can be accomplished only via a taking from the person or immediate presence of another. Patterson v. State, 312 Ga. App. 793, 720 S.E.2d 278 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0574, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 327 (Ga. 2012).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel's performance was deficient for not filing a demurrer to the count of the indictment charging the defendant with enticing a child for indecent purposes in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5(a) because the indictment alleged that the defendant enticed the victim to a place and penetrated the victim's vagina with the defendant's penis. Burke v. State, 316 Ga. App. 386, 729 S.E.2d 531 (2012).

Any attempt by trial counsel to file a demurrer to the count of an indictment charging the defendant with child molestation, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)(1), would have been futile because nothing in the child molestation statute specifically prohibited the state from prosecuting the defendant on the ground that the defendant engaged in sexual intercourse with the victim; while sexual intercourse is not an element of child molestation, an adult's act of sexual intercourse with a child falls within the parameters of the child molestation statute. Burke v. State, 316 Ga. App. 386, 729 S.E.2d 531 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a special demurrer to the indictment because the defendant did not show that the length of the period in which the indictment alleged the crimes were committed materially affected the ability to present a defense; the charges against the defendant were based on funds the defendant retained, which were disbursed to the defendant on different dates and which related to the representation of specific indigent defense clients. Clarke v. State, 317 Ga. App. 471, 731 S.E.2d 100 (2012).

Failure to request a change of venue. — Trial counsel's failure to seek a change of venue on the ground of pretrial publicity as ineffective assistance of counsel since the only pretrial publicity shown in the record was a single newspaper article published the week before trial, did not amount to ineffective assistance since there was no evidence that the trial's setting was inherently prejudicial or that the jury selection process showed actual prejudice. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. 853, 596 S.E.2d 597 (2004).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to move for a change in venue as there was no evidence that the trial's setting was inherently prejudicial or that the jury selection process showed actual prejudice to a degree that rendered a fair trial impossible. Moore v. State, 274 Ga. App. 432, 618 S.E.2d 122 (2005).

Alleged failure of a defendant's trial counsel to present evidence in support of a motion for a change of venue in defendant's prosecution for malice murder did not demonstrate that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel; the defendant presented no evidence post-trial to suggest that the trial's setting was inherently prejudicial or that the jury selection process showed actual prejudice to a degree that rendered a fair trial impossible, and since a complete failure to make a motion for change of venue would not have constituted ineffective assistance of counsel under those circumstances, the failure to support the motion adequately likewise did not show ineffectiveness under those circumstances. Green v. State, 281 Ga. 322, 638 S.E.2d 288 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on counsel's failure to move for a directed verdict as to venue was rejected as: (1) there was sufficient evidence of venue as to the obstructing a police officer and battery charges as they occurred when defendant was arrested, and an officer testified that the officer apprehended the defendant in Floyd County; (2) there was ample evidence that the robbery took place in Rome, but there was no testimony that Rome was in Floyd County, and the trial court did not take judicial notice of the City's location; and (3) if counsel had moved for a directed verdict based on venue, the trial court would have allowed the state to reopen its case and to present additional evidence of venue. Hinkle v. State, 282 Ga. App. 328, 638 S.E.2d 781 (2006).

Trial counsel's failure to seek a change of venue on the ground of pretrial publicity as ineffective assistance of counsel failed since the only pretrial publicity shown in the record was a single newspaper article published the week before trial since there was no evidence that the trial's setting was inherently prejudicial or that the jury selection process showed actual prejudice. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. 853, 596 S.E.2d 597 (2004).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to venue. Flanders v. State, 285 Ga. App. 805, 648 S.E.2d 97 (2007).

Failure to object to venue. — Trial counsel's failure to object to venue could not constitute grounds for ineffective assistance because the state established venue. White v. State, 312 Ga. App. 421, 718 S.E.2d 335 (2011).

Premitting whether the decisions not to move for a directed verdict for lack of venue and to stipulate to venue fell below the objective standard of reasonableness, the defendant could not prove that there was a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Indeed, if defense counsel either moved for a directed verdict as to the lack of venue or decided against ultimately stipulating to venue, the trial transcript clearly showed that the state was prepared to reopen the evidence to recall a witness to prove venue. Muldrow v. State, 322 Ga. App. 190, 744 S.E.2d 413 (2013).

Failure to file transfer motion under § 15-11-30.5. — Given the children services department's opposition to transferring a mother's reunification plan to the county where the mother was living, and given that transfer is not mandatory under O.C.G.A. § 15-11-30.5, the mother's attorney was not deficient in failing to file a transfer motion. Moreover, since there were significant grounds for finding parental misconduct or inability other than the mother's failure to comply with the case plan, there was no reasonable probability that the trial court would not have terminated the mother's parental rights had counsel successfully moved to transfer the plan to another county. In the Interest of C.G., 279 Ga. App. 730, 632 S.E.2d 472 (2006).

Failure to file motion to transfer. — Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to petition to have defendant's case transferred to juvenile court as defendant was 16 when the crime was committed; as the case involved an armed robbery, it could not be transferred to juvenile court. Hall v. State, 274 Ga. App. 842, 619 S.E.2d 344 (2005).

Failure to move to sever. — In an armed robbery prosecution, counsel's failure to move to sever the trial of defendant from that of the codefendant was not shown to be ineffective assistance because the defendants did not present antagonistic defenses, and there was no likelihood of confusion because there were only two defendants who acted in concert. Shannon v. State, 275 Ga. App. 550, 621 S.E.2d 540 (2005).

Because a codefendant's statements were non-custodial and were made in furtherance of a conspiracy, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 and did not violate Bruton; consequently, defendant failed to demonstrate that counsel's failure to request a severance constituted ineffective assistance. Hankerson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 545, 621 S.E.2d 772 (2005).

Defendant's claim that defense counsel was ineffective in failing to request that the defendant's trial be severed from the codefendant's trial because the admission into evidence of the codefendant's recorded statement, which implicated the defendant, violated the Sixth Amendment right to confront the codefendant, failed because first, the codefendant testified before the jury and was subject to cross-examination, so the admission of the codefendant's statement was not, in fact, a Bruton violation, and, second, the codefendant's incriminating statement was made shortly after the crimes occurred, was made prior to arrest, and was a non-custodial statement to an acquaintance rather than police officers, so the statement was more properly characterized as an admissible declaration of a co-conspirator, rather than a confession; further, the defendant's trial counsel provided several strategic reasons for choosing not to request a motion to sever, which did not form the basis for an ineffectiveness claim. Williams v. State, 280 Ga. 539, 630 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Trial counsel's defense strategy in failing to move for severance of defendant's armed robbery trial from that of a codefendant did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel, as such was reasonable, even if it wasn't successful, given that: (1) the jury was unlikely to confuse the evidence applicable to either defendants; (2) the defenses were not mutually antagonistic; and (3) the defendant might have actually benefitted from being able to point to the codefendant as being the controlling figure in the robberies. Lee v. State, 281 Ga. App. 479, 636 S.E.2d 547 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failure to request a bifurcated trial on felony murder in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1 and on possession of a firearm by a convicted felon in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131; because the possession count was a predicate offense for the felony murder count, the prior conviction that was admitted into evidence was relevant to the felony murder count, and it was not necessary to sever the possession count. Wells v. State, 281 Ga. 253, 637 S.E.2d 8 (2006).

The defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to move to sever a possession of a firearm by a convicted felon charge and in failing to object to the admission of the defendant's prior felony convictions, as: (1) the prior drug convictions were not objected to because they helped in the presentation of counsel's defense strategy that the defendant had a long history of drug problems, and was a drug addict and not an armed robber; and (2) the prior felonies were never read to the jury, there was no evidence that the jury members actually read the indictment, the indictment did not go out with the jury, and the court instructed the jury that they had to decide the case based on the evidence given to them. Einglett v.

State, 283 Ga. App. 497, 642 S.E.2d 160 (2007).

Defendant did not show that defense counsel was ineffective and thus was not entitled to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea; defense counsel did not file a motion to sever because a codefendant's motion to sever had already been denied, and even if defense counsel's failure to interview certain witnesses was deficient, the defendant did not show that but for the allegedly deficient performance the defendant would have proceeded to trial. Moon v. State, 286 Ga. App. 360, 649 S.E.2d 355 (2007).

Counsel's failure to seek severance of the defendant's trial from that of the driver of a car in which drugs were found did not constitute ineffective assistance. Trial counsel testified that counsel wanted the driver in the case so that counsel could "blame the drugs on" the driver, and this strategic decision did not constitute deficient performance. Gresham v. State, 295 Ga. App. 449, 671 S.E.2d 917 (2009).

In a defendant's prosecution for malice murder and cruelty to children, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move to sever the defendant's trial from that of the codefendant, the parent of the five-year-old victim, as such a decision was a matter of trial strategy and trial counsel was able to cross-examine the parent as to any hearsay statements regarding the defendant's prior difficulties with the victim. Wright v. State, 285 Ga. 57, 673 S.E.2d 249 (2009).

In a defendant's prosecution for armed robbery, trial counsel was not ineffective due to the abandonment of a motion to sever the defendant's trial from that of a codefendant. Defendant argued that severance from the defendant's codefendant would have prevented the introduction of a phone call made from the codefendant's phone to a taxi service from which a taxi driver who was robbed was dispatched, however the evidence would have been admissible against the defendant regardless of severance because the phone call had been made in furtherance of a conspiracy. Troutman v. State, 297 Ga. App. 196, 676 S.E.2d 836 (2009).

Even if defense counsel's withdrawal of a motion to sever could be considered deficient performance, the defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant failed to show that the defendant was prejudiced as the count the defendant argued should have been severed was against the defendant's codefendant, and the defendant failed to point to any evidence in the record that could plausibly support the defendant's contention that the jury might not have believed that the defendant, who was charged with armed robbery along with the codefendant, was not involved in the burglary that the codefendant was charged with committing. Killings v. State, 296 Ga. App. 869, 676 S.E.2d 31 (2009).

Defendant failed to show that the defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to file a motion to sever the defendant's trial from that of the codefendants because a motion to sever would have been futile since one of the codefendants filed a motion to sever the trial, and the motion was denied. Cruz v. State, 305 Ga. App. 805, 700 S.E.2d 631 (2010).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel, even though defendant's trial counsel failed to object to the joining of the defendant and the codefendant for trial, because trial counsel testified that the counsel had found no legal basis upon which to object to the joinder of the defendant's case with that of the codefendant. Furthermore, the trial counsel testified that the counsel did not object to the joinder or move later for severance as a matter of trial strategy because counsel believed that having the defendant tried with the codefendant enhanced the counsel's strategy of placing the blame on the codefendant as the codefendant gave a statement to the police that all of the narcotics found by the police belonged to the codefendant. Smith v. State, 309 Ga. App. 889, 714 S.E.2d 593 (2011).

Trial counsel's failure to renew a motion to sever did not constitute deficient performance because the strategic decision fell within the wide latitude of presumptively reasonable conduct engaged in by trial attorneys; counsel testified that counsel did not renew the motion to sever because counsel had impeached the codefendant on cross-examination and believed that the trial court would not grant severance at that stage of the proceedings. Glass v. State, 289 Ga. 706, 715 S.E.2d 85 (2011).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to move to sever the defendant's case from that of the codefendant because counsel testified that counsel did not move to sever since counsel believed that if the two defendants were tried together, the chances of the codefendant implicating the defendant would diminish; trial counsel further testified that counsel thought the dangers of severance outweighed any benefits and that, even with the benefit of hindsight, counsel would have made the same decision. Anderson v. State, 311 Ga. App. 732, 716 S.E.2d 813 (2011).

Defendant failed to show either that trial counsel performed deficiently in failing to request a bifurcated trial on the charge alleging possession of a firearm by a convicted felon or that the defendant was prejudiced because trial counsel chose as part of the trial strategy not to seek bifurcation, and due to the lack of evidence, the trial court granted a directed verdict on the firearm possession count. Newkirk v. State, 290 Ga. 581, 722 S.E.2d 760 (2012).

Trial counsel's failure to move to have the charge of possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony tried separately did not amount to ineffective assistance as the possession charge was an underlying felony for the felony murder counts and, therefore, bifurcation was not authorized. Leonard v. State, 292 Ga. 214, 735 S.E.2d 767 (2012).

Failure to request a competency hearing. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a competency hearing as the decision was reasonable since counsel observed nothing to suggest "low or even moderate intelligence" and concluded that defendant was quite intelligent and capable of assisting with defendant's own defense; counsel testified that if counsel believed a competency evaluation was required, counsel would have ensured that one was conducted. Lewis v. State, 279 Ga. 69, 608 S.E.2d 602, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 987, 126 S. Ct. 571, 163 L. Ed. 2d 478 (2005).

Because: (1) the record did not demonstrate that the defendant's sanity or competency was or should have been a significant issue at trial; and (2) the defendant failed to support an assertion that competency should have been raised, the defendant failed to prove the prejudice prong of an ineffective assistance of counsel claim due to counsel's failure to request an independent psychiatric examination. Thus, a new trial on this ground was unwarranted. Jennings v. State, 282 Ga. 679, 653 S.E.2d 17 (2007).

In an armed robbery prosecution, defense counsel was not ineffective for not evaluating the defendant's competency as: (1) the defendant had been evaluated in connection with another case and found competent; (2) a forensic evaluator met with the defendant and told counsel the defendant would be found competent; and (3) counsel testified that although the defendant's behavior was odd, the defendant was able to communicate and discuss trial issues with counsel. Shabazz v. State, 293 Ga. App. 560, 667 S.E.2d 414 (2008).

Habeas court correctly concluded that ineffective assistance of trial counsel could not be used to excuse the procedural default of the petitioner's claim that the petitioner was mentally incompetent during trial because the information that trial counsel then had available to them, including the information that trial counsel unreasonably failed to obtain, would not have led constitutionally effective counsel to pursue a claim of incompetence to stand trial and would not be reasonably probable to have resulted in a finding that the petitioner was incompetent had such a plea been pursued; the petitioner failed to prove that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance regarding the petitioner's competence to stand trial because trial counsel withdrew the petitioner's plea of incompetence only after satisfying themselves that counsel was able to communicate effectively with the petitioner, and the trial court had an extensive opportunity to observe the petitioner in pre-trial and trial proceedings and to interact directly with the petitioner, and the court did not see sufficient indications of incompetence to pursue further evaluation. Perkins v. Hall, 288 Ga. 810, 708 S.E.2d 335 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to assess the defendant's competency to stand trial as counsel observed nothing that caused counsel to believe that the defendant was not competent. Brinkley v. State, 320 Ga. App. 275, 739 S.E.2d 703 (2013).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel's deficient performance in failing to investigate whether the defendant was suffering from delusional compulsion at the time of the offense had a reasonable probability of altering the outcome of the defendant's trial; the defendant presented no evidence that the defendant was legally insane or suffering from delusional compulsion at the time of the offense or at any other time. Hatfield v. State, 321 Ga. App. 904, 743 S.E.2d 560 (2013).

Ineffectiveness for failure to request psychological examination. — Although the defendant claimed that the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective in failing to request a psychological examination, which allegedly would have shown that the defendant was not competent to knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily enter a guilty plea, the defendant failed to offer the results of any mental evaluation at either of the hearings on the motion to withdraw the plea; as a result, the defendant could only have speculated that a mental evaluation would have shown that the defendant was not competent to enter a valid plea. Such speculation was insufficient to establish a reasonable probability that any deficient representation resulted in the defendant entering a guilty plea instead of insisting on a trial and did not establish ineffective assistance of counsel. Frye v. State, 298 Ga. App. 415, 680 S.E.2d 431 (2009).

Failure to have defendant psychiatrically evaluated. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for statutory rape and two counts of child molestation involving a stepchild, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim as a result of failure to have the defendant evaluated for mental illness and incompetence before trial or before sentencing was rejected because defense counsel testified at the defendant's motion for a new trial hearing that: (1) defense counsel did not know of the defendant's alleged prior history of psychiatric problems; (2) the defendant appeared to understand the communications that defense counsel had with the defendant; and (3) defense counsel did not explore the need for a psychological evaluation of the defendant because defense counsel did not see it as an issue. Haygood v. State, 289 Ga. App. 187, 656 S.E.2d 541 (2008).

No error in failing to conduct competency hearing. — Trial court did not err in failing sua sponte to conduct a competency hearing to determine whether the defendant knowingly and intelligently waived the defendant's right to counsel because the information available and evidence presented to the trial court prior to trial provided no real indication that the defendant was incompetent to waive the defendant's right to counsel. Walker v. State, 288 Ga. 174, 702 S.E.2d 415 (2010).

Failure to file an answer. — After an accused failed to appear or otherwise file an answer in a condemnation proceeding filed against the accused in connection with the accused's arrest for possession of methamphetamine, and the accused failed to show that counsel was ineffective in failing to file an answer, the state was properly granted judgment. Walters v. State of Ga., 269 Ga. App. 883, 605 S.E.2d 458 (2004).

Failure to seek to redact portion of prior plea. — Trial counsel was ineffective in failing to seek to redact the portion of a defendant's first offender plea that related to carrying a concealed weapon. The plea to carrying a concealed weapon, a misdemeanor, was not an element of the current charge of the possession of a firearm by a first offender probationer under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131(b). Cobb v. State, 283 Ga. 388, 658 S.E.2d 750 (2008).

Failure to file motion to suppress. — Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to file a motion to suppress because the fact that the defendants were in a police car during the show-ups did not taint the identifications obtained and there was no evidence that the victims knew that the defendants were in handcuffs; further, there was nothing unfair in the officer's statements to the victims. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

Defendant's counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to file a motion to suppress a BB gun and tennis shoes seized from defendant's house as the failure to file a suppression motion did not constitute per se ineffective assistance of counsel and the defendant did not make a strong showing that the evidence, which was seized pursuant to a search warrant, would have been suppressed had a motion been filed. Oliver v. State, 273 Ga. App. 754, 615 S.E.2d 846 (2005).

Failure to file motion to suppress confession. — Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by not moving to suppress defendant's confession on the ground that it was obtained pursuant to an illegal arrest that was not supported by probable cause because the arrest was supported by probable cause as the arresting officer had information which allowed a prudent person to believe that the defendant had committed a crime, so such a motion would have been futile. Robinson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 502, 623 S.E.2d 711 (2005).

Defendant failed to show that counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to seek suppression when the defendant did not show that the damaging evidence would have been suppressed if the motion had been prosecuted; further, there was overwhelming, undisputed evidence of the defendant's identity as the perpetrator, such that the result of the trial would not have been different if the items seized from the car and residence were suppressed. Leppla v. State, 277 Ga. App. 804, 627 S.E.2d 794 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress evidence of cash found in defendant's pocket, as the motion would have been denied due to the officer's reasonable suspicion to justify stopping defendant for an investigation and a permissible pat down for weapons before placing the defendant in the back of the patrol car. Fitzgerald v. State, 279 Ga. App. 67, 630 S.E.2d 598 (2006).

Failure to file motion to suppress defendant's statements. — Malice murder and accompanying life sentence were upheld on appeal because counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a motion to suppress defendant's two statements; attempting to suppress the first statement would have been futile because the defendant was not under arrest and not subject to a custodial interrogation, and the second statement was made after a waiver of Miranda rights. Wiggins v. State, 280 Ga. 627, 632 S.E.2d 80 (2006).

Because the defendant did not assert a possessory interest in a car in which the defendant was a passenger or in items seized from the car, the defendant failed to show that the defendant had standing to contest the admissibility of those items, and since it was also unclear what was known to the officer at time of the defendant's arrest, the defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance based on counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress those items. Callahan v. State, 280 Ga. App. 323, 634 S.E.2d 102 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was properly rejected by the trial court given evidence that: (1) counsel did not stipulate as to the weight of the marijuana seized; (2) counsel's failure to file a suppression motion did not constitute per se ineffective assistance of counsel, and the defendant failed to show that the challenged evidence would have been suppressed had the motion been filed; (3) defendant's decision not to testify was the defendant's own; and (4) a continuing witness objection would not have changed the outcome of the trial. Parnell v. State, 280 Ga. App. 665, 634 S.E.2d 763 (2006).

Failure to file motion to suppress drug evidence. — Counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to file a motion to suppress marijuana and identification found in an idling car, as the search did not violate Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII; it was proper for a drug sniffing dog to walk around the outside of the defendant's vehicle, a location in which police and the dog were permitted to be, and to alert to the presence of drugs. Jackson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 83, 635 S.E.2d 372 (2006).

Defendant's identification in a line-up was not unduly suggestive in violation of due process under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, and defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to file a motion to suppress the line-up identification; the testimony regarding the line-up established that the defendant was not showing gold teeth, that all of the participants held their numbers in the same place while the victims separately identified the defendant, and that the officers used no suggestive techniques during the line-up. Robinson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 76, 635 S.E.2d 380 (2006).

Defendant's trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to file a motion to exclude the introduction of the defendant's videotaped statement admitting to having sex with the victim and for failing to move to exclude or object to evidence of a prior molestation; there was no basis for such a motion as the defendant's videotape showed the defendant being advised of and waiving the defendant's Miranda rights under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, and the evidence of the prior molestation was admissible at trial and no compliance with Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3 governing similar transactions was required. Hutchens v. State, 281 Ga. App. 610, 636 S.E.2d 773 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea based on the defendant's claim that the defense counsel failed to appeal the denial of a suppression motion was properly rejected because it was not ineffective assistance to fail to make a meritless appeal and the motion to suppress was properly denied because the defendant voluntarily reinitiated discussions with law enforcement officers after the interview was terminated due to the defendant's request for counsel. Rios v. State, 281 Ga. 181, 637 S.E.2d 20 (2006).

Trial counsel, representing the first of two defendants, was not ineffective, despite claims that counsel allowed character evidence to be presented to the jury, failed to move to suppress the identification evidence against that defendant, and failed to object to the trial court's consideration at sentencing of a Georgia Criminal Information Center report pertaining to that defendant as: (1) the challenged portions of the defendant's statement were an integral part of a criminal confession, and such statements were not rendered inadmissible because the language used therein indicated that the accused committed another and separate offense; (2) the identification evidence was properly admitted as not unduly suggestive; and (3) nothing of record showed that the sentence the trial court ordered was based upon the defendant's criminal record report. Taylor v. State, 282 Ga. App. 469, 638 S.E.2d 869 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 135 (Ga. 2007).

Warrantless arrest of the defendant was authorized on the ground that a sale of cocaine was committed in the officers' presence, and after the defendant retreated into a motel room, the exigencies of the situation demanded and excused an immediate entry into the room for the officer to arrest the defendant without a warrant; hence, as suppression of the evidence seized thereafter would not have been granted, counsel was not ineffective in failing to file for the suppression of evidence. Fortson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 120, 640 S.E.2d 693 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit as: (1) trial counsel's decisions not to seek suppression of a bloody jacket seized from the defendant's home was strategic, and not to challenge, were strategic; and (2) the defendant failed to show a reasonable likelihood that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel objected to evidence of the victim's good character or evidence of the defendant's bad character. Parker v. State, 281 Ga. 490, 640 S.E.2d 44 (2007).

Trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to seek suppression of the identification evidence or attack the reliability of identification evidence on grounds that such was impermissibly suggestive, as: (1) the showup was preceded by a photo array against which no attack was made; and (2) counsel's strategy in handling the state's failure to elicit in-court identification testimony from a particular witness was reasonable. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 514, 640 S.E.2d 280 (2007).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress the identification of the defendant by the eyewitness, because, based on the witness's prior knowledge of the defendant, such was an independent basis for the challenged identification, making a motion to suppress futile. Dumas v. State, 283 Ga. App. 279, 641 S.E.2d 271 (2007).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in not filing a motion to suppress the defendant's videotaped statement on the ground that it had been induced by a promise of leniency; even if the statement could have been excluded, the statement, which allowed the jury to hear evidence that was unfavorable to the victim, was consistent with the defendant's theory of justification. Carpenter v. State, 285 Ga. App. 296, 645 S.E.2d 709 (2007).

Trial counsel was ineffective for not seeking to suppress evidence; before conducting a pat-down, officers had not obtained any information that would support a reasonable belief that the defendant was armed or dangerous, and there was prejudice in that the evidence supporting the convictions all resulted, directly or indirectly, from the search. Perez v. State, 284 Ga. App. 212, 643 S.E.2d 792 (2007).

Failure to request determination or suppression of videotape. — In a child molestation case involving the defendant's 13-year-old child, defense counsel was not ineffective for not requesting that the trial court determine the reliability of the victim's videotaped statement under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-8-820) or for not objecting to the statement's admission; the victim spontaneously told the victim's foster mother about the incidents when the victim was upset, and the victim repeatedly expressed love for the defendant and a desire not to get the defendant into trouble. Foster v. State, 286 Ga. App. 250, 649 S.E.2d 322 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 875 (Ga. 2007).

Because a motion to suppress the evidence seized from the vehicle that the defendant and the defendant's cohorts were riding in would have been futile, as the evidence showed they abandoned the vehicle on foot after being involved in a high-speed chase with police, the defendant's trial counsel could not have been ineffective in failing to file the motion. Skaggs-Ferrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 872, 652 S.E.2d 891 (2007).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for not seeking to suppress the evidence seized in the search of the defendant's home based upon the alleged insufficiency of the search warrant affidavit; there was no showing that the information in support of the warrant was patently false or that there was any intent to mislead the judge in seeking the search warrant. Bryant v. State, 282 Ga. 631, 651 S.E.2d 718 (2007).

Despite ineffective assistance of counsel claim being raised for the first time on appeal, the appeals court found that the claim, which was based on counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress challenging the admission of a juvenile's purported confession to the police, required remand to the trial court for an evidentiary hearing to determine whether the result of the proceeding would have been different if a motion to suppress had been granted. In the Interest of J.T., 289 Ga. App. 248, 656 S.E.2d 580 (2008).

A defendant had not shown that counsel was ineffective for failing to attempt to suppress the defendant's videotaped statement: even if the defendant had sufficiently articulated a desire to have counsel present, the defendant had waived the right by initiating discussion with police without any further prompting or interrogation by them; furthermore, the videotape supported the conclusion that the defendant was not prevented by any intoxication from knowingly waiving the de-defendant's Miranda rights and giving a voluntary statement. Stanley v. State, 283 Ga. 36, 656 S.E.2d 806 (2008).

Counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress a holster when the admission of the holster did not violate the Fourth Amendment. The information in an affidavit contained sufficient information for the magistrate to come to the commonsense conclusion that evidence of contraband could be found at the defendant's apartment, and an officer saw the holster in plain view in an area in which the officer had a right to be while searching for contraband. Cobb v. State, 283 Ga. 388, 658 S.E.2d 750 (2008).

Failure to file motion to suppress blood and urine tests. — Defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to defendant's trial and conviction for aggravated assault and drug possession as a result of trial counsel's failure to move to suppress the test results of defendant's urine and blood, and evidence of a tube of cocaine found in the vehicle which defendant was driving, as the bodily fluids were unlawfully obtained from defendant while unconscious and without a warrant, and there was evidence affirmatively showing that persons other than defendant had equal opportunity to possess the cocaine that was found on the floor of the vehicle. Coney v. State, 290 Ga. App. 364, 659 S.E.2d 768 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for trafficking in methamphetamine, the defendant failed to establish that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to pursue a motion to suppress the evidence found in the defendant's room as the evidence showed that a preliminary motion to suppress was filed and that trial counsel concluded that, based on the Fourth Amendment waivers of the defendant and others involved, pursuit of the motion would have been fruitless. Corn v. State, 290 Ga. App. 792, 660 S.E.2d 782 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective by affirmatively stating that counsel had no objection to the admission of a handgun and bullets seized from a pickup truck the defendant was driving because even if trial counsel waived counsel's motion to suppress the handgun and bullets, it did not prejudice the defendant since the defendant could not succeed on the merits of the motion to suppress; the trial court properly denied the motion to suppress the physical evidence seized from the pickup truck because the search was authorized under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement. Martinez v. State, 303 Ga. App. 166, 692 S.E.2d 766 (2010).

Defendant did not carry the defendant's burden of showing that trial counsel was deficient for failing to request a hearing on the defendant's motion to suppress the defendant's custodial statement because counsel participated in a hearing to determine the admissibility of the statement. Hester v. State, 304 Ga. App. 441, 696 S.E.2d 427 (2010).

Failure to file suppression motion for jailhouse phone call. — In an armed robbery prosecution, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress cash recovered from a search of the appellant's clothing as the police had probable cause to arrest the appellant after finding the appellant in the area of the robberies and matching the appellant to the description of one of the suspects. Furthermore, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress recordings of an appellant's telephone calls while the appellant was in jail because while O.C.G.A. § 16-11-62(4) prohibited any person from intentionally and secretly intercepting a telephone call by use of any device, instrument, or apparatus, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-66(a) provided an exception to this rule when one of the parties to the communication had given prior consent and that consent was implied based on the statements during the recording that all jail phone calls were recorded or monitored. Boykins-White v. State, 305 Ga. App. 827, 701 S.E.2d 221 (2010).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to file a second motion to suppress until the morning of trial, and thus failing to secure a transcript of the hearing on the motion because trial counsel thoroughly cross-examined the arresting detective, who admitted that the detective had previously testified to three different versions of the defendant's alleged statement; therefore, even assuming that trial counsel was deficient by failing to secure a transcript before trial to impeach the detective, the deficiency did not prejudice the defendant since the arresting detective admitted to the detective's contradictory statements and, thus, the inconsistencies were known to the jury even though the prior inconsistent testimony was not read verbatim into the record. Cannon v. State, 288 Ga. 225, 702 S.E.2d 845 (2010).

Trial counsel's failure to pursue a meritless motion to suppress body armor did not constitute ineffective assistance because the defendant did not make a strong showing that the body armor would have been suppressed had the defendant's counsel pursued a motion to suppress; a police officer had an arrest warrant for the defendant when the officer found the defendant in an apartment hiding in a shower, and even if the officer was not authorized to arrest the defendant outside the jurisdictional limits of the county, the defendant did not introduce evidence at the motion for new trial hearing that the officer lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant or that the defendant had standing to object to the search of the apartment. Nyane v. State, 306 Ga. App. 591, 703 S.E.2d 53 (2010), cert. denied, No. S11C0420, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 538 (Ga. 2011).

Trial counsel was not effective for failing to file a pre-trial motion to suppress evidence of the defendant's statement to the police based on a violation of Miranda because the defendant made no showing that such a motion would have been successful; the defendant spoke English, the interviewing officer informed the defendant of the defendant's Miranda rights, and the defendant acknowledged understanding those rights before giving the defendant's statement. Cuvas v. State, 306 Ga. App. 679, 703 S.E.2d 116 (2010).

Codefendant did not demonstrate that the codefendant's trial counsel was deficient for failing to seek suppression of the codefendant's custodial statement because the codefendant failed to provide a meritorious basis to contest its admission; the codefendant was not a suspect in the crimes at the time of the codefendant's arrest, the codefendant was informed of the codefendant's Miranda rights, the codefendant did not ask for an attorney, and the statement was made without threat of force or promise of reward. Wilson v. State, 306 Ga. App. 827, 703 S.E.2d 400 (2010).

Evidence supported the trial court's finding that the defendant failed to show that the defendant's plea counsel was ineffective for failing to suppress an inculpatory statement that the defendant allegedly made to the police after the defendant's arrest because, despite the defendant's claim that the defendant made an inculpatory statement that caused the defendant to plead guilty, the trial court had every right to disbelieve defendant's self-serving testimony in favor of counsel's testimony that counsel was not aware of the defendant making any inculpatory statement and that no record of such a statement existed in any of the files the state provided to the counsel; in addition, there was no mention of such a statement during the defendant's guilty-plea hearing. Murray v. State, 307 Ga. App. 621, 705 S.E.2d 726 (2011).

Defendant's trial counsel was not deficient for failing to file a motion to suppress evidence because the defendant failed to show that police officers lied under oath during the trial; therefore, the defendant was unable to show that, if defense counsel had filed a motion to suppress on that basis, the trial court would have granted the motion. Bass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 601, 710 S.E.2d 818 (2011).

Defendant failed to establish that there was a reasonable probability that, but for the alleged deficiencies of trial counsel, the outcome of the trial would have been different because the defendant could not show prejudice due to trial counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress the approximately $1,500 discovered when the defendant was searched; even if the evidence had been excluded, the remaining evidence adduced at trial was overwhelming. Lowe v. State, 310 Ga. App. 242, 712 S.E.2d 633 (2011).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to move to suppress evidence found on the defendant's person because any motion to suppress would have been without merit; when the officers lawfully approached and questioned the defendant, the smell of alcohol on the defendant's person and emanating from a cup, and the officers' earlier observations of the defendant staggering and stumbling in the middle of the roadway, gave the officers probable cause to arrest the defendant for unlawfully walking upon the roadway while under the influence of alcohol, O.C.G.A. § 40-6-95, and the cocaine and digital scales subsequently found in the defendant's pockets were discovered pursuant to a lawful search incident to an arrest. White v. State, 310 Ga. App. 386, 714 S.E.2d 31 (2011).

Defendant failed to establish that trial counsel's failure to timely file a motion to suppress evidence a police officer seized from the defendant's vehicle prejudiced the case because the warrantless search of the vehicle was lawful under the automobile exception to the warrant requirement; the objective facts known to the officer after the car was lawfully stopped gave the officer probable cause to believe that the car contained contraband, and those facts included the smell of marijuana in the car, flakes of what the officer suspected to be marijuana on the floorboards of the car, and the defendant's visible agitation during the traffic stop. Brown v. State, 311 Ga. App. 405, 715 S.E.2d 802 (2011).

Trial counsel was not deficient for failing to suppress the eyewitnesses identifications of the defendant because trial counsel could not have suppressed the evidence on the theory that various witnesses' accounts of the shooter were inconclusive or inconsistent since issues regarding the eyewitnesses' credibility were for the jury to resolve; the defendant made no argument on appeal that the pretrial identification procedures used by the police were unduly suggestive. Funes v. State, 289 Ga. 793, 716 S.E.2d 183 (2011).

Trial counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to renew the motion to suppress after evidence was presented at trial because there was no evidence that a renewed motion would have been granted or that the defendant suffered prejudice as a result of counsel's performance. Gibson v. State, 290 Ga. 6, 717 S.E.2d 447 (2011).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective by failing to move to suppress identification evidence and testimony because the admission of a deceased victim's identification statement was made the subject of a motion in limine filed by trial counsel and, thus, there could be no error as counsel did not fail to seek the exclusion of the admission of the victim's identification; the victims' identification of the defendant was merely one of the credibility of eyewitnesses to the incident, which had to be resolved by the trier of fact. Gandy v. State, 290 Ga. 166, 718 S.E.2d 287 (2011).

Failure to challenge search of computer. — Trial counsel was not deficient in failing to challenge the search of the defendant's computer because no basis existed under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-24 for suppressing the results of forensic computer analysis; the analysis required expert skill, and the computer examination was conducted at the direction of Georgia peace officers to enable the officers to complete the officers' own investigation. Twiggs v. State, 315 Ga. App. 191, 726 S.E.2d 680 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress because probable cause to arrest the defendant and to search the defendant incident to that arrest had been shown on undisputed facts; therefore, the defendant could not make the requisite strong showing that a motion to suppress the evidence found during that search would have been meritorious. Coney v. State, 316 Ga. App. 303, 728 S.E.2d 899 (2012).

Trial counsel's failure to move for suppression of an in-court identification by the victims did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel, because the identifications were appropriate given that the victims had ample opportunity to see the defendant at the scene of the crime and there were not impermissibly suggestive pre-trial identification procedures involved in the case. Taylor v. State, 318 Ga. App. 115, 733 S.E.2d 415 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to move to suppress evidence found during a search of the defendant's father's home because, even if the appellate court disregarded the allegedly incorrect statements about the defendant being positively identified as a perpetrator, the affidavit in support of the search warrant accurately stated that an eyewitness had positively identified the codefendant as a murder suspect and that the codefendant was apprehended in the residence the state desired to search. Therefore, the search was conducted pursuant to a valid warrant and the evidence was admissible. Charleston v. State, 292 Ga. 678, 743 S.E.2d 1 (2013).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file an out-of-time motion to suppress that lacked merit. Bradley v. State, 322 Ga. App. 541, 745 S.E.2d 763 (2013).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for child molestation, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial as the defendant failed to show that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel as a result of trial counsel failing to move to suppress the photographic lineup evidence wherein the two victims identified the defendant as the perpetrator. The reviewing court agreed with the trial court that the photographic lineup was not impermissibly suggestive since the lineup depicted six black and white photographs of men of similar race, age, hairstyle, and complexion; thus, the defendant failed to prove that there would have been any merit to the motion to suppress. Mohammed v. State, 295 Ga. App. 514, 672 S.E.2d 483 (2009).

Because the jury was authorized to accept a cashier's identification testimony, because a photographic array was not impermissibly suggestive, and because nearly every weakness in the identification testimony was addressed in trial counsel's closing argument, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to file a motion to suppress. Clowers v. State, 299 Ga. App. 576,

Suppression of identification and photographic lineup. — With regard to the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and related crimes, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress victim's pre-trial photographic lineup and subsequent in-court identifications of the defendant, as there was no basis upon which trial counsel could have successfully moved to have the identifications suppressed since the photographic lineup was not shown to have been unduly suggestive and in-court identification was unquestionably admissible; thus, there was no possibility that the suppression motion would have been successful. Gibson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 183, 661 S.E.2d 850 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for robbery by sudden snatching, the defendant failed to establish that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to file a motion to suppress based on the patrol officer having no articulable suspicion to stop the defendant pursuant to the purported generic car description that was broadcast as the defendant failed to make a strong showing that the motion to suppress would have been granted on the asserted ground. Cray v. State, 291 Ga. App. 609, 662 S.E.2d 365 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute, even if the defendant had not waived the issue of defense counsel being ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress, the challenge was meritless since the search warrant properly named the package the police sought to seize, which the defendant picked up at a mailing store, and the warrant did not need to name the defendant's vehicle, which the defendant entered into with the package. Ferguson v. State, 292 Ga. App. 7, 663 S.E.2d 760 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's convictions for possessing cocaine with the intent to distribute, possessing a firearm during the commission of a crime, and numerous other crimes, the defendant failed to establish that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress with regard to challenging the contraband evidence obtained after the police stopped the defendant's vehicle as an officer attempted to stop the defendant's vehicle for failing to maintain the traffic lane, which was a valid basis for making a traffic stop. As such, there was no basis to file a motion to suppress the contraband discovered in the defendant's vehicle after the stop. Ray v. State, 292 Ga. App. 575, 665 S.E.2d 345 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for distributing cocaine, the defendant failed to establish that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel based on defense counsel failing to move to suppress the evidence obtained during a traffic stop as the motion to suppress would have been futile as the evidence showed that the officer had reasonable suspicion if not probable cause to stop the vehicle based on carefully constructing an orchestrated buy and using a confidential informant. Beck v. State, 292 Ga. App. 472, 665 S.E.2d 701 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1863, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 922 (Ga. 2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for not filing a motion to suppress. The seizure of one defendant did not violate the Fourth Amendment because the seizure was supported by exigent circumstances, and the other defendant lacked standing to contest an officer's search of a garage and had not asserted an ownership interest in a van located in the garage. Dade v. State, 292 Ga. App. 897, 666 S.E.2d 1 (2008).

As an officer's statement to the driver of a vehicle that it would be better for the driver if the driver cooperated because a female officer and a drug dog were on the way did not amount to improper coercion, the defendant could not show that it was likely that a renewed motion to suppress on this ground would have been successful, and the defendant thus failed to make the strong showing necessary to establish ineffective assistance. Darden v. State, 293 Ga. App. 127, 666 S.E.2d 559 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for child molestation and aggravated sexual battery, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's contention that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel for defense counsel's failure to object to the admission of an indictment evidencing the defendant's guilty plea to a prior conviction as such evidence was admissible, and the judgment entered thereon, as a complete record of a witness's criminal conviction for purposes of impeachment. Further, pretermitted whether defense counsel's failure to object to the additional document admitted constituted deficient performance, the defendant failed to show prejudice from the alleged deficiency as the defendant had already admitted to prior convictions during direct examination. Daniel v. State, 292 Ga. App. 560, 665 S.E.2d 696 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 891 (Ga. 2008).

In an armed robbery prosecution, a warrant issued by a judge in DeKalb County to search the defendant's home gave the correct DeKalb County address and directions to that address, but included a scrivener's error indicating the property was located in Gwinnett County. As that error was not so material as to destroy the validity of the search warrant, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to move to suppress clothing found pursuant to the warrant. Fuller v. State, 295 Ga. App. 439, 672 S.E.2d 438 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0749, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 220 (Ga. 2009).

Because the defendant failed to demonstrate the existence of a meritorious Fourth Amendment argument, there was no merit to the argument that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to file a motion to suppress or motion in limine to exclude the evidence obtained from a search of the defendant's apartment. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. 849, 672 S.E.2d 619 (2009).

Defendant's armed robbery conviction was upheld on appeal as the defendant failed to show that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel as a result of trial counsel failing to move to suppress items found in the defendant's vehicle shortly after the robbery linking the defendant to the crime as the defendant failed to prove that the damaging evidence would have been suppressed if the motion had been made. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 639, 673 S.E.2d 30 (2009).

Defense counsel was not ineffective in failing to file a motion to suppress a videotape of the defendant's encounter with police; since the videotape was properly authenticated, such a motion would have been denied. Steillman v. State, 295 Ga. App. 778, 673 S.E.2d 286 (2009).

Because a police officer was authorized to stop the defendant's vehicle based on a suspicion that the defendant had illegally dumped trash, and because the defendant consented to a search of the vehicle, the items seized from the vehicle would not have been suppressed; accordingly, the defendant's ineffective assistance claim failed and the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's Alford plea. Bishop v. State, 299 Ga. App. 241, 682 S.E.2d 201 (2009).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that defendant's trial counsel provided ineffective assistance because the defendant could not make the requisite strong showing that had trial counsel filed a timely motion to suppress, a photographic array that was presented to a reserve deputy sheriff who witnessed the crimes would have been suppressed; the photo array did not present an all but inevitable identification of the defendant because an investigator assembled six pictures of men bearing similar characteristics, such as the same race and same general age range, similar facial features and hair styles, the photographs appeared to have been taken from the same distance, and the photographs displayed similar backgrounds. Smith v. State, 303 Ga. App. 831, 695 S.E.2d 86 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to seek to suppress out-of-court eyewitness identifications as there was no evidence that the challenged pre-trial photographic identification was impermissibly suggestive. Biggins v. State, 322 Ga. App. 286, 744 S.E.2d 811 (2013).

Failure to submit any written motions to suppress certain lineup identification evidence does not support defendant's allegation of ineffective legal representation at trial when the trial court entertained such motions made orally and conducted a hearing thereon outside the presence of the jury. Aparicio v. State, 166 Ga. App. 793, 305 S.E.2d 649 (1983).

Failure to file special demurrer. — Even if the defendant's first counsel was deficient in failing to file a special demurrer, the defendant did not show that such prejudiced the defense since the second trial counsel filed a special demurrer just before trial, which the trial court considered and denied; in any event, had the special demurrer been granted, the state could have re-indicted the defendant, and therefore, the trial court did not err in determining that the defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel lacked merit. Bowden v. State, 279 Ga. App. 173, 630 S.E.2d 792 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to file a special demurrer requiring the state to allege a specific date on which the alleged offenses occurred. Because defendant did not allege the defense of alibi, the specificity of dates would not have been helpful. Stanford v. State, 288 Ga. App. 463, 654 S.E.2d 173 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 461 (Ga. 2008).

Failure to raise a merger issue. — Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to raise a merger issue before the trial court as defendant was convicted of only one count of rape. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 in failing to argue at trial and on appeal that the inmate's statutory rape and incest convictions should have merged into the inmate's rape conviction as a matter of fact since all of the crimes arose out of the same incident, as the crimes of statutory rape and incest were not established by proof of the same or less than all the facts required to establish the crime of rape; the inmate's convictions of statutory rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-3 and incest under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22 were not included pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-1-6(1) in the rape conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1, as statutory rape, which required evidence as to the victim's age and that the victim was not the inmate's spouse, and incest, which required proof of the victim's relation to the inmate, had elements not required for rape. Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Plea counsel performed deficiently in failing to argue for the merger of the defendant's convictions and sentences for armed robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), because the aggravated assault with a deadly weapon charges did not require proof of a fact that the armed robbery charges did not likewise require, and the defendant's aggravated assault convictions unquestionably merged into the defendant's armed-robbery convictions; the armed robbery counts in the indictment provided that the defendant unlawfully, with intent to commit theft, did take property from the person of the victim, by use of an offensive weapon, and the aggravated assault counts provided that the defendant did unlawfully make an assault upon the person of the victim with a steel rod, a deadly weapon, an object, which, when used offensively against a person, was likely to or actually did result in serious bodily injury, by beating the victim about the head and face with the steel rod. Murray v. State, 307 Ga. App. 621, 705 S.E.2d 726 (2011).

Since merger of the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and armed robbery was not authorized, counsel's failure to pursue a meritless motion could not constitute ineffective assistance. McGlasker v. State, 321 Ga. App. 614, 741 S.E.2d 303 (2013).

Failure to request continuance. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to request a continuance after an expert witness on eyewitness identification was obtained; there was no evidence that the defendant, who was indigent and had requested funds for the hiring of an expert witness, was prejudiced as a result of the timing of the defendant's receipt of funds to hire an expert witness. Robinson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 76, 635 S.E.2d 380 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failure to request a continuance to locate potential exculpatory witnesses; the defendant failed to show prejudice, as the defendant did not show that the testimony of such witnesses would have been relevant and favorable. Wells v. State, 281 Ga. 253, 637 S.E.2d 8 (2006).

In a defendant's prosecution for child molestation, the defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a continuance when the defendant's roommate, whose whereabouts were unknown for 18 months, suddenly reappeared on the eve of trial because trial counsel had an adequate opportunity to interview the roommate before the trial began and the roommate answered questions as expected based on trial counsel's review of the roommate's pretrial statements. Moe v. State, 297 Ga. App. 270, 676 S.E.2d 887 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for two counts of aggravated child molestation and three counts of child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4 were appropriate because the defendant failed to prove that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel. The defendant admitted that the defendant did not inform counsel that the defendant wanted to call the defendant's aunt and mother until the day before jury selection and counsel told the defendant that it would probably not be possible to get another continuance; even assuming that counsel could have obtained another continuance, the defendant's counsel was not given an opportunity to testify about why counsel did not attempt to get a continuance or whether there were strategic reasons for not calling the defendant's aunt and mother as witnesses. Watson v. State, 299 Ga. App. 702, 683 S.E.2d 665 (2009).

Defendant could not show that defendant's trial counsel's performance fell outside the wide range of reasonable professional conduct when counsel failed to request a continuance or challenge the admission of the defendant's videotaped police interview after the prosecutor did not produce the videotape to the defense until the day of trial because counsel requested and received a continuance, and thus secured an opportunity to review the videotape prior to trial. Boggs v. State, 304 Ga. App. 698, 697 S.E.2d 843 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a continuance to review evidence and have the evidence tested by the defendant's own expert because the defendant presented no evidence at the motion for new trial hearing to support the defendant's bald assertion that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different had counsel sought a continuance or independent expert testing; even assuming that the defendant could properly raise a claim of ineffectiveness against counsel, the trial court did not err in denying the motion for new trial on that ground. Walker v. State, 288 Ga. 174, 702 S.E.2d 415 (2010).

Decision by trial counsel not to move for a continuance after an alibi witness did not appear and could not be located to testify on the defendant's behalf did not show the counsel's ineffectiveness because trial counsel testified that the alibi witness indicated by telephone that the witness did not want to testify and that defense counsel would not like what the witness had to say if counsel forced the witness to testify, and the trial court was authorized to credit counsel's testimony regarding the alibi witness; because trial counsel's investigation revealed that the supposed alibi witness was reluctant, unfavorable, and possibly prepared to commit perjury, the decision not to call such a witness was a reasonable exercise of professional judgment, and the tactical decision to proceed without the alibi witness's testimony was made after consultation with the defendant, who confirmed on the record that counsel agreed with the decision not to request a continuance. Reeves v. State, 288 Ga. 545, 705 S.E.2d 159 (2011).

Trial counsel was deficient on the ground that counsel's motion for continuance did not comply with O.C.G.A. § 17-8-25 because the witness in question had not been subpoenaed, and, thus, counsel could not comply with the statute; the defendant did not show that the trial court's denial of the motion for continuance was reversible error and did not demonstrate ineffective assistance of counsel. Presley v. State, 307 Ga. App. 528, 705 S.E.2d 870 (2011).

Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a continuance after a witness, who would have testified that another person confessed to killing the victim, failed to appear for trial because without some explanation as to why the witness did not appear at trial or some evidence that the witness had been located in the ensuing months, the defendant failed to demonstrate that the witness would testify at trial, and thus failed to carry the burden to show prejudice; the defendant failed to demonstrate that the outcome of the proceeding would have been different because the defendant did not establish that the witness's testimony would have been admissible at trial since there was no evidence that the confessor made the confession spontaneously or that the confessor and the witness were close friends. Martinez v. State, 289 Ga. 160, 709 S.E.2d 797 (2011).

Requesting continuance and sacrificing right to speedy trial. — Defendant had not shown deficient performance on the part of trial counsel in seeking a continuance; counsel replaced former counsel who was found to have a conflict of interest three days before the scheduled start of defendant's trial, and was immediately faced with a dilemma, to preserve defendant's demand for trial that had been mistakenly filed pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-7-170 and be unprepared for the upcoming trial, or waive defendant's demand for trial by seeking a continuance in order to prepare for trial. Williams v. State, 282 Ga. 561, 651 S.E.2d 674 (2007).

Failure to object when comments made about defendant's silence. — Failure to object to a police detective's comment that the defendant responded to some questions during a police interview after the defendant was Mirandized, but that the defendant refused to answer other questions, was deficient performance by the counsel, but the conviction did not require reversal because the defendant could not show prejudice as the state did not comment or capitalize on the defendant's exercise of the right to remain silent, it was merely a passing comment which was quickly moved away from during the trial, and there was other strong evidence of the defendant's guilt. Hines v. State, 277 Ga. App. 404, 626 S.E.2d 601 (2006).

With regard to convictions for aggravated assault and related crimes, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object or move for a mistrial when a security officer commented on the defendant's pre-arrest silence, namely that the defendant did not speak up as to owning the type of vehicle used to perpetrate the crimes; even if testimony on the defendant's pre-arrest silence had been objectionable, the defendant failed to show any prejudice since other evidence showed that the defendant drove to police station in the defendant's truck and consented to search of that vehicle. Gibson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 183, 661 S.E.2d 850 (2008).

Prosecutor's remark was unlikely to be interpreted as a comment on the defendant's failure to testify and was not intended to comment on the defendant's decision not to testify, but was instead intended to address, albeit inartfully, the defendant's closing argument challenging the veracity and motives of those witnesses who were involved in the subject crimes. Thus, the failure of trial counsel to object to the remarks did not constitute deficient performance. Rosser v. State, 284 Ga. 335, 667 S.E.2d 62 (2008).

In a prosecution for battery and aggravated assault, defense counsel's failure to object to a police officer's single gratuitous reference to the defendant's post-arrest silence was not reversible error because, in view of the strong evidence of the defendant's guilt, this error was unlikely to have affected the outcome of the trial. Crawford v. State, 294 Ga. App. 711, 670 S.E.2d 185 (2008).

In an armed robbery prosecution, defense counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the state's questions regarding the defendant's prearrest silence. As the defendant first raised the issue of that silence while testifying, and the prosecutor's questions regarding the defendant's failure to report an alleged crime against the defendant or to seek police protection only incidentally involved a reference to the defendant's silence, any objection would have been meritless. Dinkins v. State, 295 Ga. App. 289, 671 S.E.2d 299 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when the state asked the arresting officer if the defendant made a statement while in custody. The testimony was not given to prove the defendant's guilt or innocence, but could be characterized as a narrative recitation of the events surrounding the defendant's arrest by the authorities. Hardy v. State, 301 Ga. App. 115, 686 S.E.2d 789 (2009).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel when defendant's attorney failed to object to testimony from a detective regarding the defendant's post-arrest silence because although the testimony was improper, and trial counsel was deficient in failing to object, the defendant could not establish that counsel's deficient performance prejudiced the defendant's defense; trial counsel testified that counsel was unable to explain why counsel had not objected to the testimony but confirmed that counsel's failure to do so did not arise from a strategic decision, but the defendant, who aroused the suspicions of a security guard patrolling a high crime area during the late night hours, was caught in actual possession of nearly 240 grams of cocaine valued between $8,000 and $10,000, in addition to possessing a large amount of currency, and the state did not comment further regarding defendant's failure to give a statement, nor did the state make reference to it during closing argument. Arellano v. State, 304 Ga. App. 838, 698 S.E.2d 362 (2010).

Trial counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's argument that the defendant's failure to come in and speak with police after an arrest warrant issued was evidence of defendant's guilt constituted ineffective assistance because counsel's failure to object arose not from strategy but from counsel's mistaken belief that the argument was not objectionable, and the defendant suffered prejudice as a result of counsel's error; twice during closing the state deliberately and unequivocally argued that the jury could use the defendant's silence against the defendant and view the defendant's failure to come forward and speak with police as evidence of the defendant's guilt, despite the absence of any evidence showing that the defendant was aware that a warrant had issued for the defendant's arrest, and there was no physical evidence linking the defendant to the crimes. Scott v. State, 305 Ga. App. 710, 700 S.E.2d 694 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial on the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel because trial counsel's decision not to object to a police officer's passing reference to the defendant's post-arrest silence was a valid exercise of reasonable professional judgment; given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, there was no reasonable probability that, but for counsel's failure to object, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Jackson v. State, 306 Ga. App. 33, 701 S.E.2d 481 (2010).

Counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's comments on the ground that the prosecutor improperly commented on the defendant's exercise of the defendant's right to remain silent by remarking on the defendant's failure to testify at trial did not amount to deficient performance because the challenged remarks were not improper; the prosecutor made the comments while seeking to persuade the jury that the defendant's statements and behavior shortly after the crimes were inconsistent with the defendant's theory of self-defense, and the remarks were not intended to comment on the defendant's failure to testify or would have been received as such by the jury. Lacey v. State, 288 Ga. 341, 703 S.E.2d 617 (2010).

Trial court's finding that the defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's comments during closing arguments regarding the defendant's decision not to take the stand and testify at trial was not clearly erroneous because appellate counsel never asked trial counsel why trial counsel did not object to the statements; therefore, because trial counsel was never asked to explain the failure to object during the motion hearing, the defendant failed to meet the burden of making an affirmative showing that the purported deficiencies in trial counsel's representation were indicative of ineffectiveness and were not examples of a conscious and deliberate trial strategy. Herndon v. State, 309 Ga. App. 403, 710 S.E.2d 607 (2011).

Defendant's claim that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by not objecting to pervasive comments on the defendant's pre-arrest silence failed because the defendant made an insufficient showing of prejudice; there was strong evidence of the defendant's guilt of felony murder, including that it was undisputed that the defendant was the only adult caring for the victim when the victim received mortal injuries and that the defense that the victim fell from the bed was not supported by the medical evidence. Whitaker v. State, 291 Ga. 139, 728 S.E.2d 209 (2012).

Failure to object to closure of courtroom. — Defendant, who was charged with, inter alia, child molestation, did not show that defense counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to object to closure of the courtroom during the victims' testimony, and because defendant did not object to improper questions posed to and responses given by the state's witnesses, as defendant did not show the courtroom's closure prejudiced defendant. Certain questions and responses were proper under the rule allowing expert opinion testimony about whether a victim's psychological evaluation was consistent with sexual abuse, and there was no reasonable probability that improper testimony about the likelihood that a victim would disclose this kind of sexual abuse to please the victim's mother contributed to the verdict. Hunt v. State, 268 Ga. App. 568, 602 S.E.2d 312 (2004).

Failure to object to clearing of courtroom for young victim's testimony. — With regard to the defendant's convictions on two counts of cruelty to children in the first degree and one count of aggravated battery, the defendant failed to establish that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the clearing of the courtroom when the child victim testified as defense counsel testified at the new trial hearing that defense counsel did not object to the closing of the courtroom because defense counsel recognized that the victim was very young and defense counsel believed it to be appropriate under the circumstances. As a result, defense counsel's decision not to object clearly constituted an exercise of reasonable professional judgment. Glover v. State, 292 Ga. App. 22, 663 S.E.2d 772 (2008).

Failure to object to sheriff testifying as witness also acting as bailiff during trial. — Defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to a county sheriff serving as a bailiff during the defendant's trial on charges of, inter alia, arson because the sheriff was a key witness for the state. Even if the sheriff never directly discussed the case with the jurors, the defendant was prejudiced as the sheriff continually associated with the jurors during half the trial and thus denied the defendant the right to a fair trial by an impartial jury. Bass v. State, 285 Ga. 89, 674 S.E.2d 255 (2009).

Failure to object to comment on victim's credibility. — Defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to defendant's trial and conviction for child molestation based on trial counsel's failure to object to certain testimony by the investigating officer that commented upon the victim's credibility as, even though trial counsel did not object, the trial court gave a curative instruction that specifically informed the jury to disregard the officer's testimony commenting on the victim's credibility, which was adequate to correct any harm. Williams v. State, 290 Ga. App. 841, 660 S.E.2d 740 (2008).

Defendant did not show that trial counsel was ineffective by failing to object to the state's comment during closing argument regarding an experts' opinion regarding child molestation victims' credibility. Nor did the defendant show that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the case would have been different but for the purported deficient performance of trial counsel. Cobb v. State, 309 Ga. App. 70, 709 S.E.2d 9 (2011).

Failure to object to impermissible questions/comments on defendant's pre-arrest silence from prosecution.

— With regard to a defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, although the defendant's trial counsel was deficient for failing to object to the prosecutor's impermissible questions and comments relating to the defendant's pre-arrest silence regarding the defendant's failure to contact the police to inform the police of the alleged accidental shooting, the defendant was not prejudiced by the deficiency based on the overwhelming evidence of guilt, including eyewitness accounts and evidence that the deceased victim was unarmed, which negated the defendant's accidental shooting and self-defense theories. Thomas v. State, 284 Ga. 647, 670 S.E.2d 421 (2008).

Failure to object to identification of defendant.

— Defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to object to an in-court identification of the defendant by the aggravated assault victim because the defendant neither asked trial counsel why no objection was made to the in-court identification nor made any showing that the identification would have been suppressed had an objection been made; the defendant made no affirmative showing that the purported deficiency in counsel's representation was indicative of ineffectiveness as opposed to being an example of a conscious, deliberate, and reasonable trial strategy. Newsome v. State, 288 Ga. 647, 706 S.E.2d 436 (2011).

Trial counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to object to a convenience-store clerk's allegedly tainted in-court identification of the defendant because the clerk's identification of the defendant had an independent origin, and thus, any objection would have lacked merit; although the clerk did admit to seeing a photograph of the defendant prior to trial, the clerk testified that the in-court identification of the defendant was not based on a photograph but rather on the clerk's recognition of the defendant from the time of the robbery. Anderson v. State, 311 Ga. App. 732, 716 S.E.2d 813 (2011).

Defendant did not show ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant failed to establish prejudice resulting from the defense counsel's failure to file pretrial motions regarding identification. Donald v. State, 312 Ga. App. 222, 718 S.E.2d 81 (2011).

Trial counsel's failure to object when the prosecutor asked a police officer if the defendant was the person in the surveillance video and the officer said yes did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel as counsel testified that it was a strategic decision made based on counsel's opinion that counsel would lose credibility by making such an objection. Spinks v. State, 322 Ga. App. 387, 745 S.E.2d 653 (2013).

Failure to raise inconsistent verdict issue. — Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to raise an inconsistent verdict issue before the trial court as Georgia did not recognize the inconsistent verdict rule. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to object to the jury verdict after the jury found the defendant guilty of burglary and not guilty of the underlying charge of criminal damage to property; Georgia does not recognize an inconsistent verdict rule, which would permit a defendant to challenge the factual findings underlying a guilty verdict on one count as inconsistent with the findings underlying a not guilty verdict on a different count. Ursulita v. State, 307 Ga. App. 735, 706 S.E.2d 123 (2011).

Failure to comply with reciprocal discovery. — Because any error in the trial court's exclusion of the evidence of the male victim's prior convictions was harmless, the defendant's trial counsel could not have been found ineffective due to an alleged failure to comply with reciprocal discovery. Skaggs-Ferrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 872, 652 S.E.2d 891 (2007).

Defendant had not shown that counsel was ineffective for not engaging in reciprocal discovery under O.C.G.A. § 17-16-1. The defendant offered no evidence that counsel was unprepared or unaware of the salient evidence before trial and had not shown that the outcome would have been different had counsel opted into discovery. Anuforo v. State, 293 Ga. App. 1, 666 S.E.2d 50 (2008).

Premature filing of notice of alibi.

— In an armed robbery prosecution, trial counsel was not ineffective for disclosing the defendant's alibi defense before the prosecution filed a demand for notice of alibi under O.C.G.A. § 17-16-5(a) because counsel knew that such a demand was going to be filed, and the defendant was not prejudiced by the premature disclosure. Fuller v. State, 295 Ga. App. 439, 672 S.E.2d 438 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0749, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 220 (Ga. 2009).

Failure to object to order appointing judge. — Defendant's claim that an order appointing a senior judge to preside over defendant's trial was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 15-1-9.2(b) was not timely filed given it was filed after the motion for a new trial. Furthermore, counsel's failure to object to the appointment of the judge did not deny defendant effective assistance of counsel. Strozier v. State, 277 Ga. 78, 586 S.E.2d 309 (2003).

Defendant's counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to object to an order appointing a judge because defendant failed to show that defendant was denied a fair trial by virtue of the appointment order; defendant did not satisfy the prejudice component of the test for ineffective assistance of counsel. Oliver v. State, 273 Ga. App. 754, 615 S.E.2d 846 (2005).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object that the order appointing a trial judge had expired by the time the defendant went to trial on a cocaine trafficking charge because the defendant failed to establish that the expiration of the order in any way denied the defendant a fair trial. Jones v. State, 294 Ga. App. 854, 670 S.E.2d 506 (2008).

Failure to request bench trial. — Defendant was not deprived of the effective assistance of counsel because the defendant never stated that the defendant wanted a bench trial and the counsel's decision to try the child molestation case before a jury was plainly strategic. Iles v. State, 278 Ga. App. 895, 630 S.E.2d 148 (2006).

Failure to file motion to suppress evidence. — Because the information in an affidavit provided the magistrate a substantial basis for concluding that probable cause existed for issuing the search warrant, a motion to suppress the search warrant would have been futile; accordingly, defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective. Jarrett v. State, 299 Ga. App. 525, 683 S.E.2d 116 (2009).

No obligation to file meritless motions. — When the defendant's trial counsel did not move for a mistrial after hearsay was admitted and the court on appeal determined such evidence was properly admitted under an exception to the hearsay rule, the failure to move for a mistrial did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel because such a motion would have been meritless; furthermore, when defendant's counsel failed to object to the defendant's exclusion during jury selection and the court on appeal determined that the defendant had waived the right to be present during jury selection because of the defendant's disruptive behavior, the failure to object to the defendant's removal did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel because such a motion would have been meritless. Lovelace v. State, 262 Ga. App. 690, 586 S.E.2d 386 (2003).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present a meritless motion for a directed verdict because the evidence established that the defendant was guilty of both armed robbery and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony, and failing to object to an officer's opinion testimony identifying the defendant in a store security videotape, because the defendant's identification did not rest entirely on the videotape identification since a custodian identified the defendant in a pretrial photographic lineup. Bryson v. State, 316 Ga. App. 512, 729 S.E.2d 631 (2012).

Defendant was not rendered ineffective assistance of counsel by counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress a stop of defendant's car when that motion was meritless; the officer had a reasonable and articulable suspicion of defendant's criminal activity sufficient to justify an investigatory stop of defendant's car when the officer received information from a known, law-abiding, and concerned citizen, who testified at trial and who, on the day in question, had the opportunity to personally observe the defendant's suspicious activities. Saxon v. State, 266 Ga. App. 547, 597 S.E.2d 608 (2004).

Defendant was unable to show that the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective because: (1) the failure to pursue a futile objection with regards to the similar transaction evidence did not constitute ineffective assistance; and (2) two of the reasons that defendant's trial counsel did not object were either that counsel determined that the statement was not objectionable enough or counsel did not want to further highlight the remark. McGuire v. State, 266 Ga. App. 673, 598 S.E.2d 55 (2004).

Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to preserve an objection to the denial of a motion for a mistrial; the motion was based on a deadlocked jury and it was not error to fail to preserve a claim that the jury deliberated without one member present; further, defendant failed to show that the jury deliberated with only 11 members present, so the motion would not have been successful. Brantley v. State, 271 Ga. App. 733, 611 S.E.2d 71 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as there was no evidence that the attorney-client relationship had deteriorated such that counsel was unable to be effective; defendant failed to show that counsel was deficient in failing to file a motion to withdraw or that there was a reasonable probability that the result of the trial would have been different but for the alleged deficiency. Williams v. State, 273 Ga. App. 213, 614 S.E.2d 834 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as counsel disregarded defendant's request that counsel file a motion to recuse the trial judge because there were no grounds for recusing the trial judge; defendant could not show either deficient performance or prejudice. Williams v. State, 273 Ga. App. 213, 614 S.E.2d 834 (2005).

Defendant did not show that defense counsel provided ineffective assistance by not filing discovery motions because the state had an open file policy and a hearing was held on counsel's objection to the admission of defendant's pre-Miranda statement to the police, so no prejudice was shown. Brown v. State, 273 Ga. App. 577, 615 S.E.2d 628 (2005).

Because the victim's passing reference to "all of the really bad things that have happened to me in my life" and the testimony of the victim's grandmother that the victim's mother had been unable to raise the victim because of the mother's drug problems, did not represent victim impact statements, as neither addressed the impact of the crime at issue, trial counsel could not be deemed ineffective for failing to object to the testimony, as any objection to the testimony would have been meritless. Anthony v. State, 282 Ga. App. 457, 638 S.E.2d 877 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit as: (1) the defendant failed to give any specific examples of prejudice; (2) the defendant, after consultation with counsel, testified freely and voluntarily; and (3) any objections counsel might have made to a videotaped statement would have lacked merit as those statements included evidence of prior difficulties, admissible without notice and without the need for a pretrial hearing; hence, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial on those grounds. Campbell v. State, 282 Ga. App. 854, 640 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Trial court's denial of a defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal was proper with respect to the defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective in violation of U.S. Const., amend. 6 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to object to testimony by a probation officer, as the officer's statement that under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-2(a)(3), the defendant did not have to register as a sex offender if the defendant was afforded treatment as a first offender was a correct statement of law at the time; accordingly, counsel's failure to object thereto was not ineffective, as any such objection would have lacked merit. Ethridge v. State, 283 Ga. App. 289, 641 S.E.2d 282 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal as such failed to show any meritorious ground, and the defendant's failure to timely file an appeal did not result from the ineffective assistance of trial counsel, as it was apparent from the transcript of the plea hearing that the issues sought to be raised in the out-of-time appeal completely lacked merit. Hicks v. State, 281 Ga. 836, 642 S.E.2d 31 (2007).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise the issue of entrapment in a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal because the defendant was not entrapped by law enforcement and the defendant did not admit to committing the charged crimes. Therefore, counsel was not required to make a motion that was without merit. Logan v. State, 309 Ga. App. 95, 709 S.E.2d 302, cert. denied, No. S11C1101, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 579; cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 823, 181 L. Ed. 2d 533 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to pre-autopsy photographs of murder victims; each of the photographs was relevant to some point of a forensic pathologist's testimony, and thus the photographs were admissible. Conway v. State, 281 Ga. 685, 642 S.E.2d 673 (2007).

Testimony by an officer about inconsistencies between the defendant's statements did not amount to improper bolstering or comment on the defendant's veracity; thus, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to them. Gonzalez v. State, 283 Ga. App. 843, 643 S.E.2d 8 (2007).

A witness's testimony about statements made by the defendant during the commission of the battery would have been admissible as res gestae, even if they related to previous crimes; thus, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to it. McClain v. State, 284 Ga. App. 187, 643 S.E.2d 273 (2007).

Because a pre-trial motion to quash was not the proper method to attack an indictment for any defect not appearing on its face, and the defendant did not argue that there was a defect on the face of the indictment justifying a motion to quash, but instead counsel attacked the validity of the protective order supporting the indictment through both an original and renewed motion for directed verdict, trial counsel was not ineffective. Shafer v. State, 285 Ga. App. 748, 647 S.E.2d 274 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1498, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 642 (Ga. 2007).

Meritless objection to evidence not required. — In a case involving sexual offenses against a child, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a meritless objection to evidence of the defendant's prior arrest for assault and battery against the victim's mother; the evidence was properly admitted to explain the victim's delay in reporting the crime. Borders v. State, 285 Ga. App. 337, 646 S.E.2d 319 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1374, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 640 (Ga. 2007).

Because trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a meritless objection to the introduction of evidence that was deemed relevant, and none of the prosecutor's closing remarks were objectionable in the manner alleged by the defendant on appeal, trial counsel was not found to be ineffective. Williamson v. State, 285 Ga. App. 779, 648 S.E.2d 118 (2007).

Defense counsel's failure to demur to the indictment and to request an additional limiting instruction concerning properly admitted similar transaction evidence did not amount to deficient performance, as those actions would have been unavailing and the outcome of the trial would not have been different but for counsel's alleged omissions. May v. State, 287 Ga. App. 407, 651 S.E.2d 510 (2007).

Rape conviction was upheld on appeal as the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on defense counsel's failure to object to certain testimony from the victim about the defendant's history of selling drugs and failure to subpoena certain medical records, as: (1) testimony from the victim that the defendant gave the victim drugs before some of the sexual encounters between them was admissible as part of the res gestae; and (2) the medical records were generally consistent with the victim's testimony, and therefore no prejudice resulted from failing to subpoena them. Mitchell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 517, 651 S.E.2d 821 (2007).

Defendant had not shown ineffective assistance of counsel since the stop and search of the defendant's vehicle were authorized by information that the car was stolen, and thus a motion contesting the stop would have been futile, and the defendant had not shown how additional time spent with counsel prior to trial would have benefitted the defendant's defense; also, the defendant in arguing that defense counsel had failed to interview potential witnesses had not identified any witness or proffered testimony that would have been favorable to the defense, and counsel's choice to argue that marijuana did not belong to the defendant instead of arguing that the substance was not marijuana was a strategic decision. King v. State, 287 Ga. App. 375, 651 S.E.2d 496 (2007).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claims regarding the defendant's initial post-trial counsel's performance lacked merit, as counsel was neither professionally deficient nor prejudicial because: (1) the defendant waived any right to be present at the two juror interviews; (2) no deficiency could result from counsel's failure to raise meritless objections; and (3) the trial court specifically found that the defendant adequately understood the nature of the charges, comprehended the proceedings, despite being under the influence of prescribed anti-depressants, and was capable of aiding the defense. Hampton v. State, 282 Ga. 490, 651 S.E.2d 698 (2007).

Because the defendant failed to show that defense counsel's performance fell below an objective standard of reasonableness, and the objections the defendant claimed should have been made were deemed meritless, counsel could not be found to be ineffective. Boyd v. State, 289 Ga. App. 342, 656 S.E.2d 864 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 498 (Ga. 2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for armed robbery and other crimes, the defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel from failure to: (1) adequately prepare the defendant for trial; (2) keep the defendant adequately updated with respect to issues relevant to the defense; and (3) discuss post-trial motions; the defendant failed to meet the burden of proving that any such alleged deficiency prejudiced the defendant in any manner. Defense counsel's failure to file a written motion to sever would have been pointless, as the trial court had considered the defense's oral motion; there was no evidence in the record that other witnesses existed that could have been called on the defendant's behalf; and trial counsel did not represent the defendant with regard to the defendant's motion for a new trial, therefore, the alleged failure of trial counsel to prepare the defendant for the motion for new trial hearing could not have constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. Grant v. State, 289 Ga. App. 230, 656 S.E.2d 873 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for not using the word "pretextual" in making Batson challenges. Although counsel did not use the word "pretextual," counsel sought to rebut the prosecutor's explanations by arguing either that the strike was not race-neutral or that, considering the totality of the jury's responses to questions on voir dire examination, there was no factual basis for the strike. Nelson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 326, 657 S.E.2d 263 (2008).

A defendant had not shown that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to give certain pretrial notices. The trial court had not excluded the evidence based on counsel's failure to comply with court rules; moreover, there was no prejudice because a witness had testified at trial as to the evidence the defendant claimed that counsel should have introduced. Nelson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 326, 657 S.E.2d 263 (2008).

Defense counsel's failure to move for a directed verdict did not constitute ineffective assistance because the evidence presented was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for armed robbery; therefore, defendant was not entitled to a directed verdict and counsel's failure to move for the directed verdict did not entitle the defendant to a new trial. The failure of counsel to pursue a meritless motion did not constitute ineffective assistance of trial counsel. Range v. State, 289 Ga. App. 727, 658 S.E.2d 245 (2008).

Trial counsel's delay in pursuing a defendant's motion for new trial after the defendant was convicted of felony murder did not result in a denial of the defendant's due process rights and did not constitute ineffective assistance as the record showed that much of the ten-year delay between the filing of the motion for new trial and the motion's resolution was due to the defendant's own inaction after counsel advised the defendant that counsel did not intend to pursue the motion for new trial or any other appellate process because counsel was unable to discern any error or merit to an appeal. Browning v. State, 283 Ga. 528, 661 S.E.2d 552 (2008).

Because defendant neither asked for corrective action nor moved for a mistrial after the trial court's finding that a juror did not fall asleep, counsel was not ineffective because any objection or motion on the subject would have been unmeritorious. Peterson v. State, 294 Ga. App. 128, 668 S.E.2d 544 (2008).

While a juror initially stated during voir dire that the juror was unsure if the juror could be unbiased, but later stated the juror would try to be impartial and would follow the trial court's instructions, defense counsel was not ineffective for not moving to strike the juror for cause as such a motion would have been denied. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 633, 667 S.E.2d 899 (2008).

Even assuming that defense counsel's failure to move for a mistrial following a comment by the State of Georgia was deficient, the defendant did not show ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant did not show that a mistrial would have been granted had counsel done so. Baker v. State, 307 Ga. App. 884, 706 S.E.2d 214 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C0940, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 517 (Ga. 2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for a mistrial when a state's witness interjected bad character evidence because the witness's improper remarks were fleeting, unsolicited, and nonresponsive to the prosecutor's examination questions, and since the defendant did not show that the defendant was otherwise entitled to a mistrial based upon the circumstances, trial counsel's failure to pursue a meritless motion does not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel; the trial court sustained the objections to the improper testimony and instructed the prosecutor and witness to restrict the examination and responses, the witness and prosecutor complied with the trial court's instructions, and there was no further mention of the bad character evidence. Boatright v. State, 308 Ga. App. 266, 707 S.E.2d 158 (2011).

Trial counsel's failure to renew a non-meritorious motion for directed verdict provided no ground for claiming ineffective assistance of counsel. Jimmerson v. State, 289 Ga. 364, 711 S.E.2d 660 (2011).

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial, based upon ineffective assistance of counsel, because, even assuming that two jurors saw the defendant in shackles and handcuffs as the jurors returned from lunch, it could not have been presumed that the jury was unfairly tainted by the defendant's appearance as the evidence against the defendant was overwhelming. Furthermore, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial, based upon ineffective assistance of counsel, because there was no fatal variance between the indictment that alleged that the defendant committed armed robbery by use of a pellet pistol and evidence that showed that the weapon used was a BB gun. Because no fatal variance existed, the defendant's assertion that appellate counsel rendered ineffective assistance for failure to raise the issue on appeal also failed as the issue of variance was without merit. Jones v. State, 312 Ga. App. 15, 717 S.E.2d 526 (2011).

Trial counsel's failure to raise a novel legal argument. — that O.C.G.A. § 16-5-43 was unconstitutionally vague, did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Washington v. State, 271 Ga. App. 764, 610 S.E.2d 692 (2005).

Missed deadlines. — Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by missing the deadline for disclosing a witness's written statement as defendant personally chose to proceed with the trial without the witness and defendant could not argue that the state should have requested a continuance instead of defendant. Clark v. State, 271 Ga. App. 534, 610 S.E.2d 165 (2005).

Failure to show defendant discovery. — In denying the defendant a new trial, the trial court expressly found that trial counsel was not ineffective, specifically finding that: (1) counsel's decision not to provide the defendant with a copy of the discovery was based on the fact that the defendant could not read and was going to rely on someone else at the jail to read the documents, and that counsel was concerned that showing the discovery to another inmate might produce a "snitch," and (2) prior to trial, counsel spent two and a half hours with the defendant going over the state's evidence. Hence, the trial court concluded that counsel had a good reason for not giving the defendant a copy of the discovery, and that counsel was exceptionally effective in representing the defendant's interests. White v. State, 281 Ga. 20, 635 S.E.2d 720 (2006).

Failure to disclose and use exculpatory evidence. — In a case in which defendant claimed mistaken identity and there was no question that defendant's dental records would have disproved the state's argument that defendant might have acquired the gold teeth after a robbery and would have corroborated the impeached and biased testimony of the defense witnesses, defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for failing to disclose the exculpatory evidence after opting in to reciprocal discovery and failed to use the evidence; because there was a reasonable possibility that the outcome of defendant's trial would have been different, defendant was entitled to a new trial. Gibbs v. State, 270 Ga. App. 56, 606 S.E.2d 83 (2004).

Time with a client. — Counsel was not ineffective for insufficiently reviewing the state's discovery with the defendant, as there was no magic amount of time the counsel had to spend in actual conference with a client, nor did the defendant show how additional communications with counsel would have changed the trial's outcome. Giddens v. State, 276 Ga. App. 353, 623 S.E.2d 204 (2005).

Defendant was not afforded ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel met with the defendant 15 to 20 times prior to trial, investigated all leads provided by the defendant, spoke with numerous witnesses and potential witnesses, including the minor molestation victim's grandmother, brothers, great aunts, and mother, as well as all other witnesses the defendant mentioned, and reviewed the victim's videotaped interview with authorities. Iles v. State, 278 Ga. App. 895, 630 S.E.2d 148 (2006).

On remand, a Georgia trial court properly found that the defendant did not receive the ineffective assistance of trial counsel, as the record clearly showed that counsel: (1) met with the defendant to prepare for trial and go over discovery; (2) met with the prosecutor to discuss the case; (3) discussed legal issues and possible defenses with the defendant; and (4) properly decided to withhold copies of documents from the defendant, who was incarcerated, out of an abundance of caution that other inmates would steal them, learn the details of the case, and then offer to testify against the defendant in order to receive preferable treatment. Williams v. State, 281 Ga. 196, 637 S.E.2d 25 (2006).

Defendant did not show ineffective assistance of counsel during the defendant's trial for armed robbery and other crimes on the ground that the defense attorney only met with the defendant once before the trial; there existed no magical amount of time which counsel was required to spend in actual conference with a client, and more importantly, the defendant did not describe how additional pre-trial communications would have changed the outcome of the trial and therefore failed to establish that the defense was prejudiced. Metoyer v. State, 282 Ga. App. 810, 640 S.E.2d 345 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to confer meaningfully with the defendant because the defendant did not specifically describe how additional communications with counsel could have changed the outcome of the trial; there exists no magic amount of time which counsel must spend in actual conference with a client. Glass v. State, 289 Ga. 542, 712 S.E.2d 851 (2011).

Time to prepare for trial. — Because defendant's attorneys did not move for a continuance and obtain a longer time to prepare the case, because they allowed irrelevant or otherwise illegal evidence to be admitted without objection, because they relied solely on the statement of the defendant to the jury without introducing testimony, and because they themselves did not actively pursue the motion for new trial are not matters which would constitute a denial of the right to due process, but at most would amount to alleged negligence or errors of judgment. Wilcoxon v. Aldredge, 193 Ga. 661, 19 S.E.2d 499, cert. denied, 317 U.S. 626, 63 S. Ct. 36, 87 L. Ed. 506 (1942).

When counsel was appointed to the case approximately two weeks before the defendant's trial was scheduled to begin, the counsel had only a short period of time in which to prepare for this case, counsel had duties in other courts, and counsel's mother's illness occupied a great deal of counsel's out-of-court time, the defendant was not given effective assistance of counsel. Cochran v. State, 262 Ga. 106, 414 S.E.2d 211 (1992).

Defendant did not show defense counsel provided ineffective assistance because counsel was not prepared for trial since defendant did not point to any instances in the record that reflected counsel's lack of preparedness. Berry v. State, 262 Ga. App. 375, 585 S.E.2d 679 (2003).

When defense counsel admitted, at a hearing on defendant's motion for a new trial, that counsel could have done more to prepare defendant's case, defendant was not entitled to a new trial due to ineffective assistance of counsel because defendant did not show that counsel's additional investigation would have caused a different verdict in defendant's trial. Parker v. State, 274 Ga. App. 347, 617 S.E.2d 625 (2005).

Defendant did not show the prejudice required for ineffective assistance of counsel and prejudice was not presumed as counsel did not entirely fail to subject the prosecution's case to meaningful adversarial testing; counsel presented a coherent theory of voluntary manslaughter and mutual combat, and testified to extensive preparation for trial, including several meetings with defendant totaling over 13 hours, as well as other meetings with defendant's family. Young v. State, 280 Ga. 65, 623 S.E.2d 491 (2005).

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial due to ineffective assistance of counsel as defendant did not specify how trial counsel failed to adequately prepare for trial or how defendant was prejudiced. Mayfield v. State, 276 Ga. App. 544, 623 S.E.2d 725 (2005).

Counsel, who spent one full work week and two weekends preparing for the trial, met with defendant three times to discuss trial strategy, talked to each witness, and read every police report and statement included in the state's file and outlined and compared them to prepare for trial, was not ineffective; even assuming, arguendo, that trial counsel was inadequately prepared, defendant failed to show prejudice. Robertson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 231, 626 S.E.2d 206 (2006).

Defendant also failed to establish the claim that the attorney was ineffective in asking for a continuance to prepare for trial since, even if defendant's attorney should have proceeded to trial unprepared, in order to try to force the state to comply with a deadline imposed by a habeas decision, defendant failed to show prejudice as there was no evidence that the state would not have been able to satisfy the deadline. Fortson v. State, 280 Ga. 435, 629 S.E.2d 798 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel in a rape charge after: trial counsel testified that trial counsel met with defendant many times; hired an investigator who interviewed every relevant witness, including one who, contrary to defendant's claim, did not corroborate defendant's claim of consensual sex with the victim; and that defense counsel went over everything with defendant; defendant pointed to nothing in the record indicating that trial counsel was not prepared for trial or did not understand the facts or law pertaining to the case; defense counsel's failure to file a motion in limine to prohibit the use of the term "rape" did not constitute ineffective assistance; and other claims of ineffective assistance of counsel were unpreserved since defendant failed to raise them in the motion for a new trial. Nguyen v. State, 279 Ga. App. 129, 630 S.E.2d 636 (2006).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied as trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in failing to prepare notes and questions for use during direct and cross-examination; the defendant did not show how any alleged deficiency prejudiced the defendant's case. Lawson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 870, 635 S.E.2d 259 (2006).

Although the defendant alleged on appeal that trial counsel should have interviewed additional witnesses, conducted a more thorough investigation, presented the defendant's medical record, and discussed further developments, defenses, and the defendant's right to appeal, the defendant failed to present any evidence to support those claims; further, the defendant's testimony at a hearing on the motion to withdraw a guilty plea simply presented a matter of witness credibility, which was for the trial court to decide. Foster v. State, 281 Ga. App. 584, 636 S.E.2d 759 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to sufficiently investigate or attempt to understand the facts and law upon which the various charges were based; trial counsel had significant previous experience with child molestation cases such as the defendant's, and the defendant failed to point to any specific evidence in the record demonstrating that trial counsel was unprepared or did not understand the case. Mikell v. State, 281 Ga. App. 739, 637 S.E.2d 142 (2006).

Appellate court rejected the defendant's contention that trial counsel was ineffective: (1) in failing to investigate another molestation charge filed against the defendant; (2) by failing to interview the defendant's mother; (3) in not investigating the state's failure to obtain a warrant to determine whether the defendant's computer contained or could access pornographic material; (4) by referring to the defendant's prior criminal record on DUI charges; (5) in introducing several letters from the defendant's daughter into evidence; and (6) by characterizing the defendant in closing argument as guilty of drunken and boorish behavior, as the trial court was authorized to believe counsel's testimony regarding counsel's sufficient preparation for trial, and finding that without a proffer of evidence concerning the defendant's computer, the defendant could not show a reasonable probability that the results of the proceedings would have been different; hence, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial on grounds that trial counsel was ineffective. Carey v. State, 281 Ga. App. 816, 637 S.E.2d 757 (2006).

Although a defendant asserted that certain statements by the defendant's trial counsel about inadequate time to review discovery materials provided by the prosecution indicated that the trial counsel was insufficiently prepared for the defendant's malice murder trial, no ineffective assistance of counsel was shown; the trial court noted on the motion for a new trial that the record showed that trial counsel had reviewed the material provided by the prosecution, had investigated the case, had filed and argued pre-trial motions, and had adequate time to prepare for trial, and the defendant did not point out any occurrence at trial that demonstrated a lack of preparation. Green v. State, 281 Ga. 322, 638 S.E.2d 288 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims based on counsel's failure to call certain witnesses on the defendant's behalf and failure to adequately meet with the defendant to prepare for trial were rejected as the defendant presented nothing more than bare allegations that trial counsel should have acted differently; the defendant did not identify the potential witnesses, proffer their testimony, indicate what other steps counsel might have taken, or indicate how additional preparation would have altered the outcome of the trial. Hinkle v. State, 282 Ga. App. 328, 638 S.E.2d 781 (2006).

Defendant's defense attorney did not provide ineffective assistance in the defendant's child molestation trial by failing to prepare adequately; the record supported a finding that the attorney's preparation was not deficient because the attorney testified to spending 70 to 100 hours preparing for the trial, including filing pre-trial motions, reviewing the state's file on the case, interviewing witnesses, discussing defenses with the defendant, conveying a negotiated plea offer to the defendant, and pursuing a defense that a different perpetrator had committed the offenses against the victim. Wheat v. State, 282 Ga. App. 655, 639 S.E.2d 578 (2006).

Because the defendant was unable to establish prejudice resulting from trial counsel's alleged shortcomings, specifically that counsel was unprepared for trial, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim lacked merit. Bradford v. State, 287 Ga. App. 50, 651 S.E.2d 356 (2007).

Defendant did not meet the defendant's burden to demonstrate that counsel performed deficiently by failing to explain the risks of retaining new counsel on the eve of the defendant's trial as counsel testified that counsel interviewed all of the witnesses; met with the defendant the day before trial and for one or two hours on the morning of trial; and believed counsel had plenty of time to prepare for the misdemeanor trial. As the trial court was entitled to credit counsel's testimony and disbelieve the defendant's, it was authorized to find that counsel was adequately prepared. Bagley v. State, 298 Ga. App. 513, 680 S.E.2d 565 (2009).

Defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective due to counsel's alleged failure to adequately prepare the case and consult with the defendant prior to trial, although there were two public defenders that represented the defendant during the criminal proceedings, there was testimony from the second public defender that the case had been fully investigated and was ready to be tried, and that there was no reason to pursue further defenses. Simmons v. State, 309 Ga. App. 369, 710 S.E.2d 193 (2011).

Defendant did not show that trial counsel was unprepared for trial on the ground that counsel received thousands of pages of medical records shortly before trial because the defendant failed to establish that the receipt of the medical records shortly before trial was counsel's fault, and to the extent counsel's preparation was affected thereby, that preparation did not constitute deficient performance on counsel's part. Eskew v. State, 309 Ga. App. 44, 709 S.E.2d 893 (2011).

Total failure to prepare for trial required a disposition that there was evidence of ineffectiveness so pervasive that a particularized inquiry into prejudice would be unguided speculation. Cochran v. State, 262 Ga. 106, 414 S.E.2d 211 (1992).

Upon the state's appeal pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 5-7-1(a)(7), the appeals court found that the defendant was properly granted a new trial based on the ineffective assistance of trial counsel, given counsel's failure to interview any of the state's witnesses, present a viable defense to the charge of involuntary manslaughter, and adequately investigate whether the victim's death might have been an accident. State v. McMillon, 283 Ga. App. 671, 642 S.E.2d 343 (2007).

Defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel based on the defendant's attorney's lack of preparation for trial and failure to present a defense; at trial, the defense called no witnesses and presented no other evidence on the defendant's behalf, and trial counsel's belief as to what testimony that witnesses proposed by the defendant might offer was formulated without the attorney ever having contacted those witnesses. Johnson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 147, 643 S.E.2d 556 (2007).

Failure to prepare defendant adequately for trial. — Defendant failed to show that defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to adequately prepare the defendant for trial because trial counsel testified that counsel met with the defendant at least four times prior to trial to discuss the case, and the defendant failed to demonstrate how additional time with counsel would have changed the outcome of defendant's case; trial counsel testified that counsel believed that counsel and the Spanish interpreters counsel used were able to effectively communicate with the defendant and that the defendant never gave counsel any indication that defendant was unable to understand Spanish. Cruz v. State, 305 Ga. App. 805, 700 S.E.2d 631 (2010).

Defendant, in the absence of a proffer showing how further preparation would have changed the defendant's testimony such that it would have affected the outcome of the case, could not meet the defendant's burden of making an affirmative showing that specifically demonstrated how defense counsel's failure to have properly prepared the defendant for cross-examination would have affected the outcome of the defendant's case. Donald v. State, 312 Ga. App. 222, 718 S.E.2d 81 (2011).

Duty of defense counsel to fully investigate case. — Counsel for a defendant not only has the right, but it is counsel's plain duty towards the client, to investigate the case fully and to interview any persons who might be able to assist counsel in ascertaining the truth concerning the event in controversy. Wilson v. State, 93 Ga. App. 229, 91 S.E.2d 201 (1956).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial based on the defendant's claim that the defendant's trial counsel provided ineffective assistance as defendant did not show that counsel did not fulfill the duty to fully investigate the defendant's case; the trial court was entitled to believe the attorney's testimony that the attorney went and spoke with neighbors defendant said could provide an alibi and that none of them could do so over defendant's testimony that counsel claimed a lack of time to interview them, and could believe that phone records defendant said would help defendant's case did not exist as the defendant did not provide those records personally or indicate what they contained that would have helped the defendant's case. Roberts v. State, 262 Ga. App. 629, 585 S.E.2d 920 (2003).

Because defendant's own friends and acquaintances could not verify that defendant was at a nightclub on the night of the murder, it was highly questionable that total strangers would be likely to provide any corroboration; thus, under the circumstances, the trial court did not err in concluding that the attorney performed effectively because the attorney did an investigation and there was no constitutional or statutory requirement that counsel actually visit the nightclub; therefore, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed. Wicks v. State, 278 Ga. 550, 604 S.E.2d 768 (2004).

Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to conduct a proper pretrial investigation as defendant failed to show that a grand juror was not qualified because the grand juror was a convicted felon; further, even if a grand juror was the father of a prosecution witness, defendant failed to show prejudice as the disqualification of a grand juror under O.C.G.A. § 15-12-70 was not a viable ground for quashing an indictment. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Trial counsel for an inmate provided ineffective assistance because the counsel did not adequately investigate a factual defense to the crimes or obtain available testimony confirming their client's own statements that other people committed the crimes and threatened to harm the inmate for speaking up, and witnesses discovered by habeas counsel showing that another person: (1) possessed the victims' van about the time of the murder; (2) was seen, along with another person, about that time, to be acting strangely; (3) had what appeared to be bloodstains on that person's clothes; and (4) was distributing quarters after the victims, who ran a coin-operated laundry, had been abducted and killed. Terry v. Jenkins, 280 Ga. 341, 627 S.E.2d 7 (2006).

Because: (1) defendant failed to show that prejudice by the attorney's failure to view a surveillance tape or tender it into evidence; (2) defendant's contention that the counsel could have done more to prepare for trial and aid in the defense was mere speculation; (3) counsel advised defendant on the possible penalties; and (4) defendant failed to clarify what constitutional rights were involved and how counsel's failure to advise caused harm, counsel could not be deemed ineffective. Navarro v. State, 279 Ga. App. 311, 630 S.E.2d 893 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to obtain certain forensic evidence and for failing to investigate the case; trial counsel's conduct in failing to obtain the forensic evidence was reasonable in light of counsel's fear that it would link the defendant to the evidence, and, contrary to the defendant's claim, defense counsel investigated the case by interviewing witnesses, visiting the crime scene, and reviewing the hospital records and all of the police reports. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied since defense counsel was not ineffective in: (1) failing to investigate the victim's reputation for violence and introduce evidence of that victim's prior violent acts; (2) failing to investigate the defendant's medical records; (3) failing to investigate a state witness's convictions for crimes of moral turpitude and request an impeachment charge concerning that witness; (4) advising defendant not to testify; and (5) failing to present evidence or argument at sentencing. Cross v. State, 285 Ga. App. 518, 646 S.E.2d 723 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 680 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant did not establish ineffective assistance of counsel based on failure to adequately investigate; although the defendant claimed that trial counsel failed to interview certain individuals, the de-defendant made no proffer of their expected testimony other than a general assertion that counsel would have discovered valuable information had counsel done so, and there was no showing that the evidence contained in certain records would have been relevant and favorable to the defendant. Brooks v. State, 286 Ga. App. 209, 648 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

The trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial on appeal from the defendant's convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation because: (1) venue was adequately shown by the testimony of a single witness; (2) the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to prepare for trial, investigate the case, subpoena important documents, interview key witnesses, and object to damaging testimony; and (3) the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's alleged shortcomings. Brooks v. State, 286 Ga. App. 209, 648 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial on appeal from the defendant's convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation because: (1) venue was adequately shown by the testimony of a single witness; (2) the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective by failing to prepare for trial, investigate the case, subpoena important documents, interview key witnesses, and object to damaging testimony; and (3) the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's alleged shortcomings. Brooks v. State, 286 Ga. App. 209, 648 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

Defendant failed to establish that defendant received ineffective assistance of trial counsel with regard to defendant's drug-related convictions as, although defendant successfully met the burden of showing that defense counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness due to defense counsel failing to advise defendant about all of the evidence in the state's case against defendant due to defense counsel failing to examine the state's open file, defendant failed to establish but for defense counsel's unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different, namely that defendant would not have accepted the state's plea offer. Cleveland v. State, 290 Ga. App. 835, 660 S.E.2d 777 (2008).

As the defendant did not point to any exculpatory evidence or alibi a friend might have provided, the defendant did not establish that defense counsel was ineffective in failing to investigate the friend. Wallace v. State, 295 Ga. App. 452, 671 S.E.2d 911 (2009).

Defendant's assertion that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to investigate the lighting at an apartment complex failed as the defendant did not demonstrate what an investigation would have shown with respect to the sufficiency of the lighting and how the lighting might have affected the victim's ability to identify the defendant as the person who robbed the victim at gunpoint. Killings v. State, 296 Ga. App. 869, 676 S.E.2d 31 (2009).

Failure to investigate impact of defendant's medical condition. — Defendant, who was convicted of violating Georgia's Peeping Tom Statute, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-61, was entitled to a new trial since defendant's counsel failed to investigate the impact of defendant's multiple sclerosis, which might have been sufficient to create a reasonable doubt as to whether defendant acted with the purpose of spying on the victim. Fedak v. State, 304 Ga. App. 580, 696 S.E.2d 421 (2010).

Defendant failed to show that defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to hire an investigator and by failing to interview the victim, the police officers involved, and the fourth male at the scene because trial counsel testified that counsel spoke to several of the investigating officers about the case and to the victim's roommate, who initially contacted the police, and that counsel attempted to locate the fourth male at the scene but was told by the man's family members that the man had left the country; the defendant's argument concerning the alleged failures was foreclosed by defendant's failure to make any proffer of what the allegedly necessary investigations would have uncovered. Cruz v. State, 305 Ga. App. 805, 700 S.E.2d 631 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to obtain and review the tape, transcript, and forensic report for an interview of the defendant's son and the victim's school and medical records because the defendant failed to demonstrate a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different if defendant's counsel had obtained and reviewed the information; the differences between the son's first and second interview after a prolonged period of counseling were brought out in the trial, and the school records were unlikely to have had an impact on the outcome of trial. Wade v. State, 305 Ga. App. 382, 700 S.E.2d 827 (2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 3066, 180 L. Ed. 2d 893 (2011).

Defendant failed to meet the defendant's burden of proving deficient performance on the ground that defendant's trial counsel failed to investigate an additional suspect because counsel testified that counsel investigated every person who could have been connected to the case and that counsel also investigated relevant phone records and police files that could have revealed other suspects in the victim's murder; despite counsel's efforts, counsel was unable to connect any additional suspect to the shooting. Jennings v. State, 288 Ga. 120, 702 S.E.2d 151 (2010).

Defendant could show no harm due to trial counsel's failure to thoroughly investigate the facts of the case and to interview all potential witnesses because trial counsel testified that the victim and the victim's mother refused to speak to defense counsel, and the defendant did not identify any other witnesses or their potential testimony that should have been presented. Neal v. State, 308 Ga. App. 551, 707 S.E.2d 503 (2011).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant was deprived of effective assistance of counsel because the defendant could not show prejudice with regard to the defendant's assertions that counsel failed to fully investigate the case and call essential witnesses when the defendant made no proffer as to what a thorough investigation would have uncovered or what the essential witnesses would have said. Ware v. State, 307 Ga. App. 782, 706 S.E.2d 143 (2011).

Evidence supported a conclusion that the defendant failed to carry the burden of showing deficient performance or prejudice relating to counsel's preparation for trial because counsel testified that counsel and an investigator had interviewed numerous individuals in connection with the case; the defendant made no proffer as to what a more thorough investigation would have uncovered. Jackson v. State, 310 Ga. App. 476, 713 S.E.2d 679 (2011).

Trial court did not err when the court denied the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim because counsel attempted to interview some of the state's witnesses, but some of the witnesses, including the state's main eyewitness, refused to speak to counsel. Rafi v. State, 289 Ga. 716, 715 S.E.2d 113 (2011).

Claim that counsel performed deficiently by failing to adequately prepare for trial and failing to investigate potential witnesses failed because two of the witnesses the defendant claimed should have been interviewed testified at trial and a third was interviewed but it was determined that the third witness's testimony would not have established an alibi defense. Griffin v. State, 292 Ga. 321, 737 S.E.2d 682 (2013).

Counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to obtain phone records or a surveillance video that the defendant alleged would have provided the defendant with an alibi because counsel testified that the defendant never told counsel about those items. Riles v. State, 321 Ga. App. 894, 743 S.E.2d 552 (2013).

Premitting whether counsel's investigation could be characterized as inadequate, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim still failed because the defendant failed to show that a more thorough investigation would have yielded any significant exculpatory evidence and, thus, the defendant failed to show prejudice. Norton v. State, 293 Ga. 332, 745 S.E.2d 630 (2013).

Failure to research eyewitness identification. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for not adequately researching the issue of eyewitness identification, since the counsel questioned the witness at length about the witness's opportunity to observe the defendant and the identification, the counsel cross-examined an officer vigorously about the lineup procedure, and the counsel reasonably believed the various scientific theories on eyewitness identification would not help because the defendant had admitted to being at the crime scene. Mobley v. State, 277 Ga. App. 267, 626 S.E.2d 248 (2006).

Failure to admit witnesses pre-trial testimony. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel, despite any deficient performance in counsel's lack of diligence in obtaining witness three's (W3) testimony at trial as the outcome of the trial would not have been different if W3's pre-trial testimony had been admitted since it: (1) would have contradicted the defendant's testimony that witness one (W1) told the victim not to stab the defendant; (2) would have corroborated witnesses one's (W1) and two's (W2) testimony that they did not see the victim stab the defendant; and (3) would not have established that W1 and W2 saw the victim with a knife during the altercation. Hill v. State, 291 Ga. 160, 728 S.E.2d 225 (2012).

Failure to call witness. — Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel as the attorney concluded that, in its totality, a witness's testimony was more damaging than beneficial to the defense; the decision, after consultation with defendant, not to call the witness was a matter of trial strategy. Nicely v. State, 277 Ga. App. 140, 625 S.E.2d 538 (2006).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance of counsel to defendant in a case in which defendant was found guilty in a jury trial of possession of methamphetamine with intent to distribute, but was acquitted of trafficking in methamphetamine as the trial counsel's decision not to call two witnesses who could not have provided exculpatory evidence was a tactical decision and did not merit a finding that counsel provided ineffective assistance. Chancellor v. State, 270 Ga. App. 87, 606 S.E.2d 105 (2004).

Defense counsel did not give ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to call certain witnesses as which witnesses to call was in the exclusive province of the attorney, after consultation with the client; defense counsel conferred with defendant after counsel indicated that counsel wanted to call defendant's accomplices as witnesses and explained to defendant that defendant had the right to testify, defendant testified, and the only further mention of the witnesses was by the trial judge, who directed that the witnesses be brought to the courtroom, after which the defense rested, without calling the witnesses. Reynolds v. State, 267 Ga. App. 148, 598 S.E.2d 868 (2004).

Fact that trial counsel failed to subpoena one of the witnesses whose attendance defense counsel could not procure did not show that the trial counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel, as trial counsel's decision may have been tactical and, in any event, defendant did not show that defendant was prejudiced because the evidence so overwhelmingly established defendant's guilt that the testimony of the missing witness would not have affected the outcome. Cain v. State, 277 Ga. 309, 588 S.E.2d 707 (2003), overruled in part by Dickens v. State, 280 Ga. 320, 627 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Failure to investigate character witnesses. — Because the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from trial counsel's failure to investigate potential character witnesses and failure to "re-advise" the defendant of the right to testify following the state's introduction of rebuttal evidence, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial on these grounds. Thomas v. State, 282 Ga. 894, 655 S.E.2d 599 (2008).

Failure to call witness on self-defense. — When a witness had originally given a statement that supported the defendant's self-defense claim, but later recanted this statement, defense counsel was not ineffective for calling the witness; the defendant had insisted that the witness be called, and doing so at least allowed the jury to hear the witness's original statement. Shelton v. State, 281 Ga. 660, 641 S.E.2d 536 (2007).

Failure to call codefendant. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present a codefendant's testimony as an exculpatory witness who would have exonerated the defendant, as such amounted to a strategic decision; moreover, the failure to make a meritless objection to the court's failure to give the defendant's requested charge on accessory after the fact could not be deemed evidence of ineffectiveness. Buruca v. State, 278 Ga. App. 650, 629 S.E.2d 438 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to call the codefendant as a witness because the codefendant was not a consistent witness. Simmons v. State, 289 Ga. 773, 716 S.E.2d 165 (2011).

Defendant's assertion that, under former O.C.G.A. § 17-8-71, defense counsel could have called a witness for impeachment and not lost the right to conclude final arguments, was erroneous; even if defense counsel provided deficient performance in failing to introduce evidence at trial, the defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the trial outcome would have been different but for the alleged deficient performance. Rolland v. State, 280 Ga. 517, 630 S.E.2d 386 (2006).

Because the defendant failed to show that: (1) trial counsel's performance was deficient in failing to call a forensic interviewer as a witness, and that failure prejudiced the defense and would have changed the outcome of the trial; (2) trial counsel's decision not to object to the properly admitted testimony from a forensic interviewer as to the opinion rendered on the victim's intelligence and reactions to certain questions which were consistent with abuse was not ineffective; and (3) the defendant could not show that the failure to call the trial attorney affected the outcome of a motion for a new trial, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims against both trial and appellate counsel lacked merit. Freeman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 185, 638 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Defense counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel under Ga. Const. 1983,

Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in the child molestation case because counsel failed to call witnesses to testify that the victim's mother, to whom the victim had first complained of the alleged molestation, had repeatedly made allegations of molestation that witnesses claimed were false; this was highly relevant, as it impacted upon the victim's credibility and upon the mother's credibility. Goldstein v. State, 283 Ga. App. 1, 640 S.E.2d 599 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0623, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 338 (Ga. 2007).

Appeals court rejected the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim as the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to call certain witnesses who were associated with the local government, contending that their testimony would have established that the prosecution was politically motivated, absent evidence regarding what their testimony would have been at trial and that such would have affected the outcome. Brown v. State, 285 Ga. App. 453, 646 S.E.2d 289 (2007), cert. denied, No. S07C1503, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 672 (Ga. 2007).

Failure to present alibi witness. — In a prosecution against the defendant under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4, because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to present an alibi witness, and because the defendant failed to offer evidence that a medical examiner or witnesses from the Department of Family and Child Services would have been favorable to a defense, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit. Herrington v. State, 285 Ga. App. 4, 645 S.E.2d 29 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 548 (Ga. 2007).

Failure to call spouse. — On appeal from convictions on one count of aggravated sexual battery and two counts of sexual assault, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial as the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from counsel's failure to call the defendant's wife to testify for the defense, and the appeals court refused to speculate that the wife's testimony would have led to an acquittal. Lee v. State, 286 Ga. App. 368, 650 S.E.2d 320 (2007).

Failure to call future spouse. — Defendant did not show prejudice from trial counsel's failure to call the defendant's future spouse and the future spouse's sibling as character witnesses. Even if counsel's decision could be considered unreasonable, the evidence supported a finding that both persons were biased toward the defendant; given this finding, the trial court was authorized to conclude that introduction of the character evidence likely would not have made a difference at trial. Gresham v. State, 295 Ga. App. 449, 671 S.E.2d 917 (2009).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim lacked merit because while the defendant claimed that the defendant's love interest should have been called as a witness, the defendant did not present the love interest's testimony at the hearing on the defendant's motion for new trial and, thus, the defendant could not demonstrate that any prejudice resulted from the love interest's absence at the trial. Crawford v. State, 297 Ga. App. 187, 676 S.E.2d 843 (2009).

Because the defendant was not denied effective assistance of trial counsel based on the counsel's failure to call certain witnesses as the testimony that these witnesses would have provided would not have affected the outcome of the trial, and counsel was not ineffective to the extent that the defendant was denied the right to testify at trial, the trial court properly denied the defendant a new trial. Finch v. State, 287 Ga. App. 319, 651 S.E.2d 478 (2007).

In a termination of parental rights matter, trial counsel was not ineffective, as the parent never informed counsel of any evidence or witnesses that would assist the parent's defense and never informed trial counsel or the parent's caseworker that the parent would not be attending the termination hearing. In the Interest of S.B., 287 Ga. App. 203, 651 S.E.2d 140 (2007).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to call a witness who would have testified that the victim fabricated claims of molestation as: (1) the witness did not inform counsel of the witness before trial; (2) counsel articulated valid reasons for not calling the witness; (3) counsel challenged the state's evidence, arguing that the claims were fabricated; and (4) the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from counsel's actions. Noe v. State, 287 Ga. App. 728, 652 S.E.2d 620 (2007).

Defendant did not show ineffective assistance when trial counsel used a third party's confession to challenge the thoroughness of the police investigation, but instead focused on challenging the voluntariness of the defendant's taped statement. The defendant did not show that this strategic decision was an unreasonable one or that the defense was prejudiced by counsel's decision not to call the third party based on counsel's assessment that the party lacked credibility. Boseman v. State, 283 Ga. 355, 659 S.E.2d 364 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for malice murder, the defendant failed to establish that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of trial counsel as a result of trial counsel failing to call certain additional witnesses since at the hearing on the defendant's motion for a new trial, trial counsel testified that various tactical reasons existed for not calling the various additional witnesses. Ventura v. State, 284 Ga. 215, 663 S.E.2d 149 (2008).

In an armed robbery prosecution, defense counsel was not deficient for not calling alleged alibi witnesses because counsel interviewed the witnesses and deemed the witnesses unhelpful; and as the defendant failed to produce the witnesses at the motion for a new trial, the defendant could not show prejudice or ineffective assistance. Shabazz v. State, 293 Ga. App. 560, 667 S.E.2d 414 (2008).

Defendant, who claimed that counsel was ineffective, did not show that the outcome of the trial would have been different if a certain eyewitness testified. Because the eyewitness stated that the eyewitness did not see who fired the shots in question, because other witnesses testified consistently with the eyewitness's pretrial statement that the defendant had been wrestled to the ground, and because those witnesses added that they saw the defendant fire a gun despite being wrestled to the ground, the defendant did not show that if the eyewitness had testified at trial, there was a reasonable probability that the result would have been different. Savior v. State, 284 Ga. 488, 668 S.E.2d 695 (2008).

If a witness claimed no knowledge of a statement and refused to testify about the statement at a motion for new trial hearing, it could not be assumed the witness would have testified differently or more fully at trial. Defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the result of defendant's trial would have been different, but for counsel's failure to produce the witness at trial. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 249, 671 S.E.2d 268 (2008).

Defendant, who admitted firing a gun to frighten four victims, argued that defense counsel was ineffective for not calling a witness who would have testified that the defendant had not pointed the gun at the victims. As the state, to convict the defendant of aggravated assault, was not required to show that the defendant pointed the gun at the victims, but only that the defendant placed the victims in reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving violent injuries, there was not a reasonable probability that, had counsel called this witness, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Hudson v. State, 296 Ga. App. 692, 675 S.E.2d 578 (2009).

There was no ineffectiveness of trial counsel in the defendant's criminal matter as decisions regarding whether to cross-examine a witness or whether to call a witness were within counsel's trial strategy; further, since there was no showing that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's failure to object or to call a witness, there was no ineffectiveness shown. Christian v. State, 297 Ga. App. 596, 677 S.E.2d 767 (2009).

Failure to call parent. — Defendant claimed that trial counsel was ineffective in failing to secure the presence of the defendant's father to testify at trial; however, the defendant did not call the father as a witness at the motion for new trial hearing, and without a proffer, was not able to show that trial counsel performed deficiently in not calling the father as a witness at trial. In any event, the evidence of the defendant's guilt was overwhelming, so no prejudice was shown. Washington v. State, 285 Ga. 541, 678 S.E.2d 900 (2009).

Because the defendant made no showing that trial counsel's failure to call the defendant or the defendant's mother as a witness was indicative of ineffectiveness as opposed to a deliberate and reasonable trial strategy, the trial court was authorized to conclude that the defendant had not carried the defendant's burden of proving ineffective assistance of counsel; the defendant failed to overcome the strong presumption that counsel's tactical decision not to call the defendant's mother fell within the broad range of professional conduct, and the defendant failed to show how the witness' testimony would have changed the outcome of the trial when the same evidence the defendant contended the mother would have testified to was admitted through other witnesses. Gibson v. State, 290 Ga. 6, 717 S.E.2d 447 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to depose the defendant's father, a potential alibi-type witness who died prior to trial, as counsel's decision was a reasonable strategy since portions of the father's testimony would not have been beneficial to the defense. Chalk v. State, 318 Ga. App. 45, 733 S.E.2d 351 (2012).

Although the defendant argued that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel because, inter alia, counsel failed to locate and call witnesses, the testimony of one of the witnesses was contradictory to the defense theory that the defendant was not at the scene of the incident, and this strategy was reasonable; the defendant thus failed to establish the ineffective assistance of counsel claim. Ransom v. State, 298 Ga. App. 360, 680 S.E.2d 200 (2009).

Despite the absence of any physical evidence, the victims' testimonies were sufficient to find the defendant guilty of aggravated child molestation and child molestation under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4; counsel's strategic decisions in failing to call impeachment witnesses did not amount to deficient performance. Barnes v. State, 299 Ga. App. 253, 682 S.E.2d 359 (2009).

Trial counsel's performance was not constitutionally flawed because counsel could not be ineffective for failing to interview and call a potential alibi witness of whom counsel was not informed, and the trial court was authorized to credit counsel's testimony regarding the alibi witnesses whose names counsel was given; the defendant did not show that the testimony of the alibi witnesses would have been relevant and favorable because neither alleged alibi witness testified at the hearing on the motion for new trial. McIlwain v. State, 287 Ga. 115, 694 S.E.2d 657 (2010).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that defense counsel provided ineffective assistance because the defendant did not show that trial counsel's failure to further investigate and present testimony constituted deficient performance when the defendant neither identified any relevant witnesses nor put forward any evidence as to the testimony the witnesses would have given. Smith v. State, 303 Ga. App. 831, 695 S.E.2d 86 (2010).

Failure to call victim. — Trial counsel's tactical decision that the defense would be better served if the victim did not take the witness stand was not deficient because the prosecutor explained in the prosecutor's opening that the state would not call the victim as a witness since the victim's injuries caused short-term memory loss, leaving the victim unable to recall what happened before, during, and after the relevant events, and trial counsel testified that the victim refused to talk to counsel's investigator prior to trial and that the counsel was pleased that the victim would not be a witness since it was better to go to trial without a sympathetic victim; because the defendant did not call the victim as a witness at the motion for new trial hearing or present a legally acceptable substitute for the victim's testimony, it was impossible for the defendant to show prejudice resulting from the victim's absence at trial. Taylor v. State, 304 Ga. App. 395, 696 S.E.2d 686 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to confront the victim at trial when counsel testified that counsel did not call the victim to the stand because counsel thought that the victim's testimony would have done more damage than help; the mere existence of a defendant's right to confront a witness at trial cannot be taken to mean that it is always in the defendant's interest to do so. Robinson v. State, 308 Ga. App. 45, 706 S.E.2d 577 (2011).

Failure to call homeless victim. — Defendant argued that defense counsel performed ineffectively by failing to investigate and learn prior to trial that the homeless victim would not be called by the state to testify. Defendant, however, has failed to show how this alleged deficiency by trial counsel prejudiced the defendant in any way. Thus, the defendant cannot prove that the alleged failure to investigate so prejudiced the defendant that there is a reasonable likelihood that, but for that deficiency, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Boggs v. State, 304 Ga. App. 698, 697 S.E.2d 843 (2010).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel when defendant's trial counsel failed to call additional witnesses because the defendant did not identify in the defendant's brief, nor did the defendant call to testify at the motion for new trial hearing, any witnesses who could have allegedly added the "material evidence" that the defendant claimed was missing from the defendant's defense. Jennings v. State, 288 Ga. 120, 702 S.E.2d 151 (2010).

Defendant did not show that defendant's trial counsel failed to exercise reasonable professional judgment in failing to secure the attendance of a witness because counsel had already announced ready for trial based on the defendant's assurance that no witness would come forward for the state, and the defendant did not inform counsel of the witness's existence until the eve of trial; counsel immediately proceeded to interview the witness but did not have sufficient time to procure and serve a subpoena before trial the next day, and the defendant could not demonstrate that the defendant's defense was prejudiced by counsel's failure to secure the witness's attendance at trial because the witness did not testify at the new trial hearing, and no substitute was offered for the witness's testimony. Presley v. State, 307 Ga. App. 528, 705 S.E.2d 870 (2011).

Defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel because the defendant did not show that the defendant was prejudiced by counsel's performance in that counsel did not call an alibi witness to testify at the hearing on the defendant's motion for new trial or provide a legally recognized substitute for the witness's testimony; the defendant made no affirmative showing that the purported deficiency in counsel's representation was indicative of ineffectiveness, as opposed to being an example of a conscious, deliberate, and reasonable trial strategy. Newsome v. State, 288 Ga. 647, 706 S.E.2d 436 (2011).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to call additional witnesses because the defendant failed to overcome the strong presumption that counsel's tactical decision to forego putting the subject witnesses on the stand was within the broad range of reasonable professional conduct; trial counsel testified that counsel decided not to present the other witnesses because counsel thought that the other witnesses would not "stand up well to cross-examination," that the jury would perceive variances in the testimony, that counsel was worried about credibility issues, and that counsel thought the defendant's "best chance" at establishing an alibi was with "one good clean witness." Smiley v. State, 288 Ga. 635, 706 S.E.2d 425 (2011).

Ineffective assistance of counsel was not shown because a juvenile failed to make an affirmative showing that specifically demonstrated how counsel's failure to investigate and present testimony from an investigator and the victim's friend would have affected the outcome of the juvenile's case. To the extent that the juvenile relied upon trial counsel's testimony to establish the investigator's and the friend's expected statements and to prove that the trial counsel's performance was deficient for failing to explore their testimony, such evidence was hearsay and had no probative value. In the Interest of D.M., 308 Ga. App. 589, 708 S.E.2d 550 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to locate and call witnesses who purportedly would have corroborated the defendant's claim that the defendant had a prior, consensual sexual relationship with the victim because the defendant failed to show that the purported deficiency of the defendant's trial counsel prejudiced the defendant's defense, given that the defendant failed to proffer the testimony of any of the alleged potential witnesses at the hearing on the motion for a new trial; because the defendant failed to make such a proffer, it was impossible for the defendant to show that there was a reasonable probability the results of the proceeding would have been different and thus impossible for the defendant to succeed on the ineffective assistance claim. Alvarez v. State, 309 Ga. App. 462, 710 S.E.2d 583 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to call a witness to rebut similar transaction evidence at defendant's trial because the purported testimony of the witness was questionable, and trial counsel's tactical decision not to call the witness was not unreasonable. Espinosa v. State, 309 Ga. App. 877, 711 S.E.2d 425 (2011).

Trial court did not err when the court denied the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim because, although counsel did not present all three witnesses identified by the defendant as corroborating the defendant's claim of self-defense, counsel did present one witness who established the defendant's claim. Rafi v. State, 289 Ga. 716, 715 S.E.2d 113 (2011).

Failure to call police officer. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to subpoena the police officer who took the fourth victim's statement after the robbery in order to show that the fourth victim's trial testimony was inconsistent with the statement provided to the officer as the inconsistency that was alleged, whether the victim was pushed against a fence or pulled to the ground by the robber, was not material to the case. Wickerson v. State, 321 Ga. App. 844, 743 S.E.2d 509 (2013).

Failure to call character witnesses.

— Counsel's decision not to present character witnesses on the defendant's behalf because the defendant had a substantial history of prior burglaries did not amount to ineffective assistance. Riles v. State, 321 Ga. App. 894, 743 S.E.2d 552 (2013).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to subpoena and present evidence as counsel testified that the single witness presented at the motion for a new trial was not called as a witness because the witness was a negative. Bradley v. State, 322 Ga. App. 541, 745 S.E.2d 763 (2013).

Failure to challenge competency of witness. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge the competency of child witnesses because both victims were asked to demonstrate their understanding of the difference between the truth and a lie and both stated that they would tell the truth; the defendant gave no basis upon which, had defense counsel challenged their competency, the trial court would have ruled the children incompetent to testify, and defense counsel was not required to make a meritless objection. Vaughn v. State, 307 Ga. App. 754, 706 S.E.2d 137 (2011).

Failure to object to cross-examination of defendant. — In a prosecution for the murder of the defendant's romantic companion, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to cross-examination of the defendant about "the cycle of violence" that occurred in some domestic relationships. As there was evidence that the defendant assaulted the victim in the past, the question was proper and an objection would have been meritless. Watkins v. State, 285 Ga. 355, 676 S.E.2d 196 (2009).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the state's cross-examination of the defendant because the state's questioning was similar to that which the trial court had already permitted, primarily eliciting specifics regarding the occasions when the defendant spoke to investigating officers, and counsel's strategic decision not to highlight such cumulative information was a legitimate trial strategy that fell within the range of reasonable professional conduct. Kendrick v. State, 287 Ga. 676, 699 S.E.2d 302 (2010).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to make an objection regarding the prosecutor's questions on cross-examination because the prosecutor's questions exploring any inconsistencies or omissions concerning the statements that the defendant voluntarily made to the police were proper and the defense counsel was not required to make an objection that lacked merit. Gilyard v. State, 288 Ga. 800, 708 S.E.2d 329 (2011).

Because the prosecutor's question to the defendant on cross-examination was unlikely to be interpreted as a comment on the defendant's silence, the failure of the defendant's trial counsel to object to the question did not constitute deficient performance; the prosecutor's question did not imply that the defendant should have spoken to police officers or other government agents between the arrest and the trial, and, because the defendant did testify at trial, the question could not be construed as a comment on the defendant's failure to testify at trial. Willis v. State, 309 Ga. App. 414, 710 S.E.2d 616 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C1356, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 70 (Ga. 2012).

Defendant could not show that trial counsel performed deficiently by failing to object to the prosecutor's alleged "testimony" because the record did not support the defendant's assertion that the prosecutor, in posing leading questions to the defendant during cross-examination, "testified" against the defendant. Boatright v. State, 289 Ga. 597, 713 S.E.2d 829 (2011).

Questioning of investigator. — Trial counsel's questioning of an investigator to show the investigator's bias against the defendant was not ineffective assistance even though it divulged defendant's previous arrest by inspector and the defendant's refusal to give a statement when arrested. Ross v. State, 231 Ga. App. 793, 499 S.E.2d 642 (1998).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when the lead investigator was allowed to “interpret” the recordings of inmate phone calls by explaining the meaning of certain words and phrases because the investigator’s qualifications as a narcotics investigator were established by the investigator’s testimony at trial, and the investigator made it clear that the investigator was explaining the meaning of certain slang terms used during the conversations based on the investigator’s experience with drug investigations. Lowe v. State, 310 Ga. App. 242, 712 S.E.2d 633 (2011).

Defendant could not complain on appeal about defense counsel’s failure to object to an investigator’s bolstering of the victim’s credibility in a child molestation case, as defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to object; defense counsel elicited the testimony from the witness while on cross-examination, and, as a result, there was no basis for counsel to object to the testimony. Menard v. State, 281 Ga. App. 698, 637 S.E.2d 105 (2006).

Use of alibi witnesses. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel when defendant’s trial counsel called alibi witnesses who in pretrial interviews told stories that were consistent with the defendant’s story that the defendant was not present at the time of the purse snatchings for which the defendant was on trial, but who on cross-examination told stories that were inconsistent, often conflicting, and harmful to the defendant’s alibi; the decision to call such witnesses involved a matter of trial strategy and did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Browne v. State, 261 Ga. App. 648, 583 S.E.2d 496 (2003).

Cross-examination of rape victim. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in counsel’s cross-examination of a rape victim, after the victim changed her testimony since: (1) the trial counsel thoroughly cross-examined the victim regarding changed testimony; (2) the trial counsel pointed out that the victim had testified just minutes before that she had talked to husband about her testimony; and (3) the trial counsel argued to the jury that the victim’s changed testimony was suspect. Johnson v. State, 263 Ga. App. 443, 587 S.E.2d 775 (2003).

Counsel opening door to admission of character evidence. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in opening the door to the admission of character evidence by cross-examining a detective who executed a search warrant as to whether the defendant lived in the room searched as the examination was a matter of sound trial strategy. Furthermore, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the prosecutor’s “Golden Rule” argument as the prosecutor did not improperly argue that the jurors should relive the rape, but properly argued that the jurors should consider how a person could appear calm or even relieved after such a heinous attack. Johnson v. State, 263 Ga. App. 443, 587 S.E.2d 775 (2003).

Examination of witnesses. — Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel at the defendant’s trial for malice murder and possession of a firearm in the commission of a felony since the defendant’s counsel conducted a thorough cross-examination of the state’s witnesses, including using prior inconsistent statements to impeach; defense counsel had no reasonable grounds for seeking a change of venue or sequestration of the jurors; and defense counsel had no reasonable basis for believing that an expert would be able to testify as defendant wished. Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 485, 591 S.E.2d 812 (2004).

Habeas court was clearly erroneous in denying the defendant’s petition for a writ of habeas corpus and in finding that the defendant received effective assistance of counsel since: (1) trial counsel testified that counsel did not know of a potentially exculpatory witness disclosed by the state at the plea hearing; (2) as counsel was not aware of the witness, counsel’s failure to explore the possible defense could not have been a matter of trial strategy; (3) the plea transcript showed counsel’s apparent anger at the defendant for initially denying the defendant’s guilt and thwarting the plea proceedings, which raised questions about the voluntariness of the pleas; and (4) there was a reasonable probability that, had the defendant been advised of the serious problems with the state's case against the defendant, including the existence of the potentially exculpatory witness, the defendant would have insisted on going to trial. Heyward v. Humphrey, 277 Ga. 565, 592 S.E.2d 660 (2004).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel in the defendant's attorney's failure to call witnesses to testify to the nature of the defendant's acquaintance with the victim and to impeach the victim's testimony that the victim had never "partied" or smoked marijuana with the defendant as: (1) the proffered testimony went merely to the details of the admitted acquaintance between the defendant and the victim before the incident, not to the facts surrounding the incident itself or the charges against the defendant; (2) the only purpose of the evidence was to impeach the victim's testimony regarding how well the victim knew the defendant, an issue on which trial counsel cross-examined the victim; and (3) the defendant was not prejudiced by the absence of the evidence. Joyner v. State, 267 Ga. App. 309, 599 S.E.2d 286 (2004).

Defendant failed to establish that defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel because trial counsel was not deficient for failing to call a witness that defendant was not asked to call and there was no error in the trial court for giving more credence to trial counsel's testimony under the circumstances than it did to defendant's evidence of alibi. Davis v. State, 267 Ga. App. 668, 600 S.E.2d 742 (2004).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to object to the introduction of a police officer as a "gang task force" member given the minimal reference to the "gang task force" during voir dire as well as the fact that prosecutors never tried to link the defendant to gang activity; no reasonable probability existed that the jury would have reached a different verdict had counsel objected. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, during a trial for malice murder and other crimes; defense counsel interviewed the out-of-state witnesses the defendant believed should have testified and determined that their testimony would not have been helpful to the defendant and the counsel made "full discovery" in the case and provided all of it to the defendant. Green v. State, 279 Ga. 455, 614 S.E.2d 751 (2005).

Because the state's questions to a witness were not leading, had answers that were obvious, or were answered by the witness or other witnesses, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object. Capers v. State, 273 Ga. App. 427, 615 S.E.2d 126 (2005).

Counsel's failure to make hearsay objections to certain testimony was not ineffective assistance as the first witness's testimony was within the witness's personal knowledge and the other witness's testimony was cumulative of the first witness's testimony; the failure to make a best evidence objection to the admission of an Alabama "Case Action Summary" was not ineffective assistance as a Case Action Summary could be introduced as sufficient proof of a prior felony conviction. Brooks v. State, 273 Ga. App. 691, 615 S.E.2d 829 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by not objecting to a witness's testimony because: (1) the testimony fit in with the counsel's reasonable trial strategy; and (2) the witness's comment that the witness went to interview the defendant, without stating whether such an interview was completed, was not an impermissible comment on the defendant's assertion of the right to remain silent. Cornelius v. State, 273 Ga. App. 806, 616 S.E.2d 148 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance in failing to withdraw in order to testify as to counsel's conversation with a victim; counsel was permitted to ask the victim about their conversation and the trial court's finding that counsel made a reasonable tactical decision to forego additional, cumulative impeachment of the victim by not withdrawing and remaining as the experienced advocate moving forward with defendant's pending demand for a speedy trial, was not clearly erroneous. Ford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 695, 617 S.E.2d 262 (2005).

Defendant did not show that trial counsel performed deficiently in the defendant's trial on statutory rape and child molestation charges or that any alleged deficient performance prejudiced the defense, and, thus, did not establish ineffective assistance of counsel as: (1) the trial court's alleged failure to give a curative instruction regarding a remark a witness made that bolstered the victim's credibility was not error since defense counsel had asked the question to which the remark was made and did not object, which meant the defendant could not challenge the failure to give the instruction as error; and (2) the victim's comment to a witness shortly after the victim had sex with the defendant was admissible as res gestae evidence and, thus, defense counsel could not be ineffective for failing to object to it. Drummond v. State, 275 Ga. App. 86, 619 S.E.2d 784 (2005).

Because counsel's decision to use a witness's testimony to attack the witness's credibility rather than object to the testimony was not patently unreasonable, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel; counsel attacked the testimony on cross-examination, pointing out the witness's failure to mention in previous testimony that a woman was at the defendant's house seeking to buy drugs, and indirectly challenging the witness's veracity. Quimbley v. State, 276 Ga. App. 174, 622 S.E.2d 879 (2005).

Counsel was not ineffective at trial as: (1) counsel's method of cross-examining the victim and another witness with a transcript from the preliminary hearing revealed several inconsistencies; (2) counsel did not fail to fully explore how the victim came to identify defendant as the attacker, in spite of the victim's steadfast claims supporting the identification; and (3) counsel's decision to refrain from calling the defendant's doctor as a witness, which was made after consultation with the defendant, was a proper tactical decision. Oliver v. State, 278 Ga. App. 425, 629 S.E.2d 63 (2006).

Since neither trial counsel, defendant, nor any other witness testified at the motion for a new trial hearing, the appellate court had no way of knowing whether counsel interviewed defendant's friend, a potential alibi witness, before trial, and if counsel did, whether the friend confirmed the story that the defendant had concocted; the defendant thus failed to carry the burden of showing either deficient performance or prejudice relating to the allegation that counsel was ineffective for failing to interview the friend before trial. Davis v. State, 280 Ga. 442, 629 S.E.2d 238 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected as the defendant's claim that trial counsel was not knowledgeable about the child hearsay statute and failed to highlight the unreliability of the child victim's statement to a nurse was based on mere speculation that a more thorough cross-examination would have altered the outcome at trial. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

Denial of a defendant's motion for a new trial was proper as the trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by abandoning the questioning of the defendant's housemate regarding the defendant's crying after the defendant's arrest as the decision was a tactical decision that the counsel had succeeded in placing the gist of the housemate's anticipated testimony before the jury, even though the counsel later critiqued the counsel's performance. Temples v. State, 280 Ga. App. 874, 635 S.E.2d 249 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to call any witnesses at the defendant's trial for aggravated assault; the record showed that the proposed witnesses' testimony at the ineffectiveness hearing was contradictory on the issues of where the gun was pointed, whether the defendant was upset, and whether the defendant spoke to the victim, and, although the defendant claimed that counsel did not consult with the defendant about trial strategy until the trial ended, the trial court was authorized to believe trial counsel's testimony. Long v. State, 281 Ga. App. 356, 636 S.E.2d 88 (2006).

In a prosecution for rape, kidnapping, and sodomy, the defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel merely because counsel failed to impeach the victim's credibility with evidence concerning a 1996 drug arrest as: (1) that evidence was irrelevant to the circumstances surrounding the defendant's attack on the victim; and (2) the victim never opened the door to an issue of good character. Pierce v. State, 281 Ga. App. 821, 637 S.E.2d 467 (2006).

A defendant had not shown that counsel was ineffective for putting a witness's pre-trial statement into evidence: counsel testified that the statement was put into evidence so that the jury could see the inconsistencies between it and the witness's testimony in court, and the portion of the statement describing the defendant as the individual who stabbed the victim in the chest merely echoed the witness's trial testimony. Stanley v. State, 283 Ga. 36, 656 S.E.2d 806 (2008).

Because defense counsel obtained testimony from a codefendant that the codefendant had substantial motivation to testify against the defendant, counsel's failure to ask about specific effects of the codefendant's plea deal was not patently unreasonable. Moreover, given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, it was unlikely that additional impeachment of the codefendant would have changed the outcome of the trial. Daugherty v. State, 291 Ga. App. 541, 662 S.E.2d 318 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 792 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court did not err in concluding that a defendant failed to show that the defendant had received ineffective assistance of counsel on the ground that counsel failed to obtain testimony from one of the state's witnesses because although the defendant claimed on appeal that the witness's testimony would have supported the defendant's defense that the victims were coconspirators, the evidence showed that the defendant did not inform trial counsel that the witness had any information regarding the defendant's prior knowledge of the victims; even if the defendant had made trial counsel aware of such knowledge, the witness's vague recollection was unlikely to have changed the outcome of the case. Brown v. State, 299 Ga. App. 782, 683 S.E.2d 874 (2009).

Defense counsel was not ineffective in asking the codefendant's father if the father told the defendant to hide a gun because defense counsel testified that the testimony was used to shift responsibility to the codefendant; counsel's examination of the father was cumulative of prior testimony elicited by the prosecutor. Chance v. State, 291 Ga. 241, 728 S.E.2d 635 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to interview witnesses because the defendant did not proffer any specific evidence tending to show that the defendant suffered prejudice as a result of the omissions; the defendant failed to assert or show how any of the potential evidence would have affected the defendant's conviction. Coney v. State, 316 Ga. App. 303, 728 S.E.2d 899 (2012).

Trial counsel's failure to object to three instances of testimony indicating that the defendant was facing charges for "other robberies" at the time of the instant case did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel testified that no objections were made because counsel did not want to bring the jury's attention to the testimony and the decisions were not so patently unreasonable that no competent attorney would have made those decisions. Brown v. State, 321 Ga. App. 765, 743 S.E.2d 452 (2013).

Defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed because the defendant failed to show what evidence might have been revealed if counsel had cross-examined the defendant's cousin about an unrelated indictment to show any bias the cousin might have had to color the cousin's testimony in favor of the state and how it would have produced a different result. Mathis v. State, 293 Ga. 35, 743 S.E.2d 393 (2013).

Trial counsel's decision not to cross-examine two witnesses about certain criminal charges did not amount to ineffective assistance because it could not be said that no reasonable attorney would have decided against attempting to ask about the charges given their limited probative value to show bias and the cross-examination that counsel did conduct. Romer v. State, 293 Ga. 339, 745 S.E.2d 637 (2013).

Obligations of counsel. — Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to interview witnesses who could have corroborated the defendant's claim that the defendant's encounter with a victim was consensual because the defendant's claim that the two alleged witnesses could corroborate the defendant's defense was not supported by the record; counsel testified that counsel tracked down the female friend who the defendant claimed had given the defendant a ride to the victim's house on the night of the attack and that the friend denied doing so, and counsel testified that counsel attempted to locate the drug dealer who the defendant claimed could corroborate that the defendant and the victim knew each other but that counsel was unable to do so because the defendant only gave counsel the dealer's first name and the name of the apartment complex where the defendant believed the drug dealer lived. Mattox v. State, 305 Ga. App. 600, 699 S.E.2d 887 (2010).

Defendant did not show that defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance for failing to procure a witness in support of an alibi defense because trial counsel testified that counsel did not attempt to find the witness since, among other reasons, the defendant did not provide counsel with a last name for the witness; the defendant did not produce any evidence to show that a competent attorney exercising reasonable diligence under the same circumstances would have been able to locate the witness; and no evidence was presented as to what testimony the witness would have given at trial. Miller v. State, 305 Ga. App. 620, 700 S.E.2d 617 (2010).

Defendant juvenile did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel because the defendant did not demonstrate a reasonable probability that the outcome of the defendant's case would have been different if defendant's trial counsel had cross-examined the victim about whether the defendant's use of alcohol affected the defendant's memory of the events; during the defendant's testimony, the defendant admitted that the defendant followed the victim off a train and struck the victim. In the Interest of J. W., 306 Ga. App. 339, 702 S.E.2d 649 (2010).

Failure to obtain additional witness. — When the defendant alleged the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for not obtaining an additional witness, but trial counsel testified that the decision to proceed without obtaining the additional witness was made in consultation with the defendant, the trial court properly found that counsel's decision to proceed without the additional witness was not ineffective assistance. Forehand v. State, 270 Ga. App. 365, 606 S.E.2d 589 (2004).

Decision to go to trial without certain witness. — Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to adequately advise the defendant of the defendant's options to go to trial without a certain witness or to go to trial later with the witness as the parties and the trial court discussed the subject for more than 60 transcript pages and the trial court clearly outlined the defendant's options more than once; furthermore, trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to present medical evidence of the defendant's injuries from a gunfight and defendant's hospital stay as the defendant and the defendant's mother testified about the defendant's injuries and the defendant could not show that defendant was prejudiced by the omission. Clark v. State, 271 Ga. App. 534, 610 S.E.2d 165 (2005).

Testimony from mentally retarded victim. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a victim's testimony because the 31-year-old mentally retarded victim was non-responsive on the witness stand as the mother testified that the victim functioned "like a two year old or less"; defendant failed to show prejudice as the mother's testimony established that the victim had no powers of reason, so the additional evidence could not be harmful. Page v. State, 271 Ga. App. 541, 610 S.E.2d 171 (2005).

Alleged failure to understand defendant incompetent. — Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed as the defendant failed to proffer the necessary evidence to support the defendant's claims that counsel failed to interview witnesses, failed to obtain a 9-1-1 tape, failed to attack the credibility of the arresting officer, and failed to understand that the defendant was incompetent. Spear v. State, 271 Ga. App. 845, 610 S.E.2d 642 (2005).

Testimony not hearsay. — Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony that defendant was told that the declarant "didn't want any guy to take off with [the declarant's] 16-year-old daughter"; the testimony was not hearsay as the statement was admitted to show that the defendant was told that the girls were only 16. Ford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 695, 617 S.E.2d 262 (2005).

Counsel's failure to object to testimony of officer. — Defense counsel's failure to object to an officer's testimony that the defendant said nothing after the defendant was arrested and that sometimes when the officer arrests people they protest, particularly when the officer has arrested the wrong person, was not ineffective assistance of counsel because it was harmless, given the other evidence of the defendant's guilt. Patterson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 341, 618 S.E.2d 81 (2005).

Failure to object to hearsay statement of detective. — In a prosecution for kidnapping with bodily injury and aggravated assault, it was not ineffective assistance of counsel for the defense counsel not to object to the hearsay testimony given by a detective about responses to questions asked of the victim's neighbors about the victim and the victim's husband because the counsel's decision to forego any objection was a matter of trial strategy. Nelson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 548, 629 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Failure to call witnesses. — Defendant failed to establish that defense counsel's failure to call two witnesses was ineffective assistance, since, even if one witness had testified as defendant claimed, the defendant did not establish prejudice, as the testimony did not exonerate the defendant, and since counsel's failure to call the second witness was based on a belief that the witness was not credible. Fortson v. State, 280 Ga. 435, 629 S.E.2d 798 (2006).

Questioning on polygraph examination. — Denial of a defendant's motion for a new trial was affirmed as counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel when counsel elicited testimony that the defendant initially agreed to take a polygraph test and then refused to do so because a state's witness had referred to inadmissible evidence supporting the charges other than the victim's statements and counsel proceeded to ask the witness about these conversations as a conscious decision to take the "lesser of the evils" and "deal with it," rather than "make it appear that (counsel was) hiding something"; eliciting inadmissible testimony to address or explain a matter raised by the evidence was a reasonable trial strategy. Ellis v. State, 280 Ga. App. 660, 634 S.E.2d 833 (2006).

Failure to introduce written statements made by victim. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to introduce into evidence certain written statements made by the victim to law enforcement officers and a hospital nurse and statements made by the victim's friend to police that allegedly conflicted with the witnesses' trial testimony; each statement, in addition to contradicting the witnesses' testimony, also contained inculpatory information that stood to further strengthen the state's case, and the defendant called a sheriff's deputy to elicit direct testimony regarding the victim's post-incident statements. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Failure to adequately cross-examine forensic pediatrician. — In a shaken baby case in which the injuries allegedly occurred during a time when the defendant was responsible for the victim, defense counsel was not ineffective in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for allegedly failing to adequately cross-examine a forensic pediatrician about the time frame during which the victim's injuries occurred; although the pediatrician stated in testimony in a hearing on a motion for a new trial that the pediatrician could not pinpoint when the injury occurred, the defendant failed to show prejudice, as the substance of the pediatrician's testimony was essentially the same in the new trial hearing and before the jury. Mahan v. State, 282 Ga. App. 201, 638 S.E.2d 366 (2006).

Questioning on deal with accomplice witness. — Given the lack of evidence of a deal between an accomplice witness and the state, trial counsel was not deficient in failing to cross-examine the witness about whether a deal existed; furthermore, counsel's representation did not fall outside of the broad range of reasonable professional conduct because counsel did not ask the witness whether the witness had a hope of benefitting from the witness's testimony. Even assuming arguendo that trial counsel was deficient in failing to cross-examine the witness about whether the witness held any hope of benefit, the defendant did not show prejudice; the statement the witness initially gave to the police was consistent in material respects with the witness's trial testimony, and both statements were also corroborative of the victim's trial testimony. Varner v. State, 297 Ga. App. 799, 678 S.E.2d 515 (2009).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to ask about specific effects of a plea deal when counsel obtained testimony that an accomplice had motivation to testify against the defendant. Holder v. State, 319 Ga. App. 239, 736 S.E.2d 449 (2012).

Trial counsel's failure to cross-examine the codefendant about a plea deal was not patently unreasonable because trial counsel's decision not to question the codefendant due to the potential harm to the defendant was a tactical and strategic decision; even if trial counsel performed deficiently, the defendant could not show prejudice in light of the overwhelming evidence against the defendant, and even in the absence of the defendant's testimony placing the defendant at the scene and acknowledging that the defendant hit the victim, under former O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-14-8), the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to establish the facts necessary to support the defendant's convictions. Bonner v. State, 308 Ga. App. 827, 709 S.E.2d 358 (2011).

Questioning on accomplice's drug involvement. — Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when the trial court stopped defense counsel's cross-examination regarding an accomplice's drug involvement because even if trial counsel could have properly objected to the trial court's action, the defendant failed to show any harm by defendant's trial counsel's failure to do so, and trial counsel effectively impeached the accomplice by getting the accomplice to admit to another crime, and any further questioning regarding drug involvement would merely have been cumulative; the defendant did not call the accomplice to testify at the hearing on defendant's motion for new trial, and speculation as to what the accomplice's testimony would have been did not satisfy the defendant's burden to show that the result of defendant's trial would have been different if trial counsel had objected to the trial court's action and had trial counsel continued to cross-examine the accomplice regarding the drug issue. Smith v. State, 302 Ga. App. 222, 690 S.E.2d 867 (2010).

Questioning on defendant's prior bad acts. — Trial court did not err in finding that trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a witness's unsolicited mention of the defendant's prior bad acts because any objection would have been fruitless; the defendant could not show that the defendant was harmed by the witness's answer because trial counsel followed up with a question regarding the defendant's criminal history, and the police chief acknowledged that the defendant had never been convicted of a felony. Smith v. State, 302 Ga. App. 222, 690 S.E.2d 867 (2010).

Questioning on defendant's drug usage. — Codefendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to testimony from one of the victims and a police officer regarding the codefendant's prior purchase of marijuana from one of the victims because drug use showed the codefendant's motive to rob a home where the codefendant believed illegal drugs and money would be found; an accomplice testified that the motive for the robbery was that the victims kept drugs and cash in the apartment and that the codefendant planned the robbery and knew that drugs and money were kept in the house. Wilson v. State, 306 Ga. App. 827, 703 S.E.2d 400 (2010).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to a question directed to an accomplice because counsel personally opened the line of questioning on cross-examination, and in the absence of counsel's testimony, it was presumed to be a strategic decision; having made that decision, trial counsel could not object, and because trial counsel succeeded in obtaining acquittal on the three most serious charges against the defendant that strongly supported the conclusion that the assistance actually rendered by trial counsel fell within that broad range of reasonably effective assistance that members of the bar in good standing were presumed to render. Wilson v. State, 306 Ga. App. 827, 703 S.E.2d 400 (2010).

Questioning of phlebotomist. — Defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel questioned the phlebotomist who drew the defendant's blood about the fact that the phlebotomist did not invert the blood tubes and introduced evidence regarding the impact of that omission on the blood test results because there was no evidence that the phlebotomist failed to invert the tubes; the phlebotomist did not testify that the phlebotomist failed to invert the tubes. Fletcher v. State, 307 Ga. App. 131, 704 S.E.2d 222 (2010).

Impact of misstatement by defense counsel. — Defendant failed to demonstrate that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by mistakenly referring to the night of the murder as August 30 rather than September 1, 2006, during the direct examination of the host of a barbecue because the transcript of defense counsel's complete questioning of the host and the host's responsive testimony made clear that both were operating under the premise that the event of the barbecue took place on the day of the murder, which was unquestionably September 1, 2006, and thus, the jury was aware that the host was testifying in an attempt to establish an alibi for the defendant; there was not a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's mistake, the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been different because it was plain that the host was testifying about the night of the murder, and the host's testimony fell well short of establishing an alibi for the defendant for other reasons. Smiley v. State, 288 Ga. 635, 706 S.E.2d 425 (2011).

Questioning of police detective. — Trial counsel's performance was not deficient when counsel elicited testimony from a detective that another witness, besides the victim, had identified the defendant as being at the scene of the crimes because the discussion between the trial court and defense counsel indicated that defense counsel had done extensive discovery in the case and was surprised by the detective's answer; even if counsel was ineffective, the error did not so undermine the proper functioning of the adversarial process that the trial court could not have reliably produced a just result. Delgiudice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 397, 707 S.E.2d 603 (2011).

Failure to object to drug agent's testimony. — Defendant failed to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to object to an agent's testimony regarding what the agent believed to be a marijuana stalk in a burn pile because expert testimony based on scientific tests was not necessarily required to establish that a substance was marijuana as the identifying witness had the requisite training in the narcotics field; additionally, defense counsel testified that counsel did not think it was all that helpful to focus on the stalk because it may have emphasized that the substance was marijuana before it got burned. Kania v. State, 280 Ga. App. 356, 634 S.E.2d 146 (2006).

Failure to impeach witness. — Defendant failed to demonstrate a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to impeach an eyewitness with prior inconsistent statements since counsel testified that the witness was very argumentative and that the counsel questioned the witness as well as possible, and since counsel did impeach the witness with the prior statement in several respects; that counsel may not have impeached the witness in every respect did not show that counsel's performance fell outside the broad range of reasonable professional conduct. In any event, the exploration of additional inconsistencies in the witness's testimony would not have changed the outcome of the trial. Sims v. State, 280 Ga. 606, 631 S.E.2d 656 (2006).

Trial counsel's decision not to impeach a witness with a prior criminal history was not patently unreasonable in light of counsel's testimony that counsel impeached the witness by showing inconsistencies between the witness's testimony and a prior statement to police. Romer v. State, 293 Ga. 339, 745 S.E.2d 637 (2013).

Because: (1) the defendant failed to show that counsel was deficient in failing to impeach a cohort in the crimes charged with a prior felony conviction; (2) counsel made the strategic decision to restrict the scope of the cohort's cross-examination; and (3) the defendant could not show any prejudice resulting from counsel's actions, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim lacked merit. Jones v. State, 289 Ga. App. 219, 656 S.E.2d 556 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 381 (Ga. 2008).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the trial court's exclusion of a state witness's conviction without conducting the balancing test required by former O.C.G.A. § 24-9-84.1(a)(1) (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-6-609) because the defendant made no showing that the prior conviction would have been admitted notwithstanding the stringent limitations in former § 24-9-84.1(b) on the use of a conviction more than ten years old. Chance v. State, 291 Ga. 241, 728 S.E.2d 635 (2012).

Because the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from trial counsel's alleged ineffectiveness in failing to discover and introduce the criminal record of one of the witnesses for the prosecution for impeachment purposes, the defendant's convictions were upheld on appeal. Rivers v. State, 283 Ga. 108, 657 S.E.2d 210 (2008).

With regard to defendant's conviction for arson and other related crimes, defendant failed to establish that defense counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to impeach a witness with evidence that the witness previously had committed arson as instances of specific misconduct cannot be used to impeach a witness's character or veracity unless the misconduct resulted in the conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, and the proper method of proving such a conviction was by the introduction of a certified copy of the conviction. Since no conviction existed, defense counsel could not be charged with deficient performance in failing to attempt to introduce inadmissible evidence. Shelnutt v. State, 289 Ga. App. 528, 657 S.E.2d 611 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C0977, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 518 (Ga. 2008).

Because: (1) trial counsel could not be deemed ineffective in failing to move to strike two jurors who were allegedly convicted felons, as their felon status had not been proven; (2) defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective in failing to adequately impeach a detective concerning a previous suspension; and (3) order denying suppression was supported by probable cause, defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit. Jones v. State, 289 Ga. App. 767, 658 S.E.2d 386 (2008).

With regard to defendant's convictions for malice murder and other crimes, defendant failed to show that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to impeach four witnesses' testimony by the witnesses' convictions as such impeachment would have caused defense counsel to lose the right to make the final closing argument under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-71. Adams v. State, 283 Ga. 298, 658 S.E.2d 627 (2008).

Defendant's passenger testified that the defendant stole a purse from a vehicle in a parking lot; defense counsel was not deficient for not introducing evidence of the passenger's criminal conviction. Counsel questioned the passenger as to the fact that the passenger was arrested along with the defendant for a probation violation, and that the passenger was found in possession of other persons' credit cards; as the jury was made aware that the passenger had a criminal record, the defendant did not show that but for counsel's failure to formally introduce the passenger's conviction, the outcome of the trial would likely have been different. Dennis v. State, 294 Ga. App. 171, 669 S.E.2d 187 (2008).

There was no ineffectiveness by the defendant's counsel in failing to obtain a continuance in the defendant's criminal trial in order to more effectively impeach a witness for the state with certified copies of all of the witness's prior convictions, as counsel had impeached the witness with a number of convictions and there was no reasonable probability that the additional ones would have changed the outcome of the trial; further, the failure to cross-examine that witness regarding the initial denial of a criminal history was not ineffectiveness, as it would not have changed the outcome and it was not necessarily even admissible impeachment evidence. Johnson v. State, 297 Ga. App. 823, 678 S.E.2d 531 (2009).

Trial court did not err in finding that ineffective assistance of counsel had not been proven when trial counsel failed to impeach a witness with evidence of charges pending against the witness because the defendant failed to establish that the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been different had the witness been impeached; there were eyewitness identifications of defendant as the shooter, evidence that the defendant had been looking for the victim and believed the victim had robbed the defendant, and evidence that the defendant had been shot. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. 392, 687 S.E.2d 799 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to focus the jury's attention on the fact that a passenger was not being prosecuted for any involvement in the theft of the defendant's automobile or for originally telling the investigating officers that the passenger did not know that a driver would steal the automobile because the jury had already been informed that the passenger had multiple felony convictions and was a close friend of the driver; the defendant failed to establish that had counsel additionally impeached the passenger, there was a reasonable probability that the result of the trial would have been different. Kendrick v. State, 287 Ga. 676, 699 S.E.2d 302 (2010).

Defendant failed to establish that the defendant received ineffective assistance of trial counsel due to counsel's failure to provide the state with written notice of the defendant's intent to use evidence of a witness's prior conviction for impeachment purposes pursuant to former O.C.G.A. § 24-9-84.1(b) (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-6-609) because even if the conviction had been admitted and the jury had disregarded the witness's testimony, there remained evidence sufficient to convict the defendant; the witness's trial testimony conflicted with the witness's prior statements, and the witness admitted on the stand being a crack dealer. Lanier v. State, 288 Ga. 109, 702 S.E.2d 141 (2010).

Defendant did not show a reasonable probability that the trial would have ended differently if trial counsel had uncovered all the details about the victim's first offender plea and cross-examined the victim about the victim's possible bias toward the state because five witnesses separately testified that the defendant assaulted the victims with a gun; thus, even if the jury decided to completely disregard the victim's testimony based on successful cross-examination, the testimony of four other eyewitnesses remained. Strong v. State, 308 Ga. App. 558, 707 S.E.2d 914 (2011).

Trial court's conclusion that trial counsel's failure to obtain certified copies of the victim's prior felony convictions and first offender plea, which the defendant asserted would have been admissible to impeach the victim and show bias under former O.C.G.A. § 24-9-84.1 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-6-609), did not constitute ineffective assistance and was not clearly erroneous because counsel made a strategic decision not to expend the limited resources of the office to obtain the certified copies, choosing instead to focus on other avenues of defense. Strong v. State, 308 Ga. App. 558, 707 S.E.2d 914 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to highlight the inconsistencies between a prior victim's trial testimony and the victim's account of a shooting as reported to police immediately after the victim was shot because although trial counsel testified that counsel recalled that the account in the police report was inconsistent with the victim's trial testimony, appellate counsel never inquired as to why trial counsel chose not to use the police report to impeach the state's pre-trial proffer or the victim's trial testimony; in the absence of any evidence on the issue, it was presumed that trial counsel made a reasonable strategic decision not to pursue that mode of impeachment. Johnson v. State, 289 Ga. 22, 709 S.E.2d 217 (2011).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to discredit the veracity of an inmate witness who testified to the defendant's jailhouse confession because at trial the inmate witness appeared in prison clothes, and the state elicited testimony from the inmate that the inmate was a convicted felon; since the evidence was properly before the jury, it could not be shown that the omission was an unreasonable tactical move that no competent attorney in the same situation would have made. Brown v. State, 289 Ga. 259, 710 S.E.2d 751 (2011), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 524, 181 L. Ed. 2d 368 (2011).

Defendant failed to establish that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance because although the defendant contended that trial counsel should have impeached a witness with testimony from a pre-trial hearing, and the defendant failed to establish that there was any reasonable probability that had counsel pursued the line of questioning, the outcome of the trial would have been different; at the pre-trial hearing, the witness was testifying regarding the behavior of prostitutes, not about what another person recounted to the witness. White v. State, 289 Ga. 511, 712 S.E.2d 834 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to impeach a witness through the use of prior inconsistent statements because, on cross-examination, counsel did attempt to impeach the witness with comments in the witness's statement to the police, the video recording of the witness's statement was admitted at trial, and the defendant did not establish that trial counsel's tactics for laying a foundation for impeaching the witness in regard to the statement was unreasonable. Nations v. State, 290 Ga. 39, 717 S.E.2d 634 (2011).

Although trial counsel's performance was defective for failing to urge that counsel was entitled to cross-examine the defendant's cell mate about probation revocation charges that were pending at the time the cell mate went to the police with the defendant's jailhouse confession, the defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different if counsel's performance had not been deficient because the victim testified about the struggle with the defendant, DNA evidence placed the defendant in the apartment, and the defendant was hospitalized for a gunshot wound consistent with the victim's testimony. Davis v. State, 312 Ga. App. 328, 718 S.E.2d 559 (2011).

Trial counsel did not fail to adequately question and impeach the state's witness because counsel did not question the witness about potential deals, favorable treatment, or why the witness was handcuffed since the witness was arrested on a material witness warrant and had no pending cases about which to make a deal; the defendant could not show prejudice because the state had already elicited from the witness information about prior drug convictions and that the witness was jailed the preceding day for failing to appear to testify in the defendant's case. Johnson v. State, 290 Ga. 382, 721 S.E.2d 851 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to discover that a witness had four prior felony convictions that could have been used to impeach the witness because counsel discovered one conviction and used that conviction to impeach the witness and, thus, there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. Boothe v. State, 293 Ga. 285, 745 S.E.2d 594 (2013).

Failure to object to hearsay testimony of witness. — As a parent's testimony about a child's claim of being molested by the defendant was not admissible under the former Georgia Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-8-820), because the child was 15 when the accusation was made, defense counsel was ineffective in failing to object at trial. Cash v. State, 294 Ga. App. 741, 669 S.E.2d 731 (2008).

Because defendant's counsel had no reasonable strategic reason for not objecting to a detective's hearsay testimony regarding an accomplice's custodial statement identifying the defendant as a purse snatcher, the outcome of the trial might have been different; therefore, the trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for new trial. Grindle v. State, 299 Ga. App. 412, 683 S.E.2d 72 (2009).

Trial counsel was ineffective because counsel did not properly object to evidence that the defendant was a drug trafficker who always carried a gun, that the defendant was a dangerous man, that the defendant was the shooter in a similar transaction, and that the defendant's other girlfriend knew where the gun was located after the second crime; the statements, especially that the defendant's other girlfriend knew where the gun was located, were clearly objectionable hearsay, and failing to object to that statement alone was deficient because the statement linked the defendant to the principal crime. Ward v. State, 304 Ga. App. 517, 696 S.E.2d 471 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the responding officer's testimony about what the victim said at the time of the incident because the testimony at issue was admissible as part of the res gestae of the crime. Mubarak v. State, 305 Ga. App. 419, 699 S.E.2d 788 (2010).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by failing to object to the arresting detective's testimony about what a witness told the defendant just prior to a shooting because although the testimony was inadmissible hearsay since the state failed to lay a proper foundation for the admission of a prior inconsistent statement by not asking the witness about the witness's statement, the defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different if counsel had objected to the testimony; four eyewitnesses other than the witness testified that those witnesses saw the defendant shoot the victim, and the witnesses independently picked the defendant out of a photographic lineup. Cannon v. State, 288 Ga. 225, 702 S.E.2d 845 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a lead investigator's references to a tip the investigator received from an unnamed source implicating the defendant in a shooting because counsel did object to at least one of the investigator's references to the tip and to two questions bearing the potential to elicit responses regarding the substance of the tip; because none of the investigator's references to the tip constituted reversible error, any failure of counsel to object in certain of those instances could not give rise to an ineffectiveness claim. Johnson v. State, 289 Ga. 22, 709 S.E.2d 217 (2011).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to object when a witness testified as to statements a man made because the testimony was hearsay but nevertheless admissible as part of the res gestae of the crime and, thus, trial counsel was not deficient for failing to object to admissible evidence; the defendant's right to confrontation was not compromised because the statements to the witness was not testimonial. Kitchens v. State, 289 Ga. 242, 710 S.E.2d 551 (2011).

Defendant could not establish that the trial court's admission of a witness's testimony would have constituted an abuse of discretion had trial counsel voiced an objection because the evidence was admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, subject to the trial court's discretion. White v. State, 289 Ga. 511, 712 S.E.2d 834 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise a hearsay objection to testimony about surveillance videotape because such an objection would have been unavailing; the surveillance footage and the testimony about what the witnesses personally observed on the videotape was not hearsay. Hammock v. State, 311 Ga. App. 344, 715 S.E.2d 709 (2011).

Defendants' trial counsel was not ineffective for having failed to object on hearsay grounds to an investigator's testimony regarding the reasons why the victim's sibling and the sibling's spouse could not come to court to testify because the defendant suffered no harm from the admission of the testimony as the testimony had nothing to do with either the charged offenses or with the defendant as the alleged perpetrator of the alleged crimes. Adel v. State, 290 Ga. 690, 723 S.E.2d 666 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object on hearsay grounds to portions of a Secret Service agent's testimony about what the agent learned during the investigation since the agent did not repeat the testimony of an out-of-court declarant and was not hearsay. Bearden v. State, 316 Ga. App. 721, 728 S.E.2d 874 (2012).

Trial counsel's decision not to object to an officer's testimony, which was hearsay because the testimony was based on someone else's research about vehicle tag numbers, in an attempt to confuse the jury over the different vehicles used in the similar transaction was a legitimate strategic decision. Spinks v. State, 322 Ga. App. 387, 745 S.E.2d 653 (2013).

Failure to move for mistrial on basis of witness's testimony. — Defendant failed to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to seek a mistrial after successfully objecting to a witness's testimony that the defendant told the witness that "he would have a shoot-out with police before he ever went back to jail" on the ground that the witness's response placed the defendant's character in evidence because even if counsel's failure to request a mistrial were deemed deficient, no mistrial would have been granted as a nonresponsive answer that impacted negatively on a defendant's character did not improperly place the defendant's character in issue. Billings v. State, 308 Ga. App. 248, 707 S.E.2d 177 (2011).

Failure to obtain investigator's written reports. — A defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied as trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in failing to obtain written reports from the court-appointed investigator since, while the trial counsel did not obtain any reports of witness interviews, the trial counsel discussed extensively the content of those interviews with the court-appointed investigator; assuming that the trial counsel's failure to obtain the content in written form constituted deficient conduct, the defendant failed to show how the defendant was prejudiced by the alleged deficiency. Lawson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 870, 635 S.E.2d 259 (2006).

Failure to object to statement given to investigator. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a new trial as defense counsel did not give ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to request a Jackson-Denno hearing as there was no basis to object to the introduction of defendant's statement to an investigator as: (1) defendant was not under arrest at the time of the statement, nor would a reasonable person have understood that the person was under arrest; (2) there was no evidence that the officer sent to insure that defendant did not leave the hospital before the investigator arrived had any contact with defendant; (3) that defendant was in pain or taking pain medication did not render defendant's statement involuntary; and (4) defendant failed to show that defendant was prejudiced by the failure to request the hearing. Alwin v. State, 267 Ga. App. 236, 599 S.E.2d 216 (2004).

Failure to obtain medical evidence. — In a prosecution for felony obstruction of an officer, the defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to subpoena the defendant's medical records to show injuries received in the struggle with police failed as the defendant did not state what these medical records would have shown or how this would have changed the outcome of the trial. Steillman v. State, 295 Ga. App. 778, 673 S.E.2d 286 (2009).

Defendant did not carry the defendant's burden of showing that trial counsel was deficient for failing to preserve a sample of the defendant's blood for later testing to determine whether the defendant's mind was impaired during the interrogation session because the defendant did not cite to anything in the record that showed that the state obtained a blood sample from the defendant; counsel testified that counsel investigated whether such a blood sample existed but found no evidence of the sample, and one could not fault counsel for failing to secure and to maintain a blood sample for testing if the sample did not exist. Hester v. State, 304 Ga. App. 441, 696 S.E.2d 427 (2010).

Failure to object to testimony by undisclosed witness. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the victim's brother's testimony on the ground that the state failed to put the brother on the witness list as required by O.C.G.A. § 17-16-3 because the defendant failed to show that if counsel had objected the outcome of the trial would have been different; the defendant offered no evidence at the motion for new trial hearing to show how the defendant could have benefitted from a continuance before the brother was permitted to testify or that the state acted in bad faith in leaving the brother off the witness list. Charleston v. State, 292 Ga. 678, 743 S.E.2d 1 (2013).

Failure to object to testimony of GBI agent. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the testimony of a GBI Agent because counsel made a strategic decision not to object to the testimony, and that strategy was reasonable. Wheeler v. State, 290 Ga. 817, 725 S.E.2d 580 (2012).

Use of polygraphs. — Mere fact that a jury was apprised that a lie detector test may have been taken was not prejudicial if no inference as to the result was raised, so even if testimony received from a police polygraph examiner implied that a polygraph exam was taken, it was not admitted in error, and defense counsel was not deficient in failing to object to it; further, in a molestation case, an expert was allowed to testify regarding the proper techniques for interviewing an alleged victim and whether the techniques actually used were proper, so admission of expert testimony regarding the tactile recollections of victims of child sexual abuse did not constitute reversible error since the witness was never asked whether the victim was telling the truth, and defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to this testimony, either. Norman v. State, 278 Ga. App. 497, 629 S.E.2d 489 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish a claim that defense counsel was ineffective based on the fact that defense counsel did not hire a defense polygraph examiner to rebut the state's examiner because, at the motion for new trial hearing, the defendant's trial defense counsel testified that this was a matter of trial strategy to preserve the right to closing argument; defense counsel was prepared to and did cross-examine the state's expert to bring out the points defense counsel wanted to raise and felt the value of putting on a defense expert was not outweighed by retaining the right to close. Johnson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 341, 634 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

A defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to an attorney's failure to obtain a stipulation from the state permitting the admission of the results of a polygraph test, when the attorney had not entered the attorney's appearance in the case, because the defendant did not show that the state was willing to enter into a stipulation to authorize the admission of the polygraph results and the defendant did not show that the attorney's performance was deficient or that the defendant suffered any prejudice from the inaction. McKinney v. State, 281 Ga. 92, 635 S.E.2d 153 (2006).

When the evidence shows that the defendant knew and understood the defendant's rights before waiving counsel and stipulated to the admissibility of polygraph results, the trial court's determination that the stipulation was valid was not clearly erroneous and was affirmed. Beaudoin v. State, 311 Ga. App. 91, 714 S.E.2d 624 (2011).

Use of photographs. — Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel after counsel failed to photograph the crime scene as the counsel went to the crime scene several times, photographs of the scene already had been taken by the police, and counsel was unaware of any photos or any angles that would have been beneficial to defendant. Haggins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 742, 627 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Because the second of two pre-autopsy photos of the clothed body of the victim was properly admitted as relevant in order to show the nature and extent of the victim's wounds, as well as to show that the body had been examined in preparation for autopsy, the defendant failed to show that counsel's performance as it related to the admission of the photo was deficient or that the result of the trial would have been different if counsel objected to the admission of the photograph. Green v. State, 282 Ga. 672, 653 S.E.2d 23 (2007).

Defendant could not establish that the defendant was prejudiced by defendant's trial counsel's failure to take and introduce into evidence photographs of the home where the defendant and the defendant's girlfriend resided in order to show the distance from the rear window, out of which the defendant's girlfriend escaped, to the ground below because the state introduced photographs of the back of the home, which included the rear windows; there is no ineffective assistance when trial counsel simply failed to introduce evidence cumulative of other evidence admitted at trial. Carmichael v. State, 305 Ga. App. 651, 700 S.E.2d 650 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to move for a mistrial or request a curative instruction when the State of Georgia showed the jury two photographs of the murder victim's body at the crime scene, which the trial court had previously ordered the state not to show on the ground that the photographs were duplicative of other photographs. Given that the two photographs did not show the jury more than other crime scene photographs, and given the strength of the evidence against the defendant, the defendant failed to show that, even if trial counsel had moved for a mistrial or requested a curative instruction, there was a reasonable probability that the trial court would have granted a mistrial or that the outcome of the trial otherwise would have been different. Watkins v. State, 289 Ga. 359, 711 S.E.2d 655 (2011).

Medical evidence. — Defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel when defendant provided counsel medical records showing that defendant suffered from "confusional migraines," which could render defendant unable to form requisite criminal intent, but counsel did not investigate the condition, nor was evidence of it, which was defendant's only defense, offered, and defendant was prejudiced because other evidence showed defendant was suffering from this condition at the time of defendant's alleged crime. Guzman v. State, 260 Ga. App. 689, 580 S.E.2d 654 (2003).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as the failure to introduce medical evidence to show that defendant's foot injury was consistent with defendant's claim that defendant was shot while running away from a robbery attempt was due to counsel's inability to locate the emergency room doctor; further, there was no evidence at the motion for a new trial hearing that the testimony would have been relevant or favorable. Sampson v. State, 279 Ga. 8, 608 S.E.2d 621 (2005).

Defense counsel was not ineffective as defense counsel tried without success to obtain medical evidence showing that defendant was impotent at the time defendant allegedly molested the victim, defendant did not investigate similar transaction witnesses' criminal backgrounds because defendant did not think that their juvenile records would yield any useful impeachment evidence, and ample evidence concerning the victim's behavioral problems was admitted at trial. Hogan v. State, 272 Ga. App. 19, 611 S.E.2d 689 (2005).

Ineffective assistance of counsel claim, based on the failure of counsel to present evidence of the defendant's medical condition, was rejected because the claim that the condition detrimentally affected the defendant's ability to understand the Miranda rights was pure speculation; further, counsel researched the condition and found that it was not legally recognized. Ward v. State, 274 Ga. App. 511, 618 S.E.2d 154 (2005).

Because evidence of the victim's disease was inadmissible under former O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a) (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-4-412), trial counsel's performance could not be considered deficient based on a failure to contest the receipt of the medical information; thus, an order granting defendant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus was reversed because even if counsel had requested a continuance for the purpose of testing the defendant, no reasonable likelihood existed that the outcome of the trial would have been different, and in fact, a negative result for defendant at the time of trial would not have established the medical condition at the time of the crimes, or rule out the possibility that the defendant had molested the victim. Murrell v. Ricks, 280 Ga. 427, 627 S.E.2d 546 (2006).

On retrial on one count of child molestation and two counts of aggravated child molestation, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial on grounds that trial counsel was ineffective in admitting notes generated by a forensic evaluator who interviewed the child victim, as the defendant had previously been found guilty in the first trial in which the notes were not introduced. Mewborn v. State, 285 Ga. App. 187, 645 S.E.2d 669 (2007).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present the victim's medical records because even assuming that trial counsel was remiss for failure to use the medical records in the attempt to block admission of the victim's statements as dying declarations, the defendant could not show any prejudice thereby; there was ample evidence to support the finding that the victim believed that the victim was in the article of death, and the statements were also admissible under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Sanford v. State, 287 Ga. 351, 695 S.E.2d 579 (2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1514, 179 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2011).

Trial court properly rejected the defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to introduce into evidence two medical evaluation documents, which the defendant alleged would have contradicted statements witnesses gave to the police, because it was mere speculation that the witnesses' statements were inconsistent with the medical reports; it was impossible for the defendant to show there was a reasonable probability the results of the proceedings would have been different but for counsel's alleged error. McClarín v. State, 289 Ga. 180, 710 S.E.2d 120 (2011), cert. denied, 132 S. Ct. 1004, 181 L. Ed. 2d 745 (2012).

Failure to object to DNA evidence.

— With regard to a defendant's conviction for statutory rape and two counts of child molestation involving a stepchild, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim as a result of failure to object to the state's DNA evidence was rejected because the defendant failed to show prejudice in that the outcome of the trial would have been no different had the DNA evidence not been admitted. The defendant's conclusory assertion that the conviction was largely based upon the DNA evidence was contradicted by the totality of the evidence in the record in that: (1) the jury heard direct evidence from the victim that the defendant forced the victim to engage in sex with the defendant over a period of years; (2) the victim testified that the defendant fathered the victim's twins; and (3) the victim's mother testified as to the victim's prior consistent outcry statements, which the mother initially did not believe. Haygood v. State, 289 Ga. App. 187, 656 S.E.2d 541 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to obtain an independent DNA analysis to challenge the state's findings because counsel's strategy in challenging the state's version of events was reasonable; the strategy was not rendered unreasonable just because another attorney could have approached the case under a different theory that would have required an independent DNA analysis. Wheeler v. State, 290 Ga. 817, 725 S.E.2d 580 (2012).

Failure to seek DNA evidence. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying a defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea because the defendant failed to prove the prejudice prong of the defendant's ineffectiveness claim since, at the hearing on the motion to withdraw the plea, the defendant proffered no evidence that a deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) test pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 5-5-41 would have rebutted the state's evidence, regarding defendant's incest conviction pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22, that the defendant and the victim were half-siblings; in addition, counsel's strategy to forego a DNA test was one of trial tactics and did not provide a basis on which to find that counsel's representation was deficient. Hunter v. State, 294 Ga. App. 583, 669 S.E.2d 533 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective because while the results of DNA testing of certain items recovered from the scene of armed robberies were favorable to the appellant, trial counsel used reasonable trial strategy in not requesting additional DNA testing based on a concern that such testing might implicate the appellant. Boykins-White v. State, 305 Ga. App. 827, 701 S.E.2d 221 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to obtain either an independent test of the blood on the defendant's shoes or an independent review of the lab's practices and procedures because defense counsel did not produce a DNA expert who would testify that the state's DNA evidence was defective, and the defendant's unfounded speculation as to the potential for a test result different from that introduced at trial did not constitute a showing of professionally deficient performance by counsel. Lanier v. State, 288 Ga. 109, 702 S.E.2d 141 (2010).

Failure to object to search warrant affidavit from which DNA obtained. — With regard to defendant's convictions for rape and other crimes, the trial court did not err by concluding that defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a search warrant affidavit that led to the police obtaining a DNA swab from defendant, despite defendant's voluntary statement to the detectives being elicited in violation of Miranda and case law, as the search warrant could be predicated on defendant's voluntary but unlawfully obtained statements. Brown v. State, 292 Ga. App. 269, 663 S.E.2d 749 (2008).

Mental health history as evidence. — Trial counsel's failure to introduce evidence of defendant's mental health history was not ineffective assistance of counsel as a prior incident, in which defendant was shot, could not support a justification defense. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. 304, 612 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Failure to investigate mental state. — Since the defendant did not prove that trial counsel failed to investigate the defendant's mental state or move for a directed verdict, the defendant did not prove that the defendant was prejudiced by counsel's actions. Hightower v. State, 278 Ga. 39, 597 S.E.2d 362 (2004).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel due to a failure to investigate defendant's mental health history as: (1) defendant did not claim that defendant was insane at the time of the crimes, was incompetent to stand trial, or was otherwise suffering from delusional compulsion; (2) there was no evidence that defendant was guilty, but mentally ill; and (3) felony murder carried a mandatory life sentence, firearm possession required a consecutive five-year sentence, and the trial court was lenient in sentencing defendant to half of the time allowed by law for an aggravated assault, so there was no harm in the failure to introduce more detail about defendant's mental health history at sentencing. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. 304, 612 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Because defendant's trial and appellate counsel did not investigate after being notified of the defendant's history of mental problems, the habeas court properly concluded that they were ineffective and that the defendant was prejudiced thereby. Martin v. Barrett, 279 Ga. 593, 619 S.E.2d 656 (2005).

Trial court erred by refusing to conduct a hearing or to rule on defendant's motion for a new trial based upon its finding that defendant was, at that time, mentally incompetent and unable to assist the counsel in challenging a conviction, as defendant's current mental incompetence provided no logical basis to delay a post-conviction proceeding to address whether defendant was incompetent at trial, whether the trial court should have been on notice of the incompetency and conducted a hearing during trial, or whether the trial counsel was ineffective for failing to timely raise the competency issue. Florescu v. State, 276 Ga. App. 264, 623 S.E.2d 147 (2005).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to obtain a mental evaluation of the defendant prior to trial to determine criminal responsibility, absent record evidence that counsel had advance notice of any mental health problems, and further discussions with the defendant's family would not have revealed a history of significant mental illness. Breland v. State, 285 Ga. App. 251, 648 S.E.2d 389 (2007).

Habeas court erred by reversing a defendant's death sentence imposed for a murder based on the defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel for trial counsel's failure to present evidence of the defendant's mental health status and for failing to present other mitigation evidence as, considering the combined effect of trial counsel's various professional deficiencies, as a matter of law, there was no possibility that absent trial counsel's professional deficiencies a reasonable probability existed that a different outcome would have occurred. Schofield v. Cook, 284 Ga. 240, 663 S.E.2d 221 (2008).

Failure to have drugs retested. — Defendant's argument, that counsel was ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to request independent analysis of cocaine allegedly found on the defendant's person, failed; trial counsel's decision not to retest the contraband, under the belief that the original test had been properly conducted and that an additional test might identify the presence of more cocaine, was strategic, thereby foreclosing an ineffective assistance claim. Copeland v. State, 281 Ga. App. 11, 635 S.E.2d 283 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failing to object when the state placed the defendant's character at issue by introducing evidence of the defendant's use of crack cocaine after the crime; the state had presented evidence that the defendant acted erratically after the crime, suggesting nervousness about the defendant's involvement in the crime, and the defendant and defense counsel strategically chose not to object to the crack cocaine evidence because the defense provided an alternative reason for the defendant's nervous behavior. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 14, 635 S.E.2d 723 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1215, 127 S. Ct. 1266, 167 L. Ed. 2d 91 (2007).

Failure to object to bolstering. — A defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to object to testimony concerning the defendant's initial statement denying knowledge of a murder as counsel testified that counsel did not object because the testimony bolstered the defense theory that the initial statement was true and that the defendant had given a subsequent inculpatory statement only after being threatened by a co-indictee; the decision was a reasonable strategic decision and did not constitute deficient performance. McKinney v. State, 281 Ga. 92, 635 S.E.2d 153 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish that defense counsel was unconstitutionally ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to object when the child victim's relative in a sexual abuse case impermissibly bolstered the victim's credibility; although the relative stated that the relative believed the victim's testimony, the defendant failed to establish prejudice, as the relative's response was only one answer in a day-long trial, the victim's description of the abuse remained consistent throughout the case and was corroborated, and the defendant had a full opportunity to test the victim's credibility during cross-examination. Anderson v.

State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

A defendant's conviction for child molestation and related charges was upheld on appeal, and the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for remand, as the defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel as a result of defense counsel failing to object to the bolstering testimony of a child psychologist. The defendant failed to show how defense counsel's strategy, which resulted in leading the expert to qualify the prior bolstering testimony on cross-examination, was unreasonable, as well as failed to show a likelihood that an objection would have led to a different trial outcome necessitating remand. Al-Attawy v. State, 289 Ga. App. 570, 657 S.E.2d 552 (2008), cert. denied, No. S08C1039, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 503 (Ga. 2008).

As a child's alleged motive to fabricate arose after the child told the child's parent of being molested by the defendant, and after the child made a videotaped statement to an investigator, the parent's testimony about the child's accusation and the videotape were not admissible as prior consistent statements, but constituted impermissible bolstering. Defense counsel was ineffective in failing to object at trial; this failure harmed the defendant, thereby satisfying the prejudice prong of Strickland. Cash v. State, 294 Ga. App. 741, 669 S.E.2d 731 (2008).

Defense counsel was not deficient for failing to object to expert witnesses' testimony as to the truthfulness of the child victims because the testimony was not objectionable; testimony by a witness that the witness did not see any evidence that the child victim had been coached does not constitute bolstering of the child's credibility and does not impermissibly address the ultimate issue. Vaughn v. State, 307 Ga. App. 754, 706 S.E.2d 137 (2011).

Trial counsel's failure to object to a detective's testimony did not amount to deficient performance because the testimony was not a statement of the victim's credibility or an invasion of the province of the jury since the testimony concerned the detective's reason for ending the interview with the victim and referring the victim to the Georgia Center of Child Advocacy; even if the detective's testimony that "a molestation incident occurred" did constitute improper bolstering, the defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that the testimony so prejudiced the defense as to affect the outcome of the trial because the victim's account of the incident remained consistent throughout. Strickland v. State, 311 Ga. App. 400, 715 S.E.2d 798 (2011).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by failing to timely object when a testifying police officer provided an opinion as to what was depicted in a convenience store's video surveillance footage while the video was being played for the jury because the officer's testimony was not improper bolstering; the officer was testifying as to the officer's own observations regarding the video. Anderson v. State, 311 Ga. App. 732, 716 S.E.2d 813 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a police detective's testimony regarding a victim's truthfulness because the defendant could not demonstrate either that trial counsel's performance was deficient or that the deficient performance prejudiced the defense since, in an initial statement, the victim identified three perpetrators by name and omitted the defendant entirely; therefore, the testimony exculpated the defendant, and it was highly unlikely that the testimony changed the outcome of the trial. Gaither v. State, 312 Ga. App. 53, 717 S.E.2d 654 (2011), cert. denied, No. S12C0337, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 216 (Ga. 2012).

Trial counsel did not err in failing to raise an objection to a detective's testimony regarding a forensic interview with the victim as improperly bolstering because the prosecutor's question appeared to have been directed at determining whether the victim provided information that led to further investigation, not at determining whether the detective believed the victim was telling the truth. Twiggs v. State, 315 Ga. App. 191, 726 S.E.2d 680 (2012).

Failure to present evidence suggested by defendant. — Defendant failed to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on the counsel's decision to not put up evidence because trial counsel testified that, as agreed to by the defendant, it was defense counsel's strategy to not put up evidence in order to preserve the right to closing argument; with regards to the defendant's accusations that a county solicitor general had some motive to commit the murders at issue, defense counsel also testified that defense counsel believed that it would not be productive to attempt to blame an elected official on the basis of weak evidence and supposition. Griffin v. State, 280 Ga. 683, 631 S.E.2d 671 (2006).

Failure to object to admission of driving record. — Counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the defendant's driving record, which was not admissible at trial, that consisted of six pages, showing 22 separate traffic offenses. Kalb v. State, 276 Ga. App. 394, 623 S.E.2d 230 (2005).

Failure to object to admission of cocaine field test. — With regard to defendant's appeal of a conviction for possessing cocaine, defendant's argument that defense counsel was ineffective in failing to object to the admission of a cocaine field test was meritless since significant evidence other than the field test supported the jury's verdict based on the officers finding a residue-laden scale commonly used to measure cocaine on defendant's person; following arrest, defendant displayed the same physical symptoms seen in persons who had swallowed cocaine when confronted by police; defendant had admitted to two people — an officer and a nurse — to swallowing the cocaine; and on two prior occasions leading to drug convictions, defendant attempted to discard cocaine to avoid detection by authorities. Moreover, defense counsel successfully undermined the field test, establishing through the state's own expert that the test was merely presumptive and lacked scientific certainty. Hinton v. State, 292 Ga. App. 40, 663 S.E.2d 401 (2008).

Trial court erred in granting the defendant a new trial as defense counsel's decision to present evidence of the defendant's two prior convictions for intent to distribute cocaine was in furtherance of defense counsel's reasonable trial strategy to portray the defendant as a drug dealer and to support the defense's theory that the defendant's fingerprint was found on the stolen car because the defendant sold drugs to someone driving the same car, not because the defendant was involved in the armed robbery of the two victims. State v. Reynolds, 332 Ga. App. 818, 775 S.E.2d 187 (2015).

Failure to introduce county records. — Defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel relating to charges arising from a fatal accident which occurred at an intersection controlled by a traffic light, based on the defense counsel's failure to introduce county department of transportation reports which showed, inter alia, that four days before the collision there had been a report that the traffic signals at this intersection were showing "green all 4 ways;" while witnesses testified that the victims had a green light when they entered the intersection, the defendant claimed the defendant, also, had a green light; the fact that there had been equipment malfunctions at this intersection, and reports of the signals holding green all four ways less than a week before this accident, was certainly relevant to the defense. Gibson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 435, 634 S.E.2d 204 (2006).

Failure to introduce evidence. — A defendant had not shown ineffective assistance of counsel, as counsel's failure to attempt to introduce into evidence additional photographs was not deficient performance when counsel testified that the state's photographs fairly illustrated the area in question and the defendant did not show anything to the contrary; counsel explained that a certain witness had not been called because the witness was clearly hostile toward the defendant, the defendant's claim that counsel should have introduced certain evidence rested on mere speculation, and the evidence showing the child victim walking through a store would have belied the defendant's assertion that the child had already been significantly injured before being left in the defendant's care. Banta v. State, 282 Ga. 392, 651 S.E.2d 21 (2007).

With respect to presenting chemical testing evidence and pursuing the state's undisclosed chemical test results, counsel's failure to present or pursue such evidence did not affect the outcome at trial, and counsel's performance was not ineffective. The chemical test was consistent with evidence that the state had already presented to the jury; accordingly, the undisclosed evidence was not outcome determinative. Morris v. State, 284 Ga. 1, 662 S.E.2d 110, cert. denied, 555 U.S. 1074, 129 S. Ct. 731, 172 L.Ed.2d 734 (2008).

In a prosecution for first degree forgery, the defendant claimed defense counsel was ineffective in not introducing certain exculpatory e-mails. As the trial court found that everything contained in the e-mails was covered by the defendant's testimony, the defendant was unable to show any prejudice. Taylor v. State, 293 Ga. App. 551, 667 S.E.2d 405 (2008).

Defense counsel's decision not to play child victims' videotaped interviews for the jury was not ineffective assistance as counsel chose to highlight the victims' alleged inconsistencies by way of cross-examination. This reasonable and calculated tactical decision presented no grounds for reversal, and the defendant failed to show prejudice. Scruggs v. State, 294 Ga. App. 501, 669 S.E.2d 485 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0450, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 191 (Ga. 2009).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to obtain an electronic enhancement of a videotape depicting a drug sale, which allegedly would have shown that defendant was not the perpetrator of the offense, because the defendant failed to show that the defendant was prejudiced as a result of trial counsel's failure to obtain an electronic enhancement of the videotape prior to trial since the enhanced images failed to create a reasonable probability that the defendant was not the perpetrator depicted in the images; an undercover officer unequivocally identified the defendant as the perpetrator based upon the officer's personal observations and independent memory of the defendant at the time of the drug sale, and although the defendant attempted to prove that another individual was the perpetrator depicted in the videotape's images, the defendant failed to proffer sufficient evidence in support of the defendant's claim. Faulkner v. State, 304 Ga. App. 791, 697 S.E.2d 914 (2010).

Although the defendant claimed that the defense attorney failed to introduce evidence that would have allowed the jury to understand the reasonable nature of defendant's allegedly fearful state of mind with regard to the shooting victim, the defendant's attorney was able to elicit testimony from the defendant about the defendant's belief that the victim was dangerous. Therefore, the defendant did not prevail on the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim because the defendant could not show that a reasonable probability existed that, but for counsel's errors in allegedly failing to introduce the evidence, the outcome at trial would have been more favorable. Render v. State, 288 Ga. 420, 704 S.E.2d 767 (2011).

Trial court did not err when the court denied the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim because counsel testified that counsel attempted to produce evidence of specific acts of violence by the victim against third persons but because of lack of time was not able to do so; counsel further testified that counsel did not strenuously pursue a continuance for more time to gather such evidence because of the age of the case and because counsel believed such motion for continuance would be unsuccessful. Rafi v. State, 289 Ga. 716, 715 S.E.2d 113 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to introduce photographs because counsel testified that counsel decided not to introduce the photographs since the photographs would have shown that there were numerous surveillance cameras at the scene; a decision not to introduce certain evidence is a strategic and tactical matter that cannot be judged by hindsight to support a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Hammock v. State, 311 Ga. App. 344, 715 S.E.2d 709 (2011).

Court of appeals could not review the defendant's claim that trial counsel erred by failing to follow proper procedures to introduce a psychologist's notes, which stated that the defendant suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder because the defendant did not attach a copy of the psychologist's notes, proffer any testimony, or otherwise provide any information to support the claim that the defendant suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder. White v. State, 312 Ga. App. 421, 718 S.E.2d 335 (2011).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to subpoena an insurance company because the defendant did not show that such evidence was available, that the evidence was relevant to the charges, or that the evidence would have aided the defense. Sevostyanova v. State, 313 Ga. App. 729, 722 S.E.2d 333 (2012), cert. denied, No. S12C0968, 2012 Ga. LEXIS 612 (Ga. 2012).

Alleged failure of counsel to find all evidence. — Counsel was not shown to be ineffective for mitigating evidence development and presentation in a malice murder trial because a defendant did not show (by actually presenting that evidence to the appellate court) how the defendant was prejudiced by evidence that the defendant alleged counsel should have, but did not, find and present on the defendant's behalf. Franks v. State, 278 Ga. 246, 599 S.E.2d 134 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1058, 125 S. Ct. 870, 160 L. Ed. 2d 784 (2005).

Failure to admit booking sheet. — Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed as the defendant failed to show that the defendant was prejudiced by counsel's failure to admit a copy of the book-in sheet, which showed that the defendant was not wearing a white cap when the defendant was booked; although the victim testified that the victim's assailant was wearing a white cap at the time of the crime, the fact that the defendant was not wearing a white cap when the defendant was booked did not indicate that the defendant was not wearing a white cap at the time of the crime. Lawrence v. State, 267 Ga. App. 515, 600 S.E.2d 444 (2004).

Failure to secure second drug test.

— Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to lay a proper foundation for the admission of a second drug test on the defendant's urine sample by a private lab, because without a positive assertion that the independent drug test would have shown that controlled substances were not present in the defendant's system, the defendant could not meet the defendant's burden of affirmatively showing how counsel's failure affected the outcome of the defendant's case; further, a proper foundation was nearly impossible, as the defendant was unable to secure the presence of someone who saw the specimen given and could establish a chain of custody. Poston v. State, 274 Ga. App. 117, 617 S.E.2d 150 (2005).

Failure to question legality of traffic stop.

— Defendant was not entitled to a new trial due to ineffective assistance of counsel as there was no basis to argue that a traffic stop of defendant was illegal. Mayfield v. State, 276 Ga. App. 544, 623 S.E.2d 725 (2005).

Failure to show mental retardation.

— An inmate seeking habeas corpus had not shown prejudice by the alleged deficiencies of trial counsel, and even if trial counsel had failed to provide certain records to a psychologist, the psychologist, upon seeing the records, had reaffirmed the psychologist's original opinion that the inmate was not mentally retarded; the additional mitigation evidence cited by the inmate would not have made a significant contribution in light of the evidence trial counsel actually presented. Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56, cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1070, 128 S. Ct. 728, 169 L. Ed. 2d 569 (2007).

Failure of counsel to listen to 9-1-1 call.

— Even if trial counsel was ineffective for failing to listen to a 9-1-1 tape prior to trial, given the overwhelming evidence supporting the defendant's convictions, particularly the eyewitness testimony, the defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's error. Thus, this ineffectiveness claim failed. Taylor v. State, 295 Ga. App. 689, 673 S.E.2d 7 (2009), aff'd, 286 Ga. 328, 687 S.E.2d 409 (2009).

Conceding to reliability of a child victim's hearsay testimony. — Defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to the defendant's trial and conviction for child molestation based on trial counsel's failure to object and conceding to the issue of reliability for the admission of the child victim's hearsay testimony as: (1) the defendant failed to point to any evidence indicating that the victim's statements were unreliable since the statements were videotaped at a neutral location in a room alone with a professional forensic interviewer; (2) the forensic interviewer testified that the victim was very bright and articulate and did not appear to be coached; (3) the victim's videotaped statements were spontaneous, voluntary, and not coerced; (4) the victim's videotaped statements were consistent with other out-of-court statements; and (5) significantly, the victim's statements were consistent with the defendant's statements to police. Williams v. State, 290 Ga. App. 841, 660 S.E.2d 740 (2008).

New trial unwarranted when counsel's failure to object to evidence of prior DUI conviction did not result in prejudice. — Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim did not warrant a new trial because sufficient evidence of the defendant's intoxication was presented in the record, and the defendant failed to show prejudice resulting from trial counsel's failure to object to the defendant's admission to having a prior DUI conviction, even though it was error for trial counsel not to object. Thomas v. State, 288 Ga. App. 827, 655 S.E.2d 701 (2007).

Alibi defense. — Defendant could not show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel met the notice requirements in O.C.G.A. § 17-16-5(a) and presented defendant's alibi defense because of the overwhelming evidence against the defendant. Thus, defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel when defense counsel failed to properly notify the prosecution of defendant's alibi defense, which resulted in the exclusion of alibi testimony at trial pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-16-6. Jones v. State, 266 Ga. App. 679, 598 S.E.2d 65 (2004).

Defendant did not show defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel when defendant's trial counsel did not subpoena two alibi witnesses, because the testimony of these witnesses would have been cumulative of witnesses who testified, so defendant did not show that defendant was prejudiced by counsel's actions. Jefferies v. State, 267 Ga. App. 694, 600 S.E.2d 753 (2004).

Defendant did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel elicited testimony from the defendant showing the defendant had an alibi without presenting alibi witnesses as this was presumed strategic, absent testimony to the contrary, which was not presented. Jackson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 317, 609 S.E.2d 643 (2004).

Defendant failed to prove the prejudice prong of the defendant's ineffectiveness of counsel claim because the defendant did not show that any alibi witnesses existed or what their testimony would have been; moreover, the defendant did not show whether a DNA expert would have provided testimony at trial that would have rebutted the state's DNA evidence. Denny v. State, 280 Ga. 81, 623 S.E.2d 483 (2005).

In a prosecution for murder and related crimes, defendant's counsel was not ineffective for not interviewing or calling two alleged alibi witnesses because one of these witnesses intentionally did not return counsel's messages, neither witness could provide an alibi consistent with defendant's statements about where defendant was on the night of the crimes, and, at a hearing on defendant's motion for new trial, the witnesses gave inconsistent testimony about defendant's whereabouts on the night of the crimes and admitted they visited defendant in jail before trial but did not credibly explain their failure to come forward as alibi witnesses, so counsel's failure to call them was reasonable trial strategy. Styles v. State, 279 Ga. 134, 610 S.E.2d 23 (2005).

Defendant did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance for not contacting possible alibi witnesses as defendant instructed counsel not to contact these witnesses; it was not unreasonable for counsel to follow this instruction, and it was not shown that these witnesses would have testified or provided an alibi defense. Brown v. State, 273 Ga. App. 577, 615 S.E.2d 628 (2005).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel as counsel spoke with an alibi witness who refused to testify on the defendant's behalf; in addition, counsel found that the alibi strained credulity and might harm the defendant's case. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 641, 618 S.E.2d 716 (2005).

Defendant did not meet the defendant's burden of showing prejudice to support the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim as the defendant did not proffer an alleged alibi witness's testimony at the hearing on the defendant's new trial motion. Boatwright v. State, 281 Ga. App. 560, 636 S.E.2d 719 (2006).

Because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to withdraw an alibi notice and failed to show prejudice by the introduction of the notice, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim lacked merit. Hester v. State, 287 Ga. App. 434, 651 S.E.2d 538 (2007).

In a malice murder prosecution, as the defendant did not give defense counsel the correct phone number for an alleged alibi witness until trial was underway, and the witness was out of state and counsel was unable to convince the witness to appear voluntarily, counsel did not provide ineffective assistance. Marshall v. State, 285 Ga. 351, 676 S.E.2d 201 (2009).

Attorneys did not provide the defendant ineffective assistance when the attorneys failed to timely serve notice of the defendant's alibi evidence because the attorneys testified that the attorneys discovered a theoretical alibi defense when searching through phone records produced by the state in late November 2006, and the attorneys talked with potential alibi witnesses and then gave notice of the alibi on December 1, 2006; prior to that time, the attorneys had no independent evidence of an alibi. Huckabee v. State, 287 Ga. 728, 699 S.E.2d 531 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present an alibi defense because an appellant admitted that the appellant committed the armed robberies, and Ga. St. Bar R. 4-102(d):3.3(a)(4) prohibited trial counsel from knowingly offering false evidence. Boykins-White v. State, 305 Ga. App. 827, 701 S.E.2d 221 (2010).

Trial counsel's decision not to request the production of the duct tape that was used to bind the defendant when the defendant was allegedly kidnapped was not patently unreasonable because the duct tape itself was cumulative of evidence that was introduced through the defendant's recorded police interview and trial counsel's cross-examination of a detective; even if it was assumed that trial counsel performed deficiently, the defendant proffered no evidence at the hearing on the defendant's motion for new trial that an analysis of the duct tape would have bolstered the defendant's alibi defense, and because the defendant did not proffer an analysis of the duct tape, the defendant failed to prove the prejudice prong of the ineffectiveness claim. Buis v. State, 309 Ga. App. 644, 710 S.E.2d 850 (2011).

Defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that the results of the proceeding would have been different had trial counsel presented an alibi defense through evidence that the victim was in another state during some of the dates alleged in the indictment because the defendant offered nothing more than mere speculation that the victim was not in the state during the dates listed in the indictment. Davenport v. State, 316 Ga. App. 234, 729 S.E.2d 442 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to present an alibi defense showing that the defendant was incarcerated during some of the time listed in the indictment because there was no evidence supporting an alibi defense; thus, the defendant did not meet the burden of showing a reasonable probability that the evidence would have affected the outcome of the trial. Davenport v. State, 316 Ga. App. 234, 729 S.E.2d 442 (2012).

Coercion defense. — Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel by the counsel's failure to reserve an objection to the failure to charge on coercion regarding the armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault charges against defendant because the failure to make a meritless objection was not ineffective assistance of counsel; there was no evidence that the codefendant threatened defendant during the commission of the offenses or forced defendant to drive the getaway car. Maxey v. State, 272 Ga. App. 800, 613 S.E.2d 236 (2005).

Because the defendant was identified by the victim as the robber and none of the proffered testimony related to an immediate threat, it was highly unlikely that the defendant was misidentified; consequently, because the trial court properly excluded the defendant's coercion defense, counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise it. Treadwell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 508, 613 S.E.2d 3 (2005).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to object to a jury charge on coercion as the defendant was not entitled to a charge on coercion since the defendant did not admit to participating in the crimes; any error in the charge was harmless error and the defendant was not prejudiced by any error. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Misidentification defense. — Premitting whether the identification procedure used, in which the defendant was identified as the perpetrator of an armed robbery by the victims at a one-on-one showup identification, was impermissibly suggestive, the evidence showed no likelihood of irreparable misidentification, so trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the identification evidence. Sorrells v. State, 279 Ga. App. 18, 630 S.E.2d 171 (2006).

Failure to pursue certain forensic evidence or to challenge the state's failure to disclose certain forensic evidence was not ineffective assistance because the defendant failed to show that such evidence either existed or would have tended to exculpate the defendant; the misidentification defense was unrelated to a food stamp card found on the victim, and the defendant failed to show that the misidentification defense was outside the ambit of reasonable trial strategy. Butts v. State, 279 Ga. App. 28, 630 S.E.2d 182 (2006).

Failure to present sleepwalking defense. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to assert a sleepwalking defense since the decision was based on counsel's belief that the jury was more likely to believe a defense based on the accidental discharge of a defective weapon. Smith v. State, 292 Ga. 620, 740 S.E.2d 158 (2013).

Justification defense. — In circumstances in which a trial court found that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to present evidence which supported the defendant's justification defense, it was illogical to grant a new trial for charges of murder and aggravated assault, but not for possession of a firearm in the commission of a crime; the jury could have acquitted the defendant of the possession charge on the basis of justification. Langlands v. State, 280 Ga. 799, 633 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

In a malice murder trial, trial counsel, who relied on a defense of lack of malicious intent, was not ineffective for withdrawing a request to charge on justification. Self-defense was supported by only slight evidence at best, and such a defense might have risked alienating the jury; moreover, defense counsel reasonably concluded that if the defendant sought a charge on self-defense, the state would request a charge on voluntary manslaughter. Muller v. State, 284 Ga. 70, 663 S.E.2d 206 (2008).

Because there was no evidence to support a justification defense pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21(a), including defense of habitation under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-23, trial counsel's performance could not be considered deficient for failure to pursue those defenses. Reese v. State, 289 Ga. 446, 711 S.E.2d 717 (2011).

Failure to present evidence of victim's violent act. — When the defendant presented a prima facie case of justification, counsel was ineffective in not introducing evidence of a prior act of violence by the victim based on counsel's mistaken belief that such an act had to have occurred prior to the act being tried in order to be admissible. The error was not harmless, as the assault, which like the charged crime involved an assault with a gun upon a man leaving the residence of the victim's ex-spouse, was highly relevant to the sole defense of justification. Bennett v. State, 298 Ga. App. 464, 680 S.E.2d 538 (2009).

Investigation of victim's prior bad acts impacting effectiveness. — Defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on counsel's ineffectiveness because defendant gave counsel no information (in support of defendant's self-defense claim) to conduct an investigation of the victims' alleged prior violent acts. Moreno-Rivera v. State, 291 Ga. 336, 729 S.E.2d 366 (2012).

Affirmative misrepresentations about effects of plea. — Evidence showing that a doctor asked counsel about the effect of a nolo plea to sexual battery on the doctor's future participation in federal health care programs, and that counsel responded with affirmative misrepresentations, which were caused by the counsel's failure to perform basic research, required the habeas court to allow the doctor to withdraw the plea. State v. Patel, 280 Ga. 181, 626 S.E.2d 121 (2006).

No affirmative misrepresentations about effects of plea. — Defendant's claim of ineffectiveness of first appointed counsel lacked merit as the defendant did not contend that counsel affirmatively misrepresented the defendant's eligibility or ineligibility for parole, but merely asserted that counsel failed to sufficiently explain Georgia's parole system to the defendant. Toro v. State, 319 Ga. App. 39, 735 S.E.2d 80 (2012).

Plea deals. — When the defendant was convicted of selling cocaine and obstruction of an officer, the defendant failed to establish that counsel was ineffective because trial counsel insisted that counsel communicated a plea to the defendant and that the defendant was "adamant" on not accepting the plea, and the record revealed that trial counsel had several meetings with the defendant, conducted discovery, filed pretrial motions, and spoke with most of the state's witnesses. Trammell v. State, 262 Ga. App. 786, 586 S.E.2d 693 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea on grounds that the defendant's attorney failed to inform the defendant that the defendant's plea was open-ended as opposed to negotiated when the plea transcript showed that the defendant was well aware that the plea was open-ended; that the defendant understood the consequences of the plea; and that the defendant entered the plea freely, knowingly, and voluntarily, with a full understanding that the defendant was subject to the maximum sentence. Dudley v. State, 266 Ga. App. 336, 596 S.E.2d 772 (2004).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim arising from the failure of trial counsel to communicate a plea offer to the defendant was rejected as the trial court's decision not to credit the defendant's testimony, that a plea offer was only communicated to the defendant's mother and that the defendant would have accepted the plea, was not clearly erroneous. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. 304, 612 S.E.2d 789 (2005).

Defendant did not show deficient performance for purposes of an ineffective assistance of counsel claim on the basis that counsel failed to adequately advise the defendant regarding a possible plea to the fleeing and attempting to elude and obstruction charges, and that the defendant's failure to plead guilty to these charges would result in the trial court's admission of similar transaction evidence; nor did the defendant show that counsel's failure to advise the defendant as to the consequences of counsel's concession of guilt in opening statement and closing argument constituted deficient performance. Mills v. State, 273 Ga. App. 699, 615 S.E.2d 824 (2005).

Defendant did not show that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel, despite the defendant's claims that the defendant's attorney did not accurately convey a plea offer to the defendant and that the defendant's attorney waived objections to the allegedly illegal search of the defendant's vehicle following an investigatory stop of the vehicle, as the evidence showed that the attorney adequately explained the plea agreement to the defendant and the defendant nevertheless chose to reject the agreement, and the search of the vehicle was not illegal; accordingly, the defendant could not show that the defendant's attorney performed in an unreasonable manner and that the defendant was prejudiced by the attorney's conduct. Fernandez v. State, 275 Ga. App. 151, 619 S.E.2d 821 (2005).

Claim that counsel provided ineffective assistance in failing to communicate a plea bargain offer made by the state lacked merit, as the record did not support a finding that such a plea bargain had even been made by the state; there was no notation of such an offer in the prosecution's file, and the prosecutor did not recall such an offer and would not have re-indicted the matter in order to seek an increase in time that defendant would serve in prison if there had been such an offer. Lindo v. State, 278 Ga. App. 228, 628 S.E.2d 665 (2006).

Because the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to properly advise the defendant regarding a plea offer, and counsel was not required to make meritless objections to the admission of testimony and evidence, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed. Hunter v. State, 281 Ga. 526, 640 S.E.2d 271 (2007).

Because the defendant failed to present the testimony of either trial counsel to support a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, and thus, the record of the new trial hearing was silent as to what actions were taken by counsel to prepare for the plea or to investigate the ramifications of the previous plea, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's withdrawal of the plea. Jackson v. State, 288 Ga. App. 742, 655 S.E.2d 323 (2007).

An ineffective assistance claim based on a guilty plea failed. The defendant did not assert that the defendant would have rejected the plea deal if counsel had told the defendant that the defendant was ineli-ble for parole or corrected the trial court's alleged misstatement about sentence review. Leary v. State, 291 Ga. App. 754, 662 S.E.2d 733 (2008).

It was error to deny an inmate's habeas petition when the only evidence of record, the inmate's affidavit, indicated that counsel gave erroneous advice that adversely affected the decision of the inmate, who entered into a negotiated plea, not to go to trial. Without a finding that counsel gave proper advice or that the inmate lacked credibility, the evidence did not support the conclusion that counsel was not deficient. Garrett v. State, 284 Ga. 31, 663 S.E.2d 153 (2008).

Evidence authorized the trial court to find that trial counsel's representation of the defendant in connection with an offered plea bargain was not deficient because the evidence showed that the defendant met with counsel several times prior to trial, the defendant discussed the facts of defendant's case with counsel, counsel explained to the defendant the problems defendant's custodial statement posed for the defense, and counsel set forth the potential sentence the defendant could expect if found guilty; after receiving advice from counsel, the defendant told counsel that the defendant still wanted to proceed to trial, and nothing in the record showed that the defendant was amenable to the state's plea bargain offer, as required for the defendant to demonstrate that the defendant was prejudiced by counsel's representation. Miller v. State, 305 Ga. App. 620, 700 S.E.2d 617 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to adequately explain to the defendant the possibility that the defendant faced a mandatory life sentence or a sentence of life because the defendant did not carry the defendant's burden of proving that there was a reasonable probability that but for counsel's deficient performance, the defendant would have accepted the state's plea offer; counsel testified that counsel discussed the plea offer with the defendant, told the defendant that the defendant was facing a possible life sentence or life without parole, and tried to explain the recidivist statute, but the defendant did not want to talk about it, and the defendant further testified that when the counsel attempted to discuss the details of the plea, defendant repeatedly said that it was not good enough and that counsel needed to do better. Chatman v. State, 306 Ga. App. 218, 702 S.E.2d 51 (2010).

Plea counsel did not perform deficiently for failing to investigate a robbery charge in another county because the defendant's only available means to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea to the robbery charge was through habeas-corpus proceedings; the defendant's first mention of any challenge to the defendant's plea of guilty to the robbery charge was well beyond the term of court in which the defendant was sentenced. Murray v. State, 307 Ga. App. 621, 705 S.E.2d 726 (2011).

Habeas corpus petitioner failed to prove that trial counsel's performance was professionally deficient because trial counsel did not fail in the duty to offer the petitioner informed advice regarding the state's plea agreement offer; the petitioner admitted that the petitioner never told trial counsel that the petitioner wished to plead guilty, and trial counsel did not act in an unreasonable or professionally deficient manner in concluding that the petitioner had decided to let the petitioner's father speak for the petitioner and wished to reject the state's offer. Cammer v. Walker, 290 Ga. 251, 719 S.E.2d 437 (2011).

Defendant's allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel failed because the court credited trial counsel's testimony that trial counsel fully explained the evidence and the strength of the state's case to the defendant, conveyed all plea bargain offers from the state to the defendant, and the defendant rejected those offers. Butler v. State, 319 Ga. App. 350, 734 S.E.2d 567 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to advise the defendant that, as a recidivist, the defendant faced a mandatory life sentence because even after being informed that the defendant could face a life sentence, the defendant continued to assert the defendant's innocence and request a jury trial. Biggins v. State, 322 Ga. App. 286, 744 S.E.2d 811 (2013).

Failure to obtain a plea agreement.

— Failure to obtain plea agreement for a malice murder, death sentenced defendant was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the state did not want to agree to a reduced sentence—primarily because there was no evidence the state needed from the defendant to prosecute other persons for two other (or the instant) murders. Franks v. State, 278 Ga. 246, 599 S.E.2d 134 (2004), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 1058, 125 S. Ct. 870, 160 L. Ed. 2d 784 (2005).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied as the trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in failing to engage in plea negotiations since there was no evidence that the state made a plea offer to the defendant and a failure to initiate plea bargaining did not constitute deficient professional conduct; further the defendant failed to show that the defendant would have accepted any plea offer and thus did not show that the defendant was prejudiced. Lawson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 870, 635 S.E.2d 259 (2006).

Defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective due to counsel's alleged failure to engage in plea negotiations with respect to the defendant's multiple pending armed robbery charges as the failure to initiate plea negotiations by counsel did not, without more, constitute deficient performance. Simmons v. State, 309 Ga. App. 369, 710 S.E.2d 193 (2011).

Miscommunication on plea deal. —

Although the defendant claimed that the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective in forwarding to the defendant a plea offer that was meant for another client and in failing to ensure that the defendant understood the statutory range of the defendant's sentence, the record showed that trial counsel informed the defendant later that month that counsel had sent the letter in error and that the plea offer the letter contained was not available to the defendant; the defendant presented no evidence that trial counsel's mistake led the defendant to plead guilty some five months later. Even assuming that trial counsel failed to properly ensure that the defendant understood the statutory range, the defendant's alleged confusion was corrected by the trial court before the defendant entered the plea, and the defendant presented no evidence that the defendant otherwise would have insisted on proceeding to trial. Frye v. State, 298 Ga. App. 415, 680 S.E.2d 431 (2009).

Guilty pleas. — Reasonably effective assistance is an easier standard to meet in the context of a guilty plea than in a trial, but counsel still must render competent service: it is the lawyer's duty to ascertain if the plea is entered voluntarily and knowingly; the lawyer must actually and substantially assist the client in deciding whether to plead guilty; it is the lawyer's job to provide the accused an understanding of the law in relation to the facts; the advice the lawyer gives need not be perfect, but it must be reasonably competent; the lawyer's advice should permit the accused to make an informed and conscious choice; in other words, if the quality of counsel's service falls below a certain minimum level, the client's guilty plea cannot be knowing and voluntary because it will not represent an informed choice. McBryar v. McElroy, 510 F. Supp. 706 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

In a case in which the defendant sought to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea after sentencing based on, inter alia, defense counsel's ineffectiveness in allegedly giving the defendant confusing advice about the sentence and in allegedly failing to inform the defendant that the defendant had the opportunity to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea prior to sentencing, the trial court did not clearly err in finding that the evidence of ineffective assistance of counsel was insufficient to justify allowing the defendant to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea as the record clearly showed that the defendant was well aware of the trial court's intention to sentence the defendant to 20 years in prison and that defense counsel had informed the defendant that the defendant could withdraw the defendant's guilty plea prior to sentencing if the defendant did not want to accept the intended sentence. Johnson v. State, 260 Ga. App. 897, 581 S.E.2d 407 (2003).

Trial court did not commit clear error in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea as the defendant did not show that defense counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel and caused the defendant's plea of guilty to first-degree homicide by vehicle to be entered unknowingly and involuntarily; indeed, the record showed that defense counsel properly prepared the defendant's case and advised the defendant even though the trial court entered a slightly longer sentence than the defendant had expected and, as a result, the defendant entered the defendant's plea knowing the nature of the charges and consequences of the plea. David v. State, 261 Ga. App. 468, 583 S.E.2d 135 (2003).

A defendant, who was sentenced as a recidivist to life imprisonment without the possibility of parole, failed to show that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to inform defendant that defendant would likely receive a mandatory sentence of life without parole if defendant rejected a plea offer because defendant failed to show that, when defendant rejected the plea, defendant was amenable to the offer made by the state. Carson v. State, 264 Ga. App. 763, 592 S.E.2d 161 (2003).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea as the plea was entered knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily; the defendant did not show that the plea was the result of ineffective assistance of counsel since the record showed that defense counsel fully advised the defendant in all aspects of the plea and no evidence existed to show that defense counsel was unprepared, unresponsive, or otherwise incompetent to represent the defendant. Payne v. State, 271 Ga. App. 619, 610 S.E.2d 572 (2005).

Because a trial judge informed the defendant of the charges as well as the possible penalties for conviction on those charges, the defendant's guilty plea was freely and voluntarily entered; the defendant failed to show that counsel's trial strategies were ineffective, and consequently, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty pleas. Hart v. State, 272 Ga. App. 754, 613 S.E.2d 107 (2005).

When the defendant's motion to withdraw defendant's guilty plea was denied, the defendant did not show the defendant's trial counsel ineffectively advised the defendant about entering the plea because: (1) the defendant did not show what advice counsel should have given the defendant in addition to the advice given; (2) the defendant had ample time to consider the plea and several chances to withdraw the plea, so the defendant was not prejudiced by being given a last minute opportunity to plead; (3) trial counsel was not unprepared for trial; and (4) it was not shown that counsel was ineffective for not requesting a presentence investigation. Zellmer v. State, 273 Ga. App. 609, 615 S.E.2d 654 (2005).

Counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by not advising the defendant of the option of an Alford plea because the defendant had no constitutional right to plead guilty, there was no indication that the trial court would have been willing to accept such a plea, and the defendant and the family had rejected any possibility of entering a plea from the counsel's first involvement in the case. Cornelius v. State, 273 Ga. App. 806, 616 S.E.2d 148 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Defendant was not entitled to relief from a guilty plea because the defendant did not show that the trial counsel breached the duty to ensure that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily pled guilty nor did the defendant show that there was prejudice as a result of the trial counsel's failure to file a meritless motion to recuse. Trimble v. State, 274 Ga. App. 536, 618 S.E.2d 163 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009).

Record did not support a claim that the defendant rejected the state's plea offer due to the ineffectiveness of defense counsel as the defendant was aware of the state's final plea offer and was aware of the potential of being sentenced as a re-civist; the defendant's claims regarding missing discovery documents were not credible. Himes v. State, 274 Ga. App. 541, 618 S.E.2d 174 (2005).

Denial of a motion to withdraw a guilty plea was proper because: (1) the record showed that the defendant knowingly and voluntarily withdrew the pre-sentencing motion to change the plea to not guilty; (2) the trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance in failing to obtain a psychiatric evaluation, as there was no showing that the evaluation would have shown the existence of a psychiatric defense; and (3) speculation was insufficient to satisfy the prejudice prong of Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984). Terrell v. State, 274 Ga. App. 539, 618 S.E.2d 175 (2005).

When the defendant did not even allege, let alone establish, a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's purported error in failing to advise the defendant of a possible appeal right, the defendant would not have pled guilty and would have insisted on going to trial, and when the defendant cited no evidence that the defendant would have proceeded to trial but for counsel's alleged error, the defendant failed to make the required showing and the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel provided no basis for setting aside the guilty plea. Lee v. State, 277 Ga. App. 887, 627 S.E.2d 901 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish that the defendant received ineffective assistance in defense counsel's advice to plead guilty because the defendant's trial counsel testified that after the conviction in a first trial, it was counsel's best professional recommendation that the defendant plead guilty in the second case, as the second case was a lot worse than the first and that, if the defendant went to trial in the second case, the defendant was potentially facing a much longer sentence, but as a consequence of the plea, the defendant's maximum aggregate sentence in both cases was 15 years, with 13 to serve; moreover, the defendant's testimony demonstrated that the defendant understood that by pleading guilty, the defendant would not have to serve a longer sentence. Hollman v. State, 280 Ga. App. 53, 633 S.E.2d 395 (2006).

Defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea was properly denied as the defendant failed to show that defense counsel's performance was deficient in advising the defendant to enter a non-negotiated plea without a recommendation from the state; the defendant also did not overcome the presumption that defense counsel's conduct was reasonable as the defendant's testimony that the defense counsel led the defendant to believe that the defendant's sentence would be no more than 10 years' was contradicted by the defendant's testimony that the defendant understood that the defendant could be sentenced to life imprisonment, entreaties from the defendant's mother and the defense counsel for the imposition of concurrent sentences, and the defendant's decision to throw the defendant upon the mercy of the sentencing court. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 767, 634 S.E.2d 875 (2006).

Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea due to ineffective assistance of the counsel representing the defendant at the plea hearing as: (1) the counsel met with the defendant several times prior to the plea hearing, reviewed the district attorney's file, and discussed with the defendant the evidence the state intended to present against the defendant; (2) the counsel moved to suppress the defendant's statements to the police and discussed the options available with the defendant after the motion was denied, including the state's offer of a plea recommendation; and (3) the defendant failed to show how additional communication with the counsel would have changed the defendant's decision to enter a guilty plea. Rios v. State, 281 Ga. 181, 637 S.E.2d 20 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's post-sentence motion to withdraw a guilty plea because the defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of trial counsel in incorrectly assessing the strength of the state's case, and recognizing the existence of exculpatory evidence; moreover, the appeals court rejected the defendant's coercion claim, as any coercion the defendant experienced did not manifest itself from counsel's actions, but arose from the circumstances the defendant felt during the entire hearing process. Collier v. State, 281 Ga. App. 646, 637 S.E.2d 72 (2006).

Because the defendant's current counsel filed the motion to suppress the defendant claimed initial counsel failed to do, and because the defendant chose to enter a guilty plea while that motion was pending, withdrawal of that plea based on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim due to the initial counsel's failure to file the motion to suppress was not allowed as the evidence did not show that there was a reasonable probability that the defendant would have insisted on going to trial but for counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress. Lamb v. State, 282 Ga. App. 756, 639 S.E.2d 641 (2006).

Because a defendant failed to argue or show actual prejudice by the trial court's requirement that the defendant's previously appointed attorney remain present at the defense table after retaining new counsel only one week prior to trial, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea entered to possessing cocaine and speeding. Cole v. State, 284 Ga. App. 246, 643 S.E.2d 733 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 514 (Ga. 2007).

Because the defendant failed to show sufficient evidence of a psychological impairment, due in part by ceasing to take needed medication, sleep deprivation, racing thoughts or other psychological turmoil, or that trial counsel was ineffective as to counsel's advice regarding sentencing as a recidivist under O.C.G.A. § 17-10-7, the appeals court agreed that a guilty plea was intelligently and voluntarily entered; thus, the trial court properly denied a motion to withdraw it. Frost v. State, 286 Ga. App. 694, 649 S.E.2d 878 (2007).

The trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to a charge of malice murder, because sufficient evidence was presented to support a finding that: (1) counsel did not render ineffective assistance in advising the defendant as to the guilty plea; (2) counsel attempted, albeit unsuccessfully, to pursue a voluntary manslaughter defense and plea deal with the state; (3) the defendant was generally competent at the time of the murder; (4) a statement by a proposed expert witness in support of the defense would have been inadmissible as an opinion on the ultimate issue and could not, in any event, have helped the defendant's case; and (5) the viability of any type of voluntary manslaughter defense was highly unlikely. Trauth v. State, 283 Ga. 141, 657 S.E.2d 225 (2008).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea to possession of cocaine and possession of tools for the commission of a crime charges as the defendant failed to show that the plea was not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered as the colloquy of the trial court indicated that the defendant was properly questioned and that the defendant's responses established that the plea and circumstances were understood and that the defendant was satisfied with trial counsel. Further, the defendant failed to establish that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel based on trial counsel purportedly not explaining that the state was incapable of meeting the state's burden on a trafficking charge, causing the defendant to believe that the reduced charges were a part of a negotiated plea agreement, as the defendant testified that the defendant informed trial counsel that the defendant would take a plea if the trafficking offense was reduced. Franklin v. State, 291 Ga. App. 267, 661 S.E.2d 870 (2008).

With regard to the defendant's conviction for pimping, the defendant failed to establish that the defendant was rendered ineffective assistance of counsel as a result of defense counsel allegedly failing to advise the defendant as to the consequences of a guilty plea as the defendant failed to show how further consultation with defense counsel would have impacted the decision to enter a guilty plea and the defendant failed to show how, but for counsel's performance, the defendant would not have pled guilty and proceeded to trial. Burroughs v. State, 292 Ga. App.

Pursuant to the record of the defendant inmate's plea hearing, the trial court properly provided advice regarding the rights being waived by the inmate's entry of a plea as well as the maximum sentences that could be imposed; there was no ineffectiveness in counsel's failure to inform the inmate of the right to appeal, and the trial court had no duty to inform the inmate that there was possibly a right to appeal from convictions that resulted from the guilty plea. Powell v. State, 297 Ga. App. 833, 678 S.E.2d 524 (2009).

Defendant, who sought to withdraw an Alford plea, did not show that the defendant misunderstood the state's recommendation concerning credit for time served or that counsel failed to listen to the defendant, much less that the defendant would have insisted on going to trial had the defendant been counseled properly. Thus, the defendant failed to prove that plea counsel was ineffective on this ground. Skinner v. State, 297 Ga. App. 828, 678 S.E.2d 526 (2009).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea to voluntary manslaughter. Pretermitted whether counsel's performance was deficient, the defendant failed to establish a reasonable probability that the defendant would have insisted on a trial if the defendant had always known the defendant could be sentenced to serve 15 years instead of 10; furthermore, the defendant would have been tried for felony murder had the defendant gone to trial. Johnson v. State, 298 Ga. App. 197, 679 S.E.2d 763 (2009).

Defendant, who pled guilty to theft by shoplifting, did not establish that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to interview and subpoena witnesses because the defendant did not demonstrate that there was a reasonable probability that the defendant would have insisted on going to trial but for trial counsel's failure to interview any potential witness, and the defendant failed to produce any such witness at the hearing on the motion to withdraw the defendant's plea; evidence supported the trial court's finding that the defendant was motivated to plead guilty after viewing a video of the defendant committing the crime and not as a result of any purportedly deficient performance by counsel. Trapp v. State, 309 Ga. App. 436, 710 S.E.2d 637 (2011).

Trial court was authorized to find that trial counsel's alleged deficiency of misinforming the defendant about the eligibility for parole was not prejudicial and did not present a manifest injustice requiring withdrawal of the defendant's guilty plea because at the hearing conducted on the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea, trial counsel testified that counsel had explained to the defendant that it was within the parole board's discretion to decide the parole issue and that no promises or guarantees could be made as to the length of the defendant's incarceration; the trial court was authorized to find that the defendant was not primarily concerned about parole eligibility but rather was concerned about proceeding to trial on the more serious charges before a jury that the defendant did not deem as being favorable because the defendant testified that the defendant did not like the composition of the potential jurors and wanted to put off the trial, and when trial counsel expressed uncertainty regarding how the defendant's probation revocations would affect parole eligibility, the defendant did not inquire further. James v. State, 309 Ga. App. 721, 710 S.E.2d 905 (2011).

Trial counsel's advice to the defendant regarding the effect of a guilty plea did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel because trial counsel correctly advised the defendant that once the defendant entered the guilty plea, the defendant was subject to being deported to Mexico as did the state and the trial court during the plea hearing; the defendant admitted being in the United States illegally, United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement already had a hold on the defendant, and in addition to the felony child endangerment plea, the defendant was entering a third DUI plea within the past year. Lopez v. State, 309 Ga. App. 756, 711 S.E.2d 345 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court denied the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea on the defendant's claim that plea counsel failed to explain the consequences of the non-negotiated guilty plea because the record supported the trial court's conclusion that the defendant knowingly and intelligently entered the guilty plea; during the plea hearing, the defendant confirmed that counsel discussed the plea petition and waiver-of-rights form with the defendant and that the defendant understood the form; the defendant then responded affirmatively when the state's prosecutor asked if the defendant understood the rights the defendant was waiving by pleading guilty, and the defendant affirmatively stated that the defendant understood when the trial court reiterated the rights the defendant was waiving by pleading guilty. Earley v. State, 310 Ga. App. 110, 712 S.E.2d 565 (2011).

Because the defendant declined the opportunity at a plea hearing to discuss any concerns with counsel's representation, the defendant failed to demonstrate that counsel was ineffective; therefore, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the defendant's plea on that basis. Norwood v. State, 311 Ga. App. 815, 717 S.E.2d 316 (2011).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea on the grounds of ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel informed the defendant of the state's extended plea offer and fully advised the defendant about the process; counsel informed the defendant that the defendant faced a possible recidivist punishment, that the state would withdraw the state's plea offer if it revealed the identity of the confidential informant, and that if the defendant rejected the offer, the only options were to enter a blind plea or proceed to trial. Arnold v. State, 315 Ga. App. 831, 728 S.E.2d 342 (2012).

Trial court did not err in finding that the defendant failed to establish an ineffectiveness claim because the defendant was adequately advised regarding the plea offer, the options, and the risks, but the defendant rejected the state's plea offer; having received the full and careful advice of counsel, the ultimate decision of whether to plead guilty belonged to the defendant. Cruz v. State, 315 Ga. App. 843, 729 S.E.2d 9 (2012).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea based upon ineffective assistance of counsel because the record authorized the trial court to reject the defendant's claim that counsel's performance was deficient and that there was a reasonable probability that, absent the deficiency, the defendant would not have pled guilty; counsel testified that prior to the plea hearing, counsel reviewed with the defendant all of the evidence obtained through discovery and that counsel and the defendant had agreed on the strategy. Davis v. State, No. A12A0674, 2012 Ga. App. LEXIS 583 (June 27, 2012).

Failure to object to reference to codefendant's guilty plea. — Because the defendant did not show that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome would have been different if counsel had objected to a reference to a codefendant's guilty plea during the state's opening, the court did not have to determine whether counsel was deficient; furthermore, the jury was charged that opening statements were not evidence. Wilcox v. State, 297 Ga. App. 201, 677 S.E.2d 142 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1285, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 342 (Ga. 2009).

Advice not to testify. — In a malice murder trial, trial counsel was not ineffective in advising the defendant not to testify even though only the defendant could have supplied the details surrounding the shooting, given the weakness of the state's case, the trial court's permission to argue justification without using the word, the defendant's reluctance to testify, the belief that the state's rebuttal witnesses would be very hostile, and the desire to eliminate the possibility of a voluntary manslaughter instruction. Muller v. State, 284 Ga. 70, 663 S.E.2d 206 (2008).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for interfering with the defendant's right to testify at trial as: (1) counsel informed the defendant that, although the defendant had an absolute right to testify, counsel believed that it was in the defendant's interest not to testify for strategic reasons; and (2) based on the reasonable advice of counsel, the defendant voluntarily chose not to testify. Dixon v. State, 285 Ga. 312, 677 S.E.2d 76 (2009), overruled on other grounds, 287 Ga. 242, 695 S.E.2d 255 (2010).

No misstatement on sentence. — Defendant's ineffective assistance claims failed because the defendant could not show deficient performance on the ground that defendant's defense counsel failed to correct the trial court and prosecutor's misstatement regarding the defendant's eligibility to seek review of the defendant's sentence; neither the trial court nor the prosecutor informed the defendant that the defendant was entitled to seek sentence review. Belcher v. State, 304 Ga. App. 645, 697 S.E.2d 300 (2010).

Advising on sentencing. — When the defendant alleged that the defendant's counsel inadequately advised the defendant as to the defendant's guilty plea, the defendant had to move to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea, develop the record on the defendant's ineffectiveness claim, and appeal the denial of the defendant's motion, and, because the defendant did not move to withdraw the defendant's guilty plea, and the only evidence of record was a transcript of the guilty plea hearing, the defendant could not challenge counsel's effectiveness in a direct appeal, and the defendant's motion to file an out-of-time appeal was properly denied. Coleman v. State, 278 Ga. 493, 604 S.E.2d 157 (2004).

Even if counsel gave incorrect advice as to sentencing, a defendant did not establish that this caused the defendant to plead guilty, and a claim of ineffective assistance failed because the defendant was warned by the trial court at the plea hearing that the sentence imposed could be up to 15 years without parole; even if counsel was deficient in filing the notice of appeal prematurely, thereby divesting the trial court of jurisdiction to rule on a motion to withdraw the guilty plea, defendant did not suggest what evidence might have been presented at a plea withdrawal hearing, and thus failed to show that the lack of a ruling on the motions changed the outcome of the case. Thomas v. State, 278 Ga. App. 661, 629 S.E.2d 553 (2006).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected as trial counsel testified that counsel advised defendant that defendant could receive a sentence of 85 years without parole. Porter v. State, 275 Ga. App. 513, 621 S.E.2d 523 (2005).

Despite the defendant's claims that trial counsel failed to: (1) discuss the possibility of a plea or engage in plea negotiations with the state; (2) advise defendant of the consequences of being sentenced as a recidivist; and (3) advise defendant of the consequences of a speedy trial demand, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims failed because the record showed that the state never made a plea offer and the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for trial counsel's alleged remaining errors. Cater v. State, 280 Ga. App. 891, 635 S.E.2d 246 (2006).

Defendant, who sought to withdraw a guilty plea on the ground that defense counsel was ineffective, did not show that defense counsel was deficient; the trial court found that defense counsel was more credible than the defendant on the question of whether counsel had advised the defendant that the defendant, who had pled guilty to armed robbery, would not be eligible for parole or sentence review. Carson v. State, 286 Ga. App. 167, 648 S.E.2d 493 (2007).

Defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to being coerced or deceived by counsel as to the length of sentence that could be imposed, and the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to withdraw the guilty plea entered into, because the record did not support the defendant's claim that counsel deceived the defendant about the length of the sentence as the defendant was advised of the maximum possible sentence and was told that there was no guarantee as to the length of sentence that would be imposed. Brantley v. State, 290 Ga. App. 764, 660 S.E.2d 846 (2008).

In a prosecution for possession of methamphetamine, the defendant claimed defense counsel was ineffective for failing to advise the defendant of the possibility of receiving a prison sentence without the possibility of parole. This claim failed as the trial court was entitled to believe trial counsel's testimony that counsel advised the defendant of this possible sentence before the defendant elected to go to trial. Matthews v. State, 294 Ga. App. 836, 670 S.E.2d 520 (2008).

It was proper to deny a defendant's motion for new trial based on ineffective assistance. There were opposing arguments, each supported by the record, as to whether the defendant would have pled guilty had counsel correctly informed the defendant of the mandatory minimum sentence, which presented factual matters primarily for resolution by the trial court. Childrey v. State, 294 Ga. App. 896, 670 S.E.2d 536 (2008).

Defendant could not establish that defendant's trial counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to advise the defendant that entering a guilty plea to two counts of molestation would subject the defendant to the state probation office's sex offender treatment program because the transcript of the plea hearing plainly reflected that both the prosecutor and the trial court expressly advised the defendant that the defendant would be required to comply with any and all screening and treatment recommendations of the state probation office as a special condition of defendant's probation; therefore, even if trial counsel failed to advise the defendant on those matters, the defendant was made cognizant of them prior to entry of defendant's plea but nevertheless chose to plead guilty, and the defendant could not demonstrate that the defendant was prejudiced by any failure of defendant's trial counsel to advise the defendant that the defendant would have to comply with all treatment recommendations of the probation office. Taylor v. State, 304 Ga. App. 878, 698 S.E.2d 384 (2010).

Trial counsel's failure to advise a client that pleading guilty will require the client to register as a sex offender is constitutionally deficient performance; even if registration as a sex offender is a collateral consequence of a guilty plea, the failure to advise a client that the client's guilty plea will require registration is constitutionally deficient performance because prevailing professional norms support the view that defense counsel should advise their clients concerning registration as a sex offender prior to entry of a guilty plea. Taylor v. State, 304 Ga. App. 878, 698 S.E.2d 384 (2010).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to withdraw defendant's guilty plea to two counts of child molestation because defendant's trial counsel failed to advise the defendant that entering a plea of guilty to child molestation would necessitate that the defendant comply with the requirements of the state's sex offender registry statute, O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12; the defendant was subject to the sex offender registration requirements at the time that the defendant entered into defendant's plea, the terms of the sex offender registry statute were succinct, clear, and explicit in setting forth the consequences of defendant's guilty plea, and defendant's trial counsel could have readily determined that the defendant was required to register and conveyed that information to the defendant. Taylor v. State, 304 Ga. App. 878, 698 S.E.2d 384 (2010).

Defendant juvenile did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because trial counsel testified that counsel met with the defendant several times and conveyed the sentencing offer to the defendant; although the defendant testified that counsel visited the defendant only twice and never communicated any information about the evidence that would be presented at trial or that the state had presented any plea offers, the juvenile court was authorized to believe counsel's testimony over the defendant's testimony. In the Interest of K.F., 316 Ga. App. 437, 729 S.E.2d 575 (2012).

Defendant failed to demonstrate ineffective assistance of counsel during the plea process based on counsel's alleged promise regarding the sentence to be imposed because the trial court expressly found that the defendant's testimony regarding what counsel told the defendant about the sentence that would be imposed lacked credibility and was contradicted by the testimony of counsel and the evidence of record. Davis v. State, No. A12A0674, 2012 Ga. App. LEXIS 583 (June 27, 2012).

Performance of counsel during sentencing. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for remaining silent during sentencing when the prosecutor erroneously stated that the defendant did not have a right to file a petition for a writ of habeas corpus because the record reflected that the defendant's trial counsel responded that the defendant had a right to file a habeas petition. Additionally, after announcing the court's sentence, the trial court advised the defendant that the defendant had the right to challenge the convictions in habeas proceedings. Jimmerson v. State, 289 Ga. 364, 711 S.E.2d 660 (2011).

Failure to advise defendant of prosecution as recidivist. — A trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial on the grounds of ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to the defendant's drug-related convictions based on defense counsel failing to advise the defendant that the state intended to prosecute the defendant as a recidivist since the defendant did not testify that the defendant would have accepted a plea offer if the defendant had known that the defendant was facing the prospect of being sentenced as a recidivist, thus, the defendant failed to show that counsel's alleged deficiency affected the end result of the case. Furthermore, the defendant did not show in the record that the state made or was amenable to any plea negotiations. Heard v. State, 291 Ga. App. 550, 662 S.E.2d 310 (2008).

Use of word "victim" in trial. — Trial court's ruling that it was highly unlikely that a reasonable probability existed that the outcome of the defendant's case would have been different but for defense counsel's failure to object to the use of the word "victim" when referring to the victim was not clearly erroneous; moreover, defense counsel testified that the defense theory was to show that the prosecution was on a witch hunt against the defendant and not objecting to the state's use of the word "victim" reinforced that strategy of showing that the state was "paranoid." This was a matter of tactics and strategy, and whether wise or unwise did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. Johnson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 341, 634 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

Failure to request redaction of drug reference in 9-1-1 tape. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request redaction of drug references in a 9-1-1 tape as the defendant could not demonstrate the prejudice necessary to establish ineffective assistance of counsel since the defendant subsequently injected the issue of drugs into the case by testifying that the victim's home was a crack house and that the victim set the defendant up in order to protect the victim's grandchild, an alleged drug dealer. Atwell v. State, 293 Ga. App. 586, 667 S.E.2d 442 (2008).

Reference to the 9-11 tragedy. — Defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's reference to the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks; there was no evidence in the record as to trial counsel's perspective because trial counsel did not testify at the hearing on the motion for new trial, and while the appellate court did not condone the analogy's use so soon after the 9-11 tragedy, it could not conclude that but for trial counsel's failure to object to its use, the jury would have acquitted defendant. Chalvatzis v. State, 265 Ga. App. 699, 595 S.E.2d 558 (2004).

Prosecutor's use of word "rape." — In a rape prosecution, defendant did not show that defendant's counsel provided ineffective assistance by not objecting to the prosecutor's repeated use of the word "rape" in examining witnesses because, if counsel erred, defendant did not show that the outcome of defendant's trial would have been different had counsel raised this objection, as the trial court's instructions explained to the jury the difference between consensual sexual relations and rape and the state's burden of proving that the victim did not consent to sexual relations with defendant. Machuca v. State, 279 Ga. App. 231, 630 S.E.2d 828 (2006).

Reference to defendant as 'monster' without objections. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to make a motion for a mistrial after the prosecutor referred to the defendant as "a monster" in the prosecutor's opening statement; defense counsel explained that the trial court had ruled against the state's request to admit similar transaction evidence, to the prosecutor's surprise, and that defense counsel wanted the trial to go forward without giving the state time to "regroup." Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 683, 644 S.E.2d 535 (2007).

Objections to prosecutor's argument. — Evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that defendant's trial counsel rendered effective assistance because: (1) counsel did not err in not moving for a directed verdict because the evidence sufficed to sustain defendant's conviction for possession of a firearm by a convicted felon charge; (2) counsel's failure to object to the trial court's failure to recharge the jury in the second phase of the bifurcated trial was harmless error; (3) counsel's failure to object to detective's testimony regarding citizens' complaints about a drug dealer was appropriate trial strategy because counsel did not want to call more attention to the statement; and (4) counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's closing argument statements was not deficient performance as each of the prosecutor's statements was a reasonable inference drawn from the evidence. Ballard v. State, 268 Ga. App. 55, 601 S.E.2d 434 (2004).

Defendant did not show counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel because counsel did not object when the prosecutor made comments concerning facts that were not in evidence, as this was presumed strategic, absent testimony to the contrary, which was not presented. Jackson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 317, 609 S.E.2d 643 (2004).

Because the trial result would not have been different if counsel had objected to the prosecutor's argument, the defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective. Hunter v. State, 273 Ga. App. 52, 614 S.E.2d 179 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel by the failure to object to a passing reference to defendant's incarceration as the reason for defendant not being arrested sooner and to the initial arrest as being part of a "roundup"; all of the circumstances connected with a defendant's arrest were admissible, even those that established the commission of another criminal offense, if they were relevant and the testimony was relevant to counter any accusation that defendant's arrest was delayed due to lack of identification. Butler v. State, 277 Ga. App. 57, 625 S.E.2d 458 (2005).

Defendant failed to establish that defense counsel's failure to object to a prosecutor's questions about specific instances of misconduct was ineffective assistance since trial counsel testified that, knowing that the state had no evidence of prior crimes to introduce, defense counsel's trial strategy was to show that the type of acts for which the defendant stood accused were "totally out of character," and since counsel further testified that counsel did not object to the two questions at issue because defense counsel believed that the door to that line of questioning had been opened and because the state possessed no evidence that could be introduced to harm the defendant. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. App. 570, 631 S.E.2d 772 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failing to join the objection tendered by the codefendant's counsel to the prosecutor's closing argument that allegedly improperly shifted the burden of proof to the three defendants; trial counsel's decision not to add an objection on top of the codefendant's objection was neither deficient performance nor prejudicial, as the trial counsel had already objected once, the codefendant's objection to the statement had already been overruled, and the trial counsel testified that the trial counsel was prepared to argue extensively about the burden of proof and the judge's instructions on the burden of proof during the trial counsel's closing argument. Brooks v.

State, 281 Ga. 14, 635 S.E.2d 723 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1215, 127 S. Ct. 1266, 167 L. Ed. 2d 91 (2007).

Defendant's trial counsel was ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to move for a mistrial after the prosecutor, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-16-4(a)(1), failed to notify the trial counsel of the defendant's oral admission made in custody and then elicited testimony from the officer to whom the admission was made indicating that the officer had testified about the admission at a pretrial hearing when the officer, in fact, had not so testified; the state acted in bad faith as the prosecutor intentionally elicited testimony about the admission and knew about the admission long before trial, the defense counsel was prejudiced by the misconduct as, had the misconduct not occurred, the defense counsel would have understood the importance of obtaining the officer's pretrial testimony, and the defendant was prejudiced by counsel's failure, as the admission was central to the state's case and was not cumulative of other evidence. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 455, 636 S.E.2d 178 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to object to a portion of the state's closing argument that the defendant characterized as an impermissible golden rule reference; there was a presumption that defense counsel's actions were strategic, as appellate counsel did not call defense counsel at the hearing on the defendant's motion for a new trial to examine defense counsel on the conduct of the trial, and the appellate court found that the state's closing argument did not refer to the golden rule. Parks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 679, 637 S.E.2d 46 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to argue that the state was relying on the same facts to support burglary and theft by taking charges; the two charges were not based on the same facts, and even if one was included in the other as a matter of fact, the defendant was not entitled to dismissal of either charge or to a limiting instruction. Martin v. State, 285 Ga. App. 375, 646 S.E.2d 339 (2007).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel arguments failed when, because the prosecutor's suggestion in closing argument that the victim was bending when the victim was shot was authorized by the physical evidence, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's argument; although the defendant alleged that trial counsel failed to subpoena trial witnesses, the defendant admitted that there was no failure to introduce critical testimony at trial. Winfrey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 718, 650 S.E.2d 262 (2007).

Because the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in presenting a defense and requesting jury instructions on the defendant's claim of innocence, and was authorized to forego objection to a challenged portion of the state's closing argument, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit and did not warrant a new trial. King v. State, 282 Ga. 505, 651 S.E.2d 711 (2007).

While the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to that portion of the state's closing argument in which the prosecutor referenced a slain officer's funeral a week prior, as that fact had no relevance to the charges the defendant was facing, based on the overwhelming evidence of guilt, including the defendant's admission, the defendant's convictions for trafficking in cocaine and possession of cocaine with intent to distribute were upheld on appeal; thus, a new trial was properly denied. Cantrell v. State, 290 Ga. App. 651, 660 S.E.2d 468 (2008).

At a trial for trafficking in cocaine and for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, trial counsel was ineffective for not objecting when the prosecutor, in closing, described attending the funeral of a police officer killed in the line of duty, as this tragic and emotionally charged event had no relation to the evidence admitted or the case at hand. The defendant, however, had not shown prejudice from counsel's deficient performance, as the defendant admitted having cocaine before being chased by police officers, an officer saw the defendant throw down a large bag while the defendant was being chased, and a large amount of cocaine was recovered in this same location, less than 40 yards from where the defendant surrendered. Cantrell v. State, 290 Ga. App. 651, 660 S.E.2d 468 (2008).

In a rape case, as the prosecutor did not offer a personal belief about the veracity of an eyewitness and victim during closing argument, but instead argued that based on the facts and reasonable inferences drawn therefrom, the jury should conclude that those witnesses were telling the truth, defense counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the argument. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 633, 667 S.E.2d 899 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to statements made by the prosecutor in opening and closing arguments because the statements were but a small part of a summary of the evidence best understood as conceding the ambiguities therein and were unlikely to be interpreted as comments on the defendant's failure to testify. Odom v. State, 304 Ga. App. 615, 697 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, No. S10C1801, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 927 (Ga. 2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's claim of ineffectiveness of counsel on the ground that trial counsel should have objected to the prosecutor's closing argument that the incident took place in a residential area and that the incident could have endangered innocent women and children because the defendant did not show how the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel objected to the second reference made by the prosecutor, and the trial court instructed the jury that the evidence did not include opening and closing statements of the attorneys. Odom v. State, 304 Ga. App. 615, 697 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, No. S10C1801, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 927 (Ga. 2010).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel when the defendant's trial counsel failed to object to the state's opening argument because no reversible error occurred with respect to the prosecutor's opening statement; the prosecutor had a good faith belief at the time that the prosecutor made the prosecutor's opening statement that a witness would testify that the witness saw the defendant with a gun, and the jury was instructed that the prosecutor's opening statement was not evidence. Jennings v. State, 288 Ga. 120, 702 S.E.2d 151 (2010).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to statements the prosecutor made during closing argument because counsel did object, and counsel's objection was successful; while the defendant asserted that counsel should have further moved for a mistrial, such decisions generally fell within the ambit of strategy and tactics. Wilson v. State, 306 Ga. App. 827, 703 S.E.2d 400 (2010).

Counsel was not deficient in failing to object to the prosecutor's victim impact argument during opening statement because negative characterizations of the victim were proper since the characterizations were relevant to evidence later offered to explain the context in which the drug-related crimes occurred, and the prosecutor's allusion to the fact that the victim was no longer alive was relevant to the murder charge; a witness's testimony and photographs of the witness's injuries were directly relevant and admissible to prove the charge against the defendant of committing aggravated assault on the witness. Lacey v. State, 288 Ga. 341, 703 S.E.2d 617 (2010).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to arguments made by the prosecutor during closing arguments because the defendant failed to show either that trial counsel performed deficiently in failing to object or that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel objected under the standard of Strickland. Fletcher v. State, 307 Ga. App. 131, 704 S.E.2d 222 (2010).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial on the ground that the defendant's trial counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's statement during closing argument amounted to ineffective assistance because the defendant could not demonstrate that the deficiency in trial court's performance prejudiced the defendant; the evidence of the defendant's guilt was overwhelming, and there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been more favorable had trial counsel objected, even successfully, to the prosecutor's statement in argument. Jones v. State, 288 Ga. 431, 704 S.E.2d 776 (2011).

Defendant did not show that trial counsel was ineffective by failing to object to the prosecutor's improper argument because the prosecutor's comments, when read as a whole, did not constitute a warning to the jury regarding the defendant's future actions if the defendant remained free, but instead constituted a comment on the evidence, including the defendant's molestation of the similar-transaction victim. Even if the argument did violate the prohibition against future-dangerousness arguments by the state of Georgia, it was highly unlikely that this single portion of the prosecutor's closing argument contributed to the guilty verdict, given the evidence presented against the defendant. Cobb v. State, 309 Ga. App. 70, 709 S.E.2d 9 (2011).

Counsel's failure to object to a municipal court judge's improper testimony about the defendant's future dangerousness was not ineffective assistance as a matter of law. Bass v. State, 288 Ga. App. 690, 655 S.E.2d 303 (2007), rev'd on other grounds, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2009).

A defendant did not show that trial counsel was ineffective by moving for a directed verdict at the close of the state's evidence, thereby allowing the state to introduce additional evidence when the motion was denied. Trial counsel testified at the motion-for-new-trial hearing that moving for a directed verdict was trial strategy and that counsel hoped the motion would be granted by the trial court. Zapata v. State, 291 Ga. App. 485, 662 S.E.2d 271 (2008).

Failure to object to comments from court. — Because O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 was not violated by the trial court's remarks when giving reasons for a ruling, any objection to that comment by defendant's trial counsel would have been without merit. Artis v. State, 299 Ga. App. 287, 682 S.E.2d 375 (2009).

Trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance when counsel failed to object after the state elicited improper testimony and improperly commented on defendant's pre-arrest silence; defendant was entitled to a new trial because the evidence was not overwhelming and the error occurred in direct examination, cross-examination of defendant, and the state's closing argument. State v. Moore, 318 Ga. App. 118, 733 S.E.2d 418 (2012).

Erroneous legal argument. — Counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for allegedly failing to know or research the elements of rape, as counsel erroneously argued that there had to be actual physical force without considering that force could be by intimidation; while trial counsel's argument as to the element of intimidation may have been legally inaccurate, no prejudice was shown, as the trial court's charge did not contradict the argument advanced by trial counsel. Hutchens v. State, 281 Ga. App. 610, 636 S.E.2d 773 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Futile objections. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to raise a constitutional challenge to O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(e) based on the statute's allowance of a conviction for trafficking in methamphetamine if a defendant possessed 28 grams or more, regardless of the purity of the methamphetamine mixture, while O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(a) only allowed a conviction for trafficking in cocaine if the mixture of cocaine had a purity of at least 10 percent; the proposed challenge was not supported by the evidence as the state's expert testified that 56.2 grams of the 79.0 grams of the substance tested was positive for methamphetamine, and there was no proffer or evidence as to the purity of the mixture or any allegation by defendants that the substance was not methamphetamine. Christopher v. State, 262 Ga. App. 257, 585 S.E.2d 107 (2003).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel at a trial for aggravated child molestation because it would have been futile to object to the 10-year old victim's videotaped statement, which was admissible under the exception in

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 for a child's statement of sexual abuse since there was sufficient indicia of reliability and the child was available to testify at trial. Campos v. State, 263 Ga. App. 119, 587 S.E.2d 264 (2003).

When defendant's counsel did not object to a nurse's testimony summarizing what the victim had told the nurse about her rape by defendant, this was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the victim's veracity was at issue, she was present at trial, under oath, and subject to cross-examination, and the nurse's testimony amounted to a prior consistent out-of-court statement, which was admissible. Johnson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 1, 601 S.E.2d 392 (2004).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as counsel did not object to the admission of statements defendant made to two police officers during defendant's custodial interrogation because the claim had been resolved adversely to defendant during a pretrial hearing; a different result was not required because defendant's statements involved a denial of culpability for the crimes, not a confession induced by trickery and deceit. Sampson v. State, 279 Ga. 8, 608 S.E.2d 621 (2005).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to similar transaction evidence as trial counsel did not testify at the ineffective assistance hearing and the decision was presumed to be strategic; further, any objection would have been futile as the transactions were sufficiently similar in that: (1) defendant lived with the victims' mothers; (2) the victims were left in defendant's care; (3) defendant pushed aside the victims' clothing to assault them; (4) defendant was discovered when family members walked in on defendant during the assaults; and (5) one victim was a child, while the other had the mental capacity of a child. Page v. State, 271 Ga. App. 541, 610 S.E.2d 171 (2005).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object when the state asked defendant why the defendant did not stay at the victim's home following the robbery, report the incident to authorities, or tell anyone defendant's version of events prior to the trial; the state's cross-examination did not infringe upon defendant's right to remain silent and since defendant's direct examination brought out virtually the same testimony as the allegedly improper cross-examination, defendant was not prejudiced by the state's inquiry. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to object to the trial court's communication with the jury as the failure to raise a meritless objection could not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. Hall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 203, 614 S.E.2d 844 (2005).

Defendant failed to show that the trial counsel was ineffective in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, as statements made by a co-conspirator were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5, and the failure of counsel to raise a non-meritorious hearsay objection did not constitute ineffective legal representation. Jones v. State, 279 Ga. 854, 622 S.E.2d 1 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel by the failure to object to the trial court complying with a juror's request that defendant briefly stand before the jury before they watched a video of a drug transaction a second time; the objection would have been meritless. Butler v. State, 277 Ga. App. 57, 625 S.E.2d 458 (2005).

It was not ineffective assistance to fail to seek a mistrial after the prosecutor made certain statements during closing arguments regarding the horribleness of child molestation, for which the defendant was on trial, as the statements were a fair inference drawn from the evidence and within the latitude given to counsel during closing. Steverson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 876, 625 S.E.2d 476 (2005).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to object to the police detective's testimony that the victim exhibited symptoms that, in the detective's training and experience, were displayed by victims of sexual or physical abuse; although the state did not ask the trial court to qualify the detective as an expert in forensic interviewing, the detective's testimony established the detective's qualifications as such, and the detective's testimony, therefore, was within permissible bounds. Malone v. State, 277 Ga. App. 694, 627 S.E.2d 378 (2006).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as: (1) a hearsay objection to statements the defendant made during an argument and to testimony that the defendant stated that the defendant should have killed the other witnesses would have been futile as the statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; (2) a hearsay objection to a witness's testimony as to the defendant's statements during a van ride would also have been futile as the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3; and (3) counsel's strategic decision to attack certain testimony through cross-examination was not ineffective assistance of counsel. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. 229, 637 S.E.2d 393 (2006).

In a shaken baby case, defense counsel was not ineffective in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to object to testimony about two earlier incidents, one in which the defendant left the victim alone after agreeing to baby sit, and another in which the defendant cut up the victim's shoes with a knife after arguing with the victim's mother; any objection would have been futile, as the two incidents were admissible to show the defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind in shaking the victim. Mahan v. State, 282 Ga. App. 201, 638 S.E.2d 366 (2006).

No ineffectiveness of counsel was shown in a defendant's malice murder trial by the failure of the defendant's trial counsel to object to the introduction of a prior consistent statement of a witness whose motivation for testifying against the defendant had been vigorously examined in cross-examination; such an objection would have been futile because the veracity of the witness was placed in issue by the cross-examination, rendering the prior consistent statement admissible, and therefore no ineffectiveness of counsel was shown. Green v. State, 281 Ga. 322, 638 S.E.2d 288 (2006).

A prosecutor's closing argument did not ask the jurors to put themselves in the victim's place or imply that the defendant was a future danger to society, but instead the prosecutor argued that it would be nonsensical to find that a mean look could justify a shooting; such an argument was not improper in light of the defendant's justification defense, and counsel thus was not ineffective for failing to object to it. Carpenter v. State, 285 Ga. App. 296, 645 S.E.2d 709 (2007).

Counsel was not ineffective because the record established that the defendant's statement that a multipurpose tool belonged to the defendant was voluntary, and as such the statement was admissible; a motion to suppress by counsel would have been futile under the circumstances. Donnell v. State, 285 Ga. App. 135, 645 S.E.2d 614 (2007).

Because the defendant's counsel was not ineffective in failing to make a meritless objection and could not be held to a duty to anticipate changes in the law regarding the use of a nolo plea to impeach a witness, allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel lacked merit. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. 778, 642 S.E.2d 837 (2007).

Because the trial judge did not err in admonishing the victim to tell the truth, outside the presence of the jury, or by propounding a single question to the victim in the presence of the jury in order to develop the truth of the case, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to either action, as the objection would have lacked merit. Morales v. State, 286 Ga. App. 698, 649 S.E.2d 873 (2007).

In a child molestation case, trial counsel was not ineffective for not objecting when a child advocate and a grandmother of the victim testified that they had told the victim to tell the truth; the statements were not improper bolstering because they did not constitute an opinion as to whether the victim was in fact telling the truth. Slade v. State, 287 Ga. App. 34, 651 S.E.2d 352 (2007), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 56, 172 L.Ed.2d 24 (2008).

Defendant's trial counsel could not be found to have rendered ineffective assistance in not objecting to the court's admonishment of the victim to tell the truth or the court's subsequent questioning of the victim, as the appeals court found that both actions by the trial court were proper; hence, any objection would have lacked merit. Morales v. State, 286 Ga. App. 698, 649 S.E.2d 873 (2007).

Counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to evidence that a bloodhound had tracked a human scent, as the evidence was admissible without a showing that such tracking had reached a scientific stage of verifiable certainty, or for not objecting to expert testimony, as the expert had not made an impermissible comment on the ultimate issue in the case but merely posited a connection between two crimes. Bass v. State, 288 Ga. App. 690, 655 S.E.2d 303 (2007), rev'd on other grounds, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 31 (Ga. 2009).

Defendant did not carry the burden of demonstrating ineffective assistance of counsel because trial counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to make a meritless objection to the trial court's allegedly erroneous decisions regarding merger of offenses and prosecutorial misconduct; neither of those decisions were in error. Chandler v. State, 309 Ga. App. 611, 710 S.E.2d 826 (2011).

Defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of counsel from the defendant's trial counsel having failed to object to the absence of a charge instructing jurors that to convict the defendant of felony murder the jurors were to specifically find the underlying felony had some connection with the homicide. Inasmuch as the jury found the defendant guilty of malice murder and no conviction was entered on the felony murder charge, this enumeration of error was moot. Darville v. State, 289 Ga. 698, 715 S.E.2d 110 (2011).

Failure to object to closing argument. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the state's closing argument that a club was not lenient about letting people in who were under 21 years of age because that was a reasonable inference from defendant's testimony that one had to be 21 years old to get into the club. Young v. State, 272 Ga. App. 304, 612 S.E.2d 118 (2005).

When, in a prosecutor's closing argument in defendant's murder trial, the prosecutor said the state did not have to prove the exact time of the murder, unless defendant claimed an alibi, which the defendant did not, the prosecutor did not improperly comment on defendant's failure to testify, so defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance by failing to object to the prosecutor's closing argument. Washington v. State, 279 Ga. 722, 620 S.E.2d 809 (2005).

In a case in which a jury convicted the defendant for trafficking in cocaine, trial counsel was not deficient for failing to object to that portion of the prosecutor's closing argument concerning the sufficiency of the evidence to convict the defendant as a party to the crime as the prosecutor's statement was correct; even if counsel's failure to object could be considered deficient, it did not prejudice the jury. Moss v. State, 278 Ga. App. 362, 629 S.E.2d 5 (2006).

In a prosecution for kidnapping with bodily injury and aggravated assault, it was not ineffective assistance of counsel for the defense counsel not to object to part of the prosecutor's closing argument, claiming that the prosecutor was trying to bait the jury into believing that its only opportunity to prevent crime in general was to convict the defendant, because exhorting jurors to have an impact on crime in general was not impermissible. Nelson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 548, 629 S.E.2d 410 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to object to the state's closing argument, in which the prosecutor incorrectly stated that the burden of proof was on the defendant because defense counsel testified that counsel did not object because counsel knew that the trial court would instruct the jury that the attorney's argument was not evidence, and then would tell the jury that the state had the burden of proof; additionally, the trial judge instructed the jury that the state had the burden of proof and that the burden never shifted to the defendant. Kania v. State, 280 Ga. App. 356, 634 S.E.2d 146 (2006).

Because an objection to the prosecutor's closing argument would have been meritless, as the prosecutor's description of aggravated assault was in accordance with the statute, consistent with the trial court's instruction to the jury, and, given the evidence, could not have misled the jury into convicting the defendant on an alternate basis of aggravated assault not specified by the indictment, trial counsel could not be deemed ineffective. Dudley v. State, 283 Ga. App. 86, 640 S.E.2d 677 (2006).

Trial counsel's decision not to object to a witness's statement about the defendant's silence was strategic and thus did not constitute ineffective assistance; moreover, the evidence of the defendant's guilt was overwhelming. McClain v. State, 284 Ga. App. 187, 643 S.E.2d 273 (2007).

In a prosecution for child molestation involving a 12-year-old victim, evidence was properly admitted that the defendant also had sexual intercourse with a 15-year-old child. Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's comment during closing argument that the defendant liked to perform sex acts on children as this was a fair comment on the evidence, and any objection would have been overruled. Martin v. State, 294 Ga. App. 117, 668 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

As the interpretation of former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-8-801) in Mallory v. State, 409 S.E.2d 839 (1991), had only prospective application, it did not apply to the defendant's case, which was tried before Mallory was decided. Therefore, defense counsel's strategic decision not to object to the prosecutor's comment on the defendant's request for counsel was not prejudicial as a matter of law; in view of the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, the defendant did not establish a violation of the right to the effective assistance of counsel. Patterson v. State, 285 Ga. 597, 679 S.E.2d 716 (2009), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 1117, 130 S. Ct. 1051, 175 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2010).

Even assuming that the prosecutor's request that the jury not turn the defendant loose on the streets was an improper comment on the defendant's future dangerousness, and that defense counsel's failure to object constituted deficient performance, in light of evidence that the defendant confessed to a murder to an accomplice, a cellmate, and an officer, the assumed deficient performance created little, if any, actual prejudice. Patterson v. State, 285 Ga. 597, 679 S.E.2d 716 (2009), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 1117, 130 S. Ct. 1051, 175 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2010).

In a prosecution for possession of controlled substances, defense counsel did not object to statements by the codefendant's counsel in closing argument regarding the multiple drug-related investigations of the defendant. As the argument was based on evidence produced at trial, an objection would not have been meritorious; therefore, the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective. Kessinger v. State, 298 Ga. App. 479, 680 S.E.2d 546 (2009).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to object to comments made during the state's closing argument in which the prosecutor conveyed the prosecutor's personal assessment of the evidence because the evidence against the defendant was overwhelming, and in light of the evidence, the defendant did not show that had trial counsel objected to the state's closing argument, there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of defendant's trial would be different. Bridges v. State, 286 Ga. 535, 690 S.E.2d 136 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object and/or to move for a mistrial due to a statement the assistant district attorney made during closing argument because the defendant did not demonstrate that any statement by the prosecution was not a reasonable inference from the evidence; the defendant did not show that but for a lack of objection or moving for a mistrial, there was the reasonable probability that the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been different. Sanford v. State, 287 Ga. 351, 695 S.E.2d 579 (2010), cert. denied, 131 S. Ct. 1514, 179 L. Ed. 2d 336 (2011).

Trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's characterization of the defendant as a "thug" during closing argument because the prosecution was afforded wide latitude in closing argument, and the characterization was based on reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence. Dockery v. State, 287 Ga. 275, 695 S.E.2d 599 (2010).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel because even assuming that counsel performed deficiently in failing to object to the prosecutor's argument, despite counsel's explanation of the strategy, the defendant failed to carry the defendant's burden to show prejudice since the trial court instructed the jury that closing arguments were not evidence and that it was the jury's responsibility to decide the case based on the evidence introduced in court, which would exclude what the jury could have heard on television. Because the evidence against the defendant was strong, even if counsel had objected to the argument and the trial court had sustained the objection and instructed the jurors specifically not to rely on what the jurors had heard on television, there was no reasonable probability that the result of the trial would have been different. Long v. State, 287 Ga. 886, 700 S.E.2d 399 (2010).

Trial counsel did not provide deficient performance in failing to object to the prosecutor's remarks during closing argument because the remarks did not constitute an improper comment on the defendant's failure to testify since the state's manifest intention was not to comment on the defendant's silence to the police or failure to testify at trial but to comment on the defendant's failure to assert the defendant's innocence in response to a request by an acquaintance for the defendant to go to the police; taken in context, the prosecutor's closing argument did not directly or naturally implicate the defendant's decision not to testify, but the prosecutor was simply making a reasonable inference based on previous testimony. Cannon v. State, 288 Ga. 225, 702 S.E.2d 845 (2010).

Trial court's finding that the defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel was not clearly erroneous because trial counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's permissible closing argument could not serve as the basis for an ineffective assistance claim; the prosecutor was not offering the prosecutor's personal belief about the veracity of a state witness, but instead was arguing that, based on the evidence presented and the reasonable inferences drawn therefrom, the jury could conclude that the witness was telling the truth, and when read in context, the prosecutor's statements to the jury that the witness was telling you the truth were suggestions to the jury of inferences the jury could draw from the evidence presented and were made in response to trial counsel's attack on the witness's credibility during cross-examination. Herndon v. State, 309 Ga. App. 403, 710 S.E.2d 607 (2011).

Defendant's counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to object to certain remarks made by the prosecutor during closing argument because the prosecutor's argument that the victim could not have been lying due to the level of detail in the victim's testimony merely urged the jury to make a deduction about the victim's veracity based upon the evidence adduced at trial; the remarks did not constitute a statement of the prosecutor's personal belief as to the victim's veracity, and any objection thereto would have been meritless. Jackson v. State, 309 Ga. App. 450, 710 S.E.2d 649 (2011).

Trial counsel's failure to object to the prosecutor's comments during closing argument did not constitute deficient performance because the comments of which defendant complained were permissible; the comments were the conclusion the prosecutor wished the jury to draw from the evidence and not a statement of the prosecutor's personal belief as to the veracity of a witness. Strickland v. State, 311 Ga. App. 400, 715 S.E.2d 798 (2011).

Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's improper argument because even assuming that an objection to the offending argument would have had merit, the defendant did not show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel made the objection. Jeffers v. State, 290 Ga. 311, 721 S.E.2d 86 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object during closing arguments when the state commented on the defendant's right to remain silent and failure to come forward because the prosecutor did not act inappropriately; the defendant initially placed the evidence before the jury that the defendant fled and did not go to police after the shooting. Kendrick v. State, 290 Ga. 873, 725 S.E.2d 296 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the state's argument that no person in the circuit had ever been convicted and later proven innocent because the trial court would not have abused the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion for mistrial had one been made and did not err when the court credited trial counsel's defense of counsel's decision not to object to the prosecutor's closing argument as strategic; even assuming that the prosecutor should not have compared the defendant to others, the subject of wrongful convictions in other cases was brought up by the defendant, and the jury was not impressed either way by the colloquy. Stubbs v. State, 315 Ga. App. 482, 727 S.E.2d 229 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's closing arguments because evidence supported the trial court's determination that no improper comments were made during the state's closing argument. Davenport v. State, 316 Ga. App. 234, 729 S.E.2d 442 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the prosecutor's closing argument which the defendant alleged shifted the burden of proof to the defense because trial counsel made the strategic decision not to object so as not to draw the jury's attention to the statements. Maurer v. State, 320 Ga. App. 585, 740 S.E.2d 318 (2013).

When it would have been meritless for defense counsel to object to portions of the state's closing argument and to reserve objections to the jury charge, the failure to make the objections did not support a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Sampson v. State, 282 Ga. 82, 646 S.E.2d 60 (2007).

Time for closing argument. — While the defendant met the burden of showing trial counsel's deficient performance based on a misimpression that counsel was entitled to only one hour to make a closing argument, instead of two as permitted by O.C.G.A. § 17-8-73, the defendant failed to show that but for that error, trial counsel could have convinced the jury that the defendant was innocent of the crimes charged. Hardeman v. State, 281 Ga. 220, 635 S.E.2d 698 (2006).

Although defense counsel did not object when counsel's closing argument was limited to one hour, even though the kidnapping charge permitted two hours, the defendant failed to show prejudice necessary for an ineffective assistance of counsel claim because there was no reasonable possibility of an acquittal even if counsel had demanded two hours of closing argument due to the lack of complex issues, the fact that the defendant admitted to most of the charges, and counsel addressed all pertinent issues in counsel's closing argument. Hammond v. State, 303 Ga. App. 176, 692 S.E.2d 760 (2010), aff'd, 289 Ga. 142, 710 S.E.2d 124 (2011).

Timing of jury instructions. — Trial counsel's failure to object when the court gave jury instructions before closing arguments did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel since the trial counsel explained the process to the defendant and the defendant agreed to the reversal of the usual process. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. 853, 596 S.E.2d 597 (2004).

Questioning of jurors. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to object to a prosecutor's questions to a jury panel relating to aiding and abetting in which the prosecutor used an armed robbery involving a getaway car as an example; because there was nothing in the circumstances of the defendant's case, which involved the defendant riding in a stolen vehicle and eluding police officers, that would have caused the prosecutor's reference to the extrinsic offense of armed robbery to have improperly influenced the jurors. Cooper v. State, 281 Ga. App. 882, 637 S.E.2d 480 (2006).

Assuming defense counsel's performance was deficient during the defendant's trial for aggravated assault and criminal trespass for failing to object to the trial court's failure to ask the qualifying voir dire questions that are required by O.C.G.A. § 15-12-164(a), the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different had the trial court asked the statutory questions as the prosecutor asked the potential jurors whether the jurors were acquainted with the defendant or the victim, and if so, whether they could remain impartial. Since the potential jurors indicated no bias and the defendant did not contend that any juror was, in fact, biased or prejudiced, the defendant failed to show ineffective assistance of trial counsel. Burnette v. State, 291 Ga. App. 504, 662 S.E.2d 272 (2008).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant was deprived of effective assistance of counsel because although the defendant argued that the defendant's trial counsel failed to ask prospective jurors certain questions during voir dire, the defendant made no assertion as to what answers any prospective juror would have given had the juror been asked any of those questions or as to what significance any such answer would have had; because the record also did not show that any other prospective jurors were erroneously qualified or disqualified due to any actions that the trial counsel took or failed to take, no prejudice could be assigned to the alleged error by trial counsel. Ware v. State, 307 Ga. App. 782, 706 S.E.2d 143 (2011).

Defendant's claim that the defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to request that the trial court examine the remaining jurors whether the jurors had been affected by a juror after the juror had been removed was unsupported, and the defendant could not show prejudice or harm because there was no error on which to premise the claim of ineffective assistance; the defendant did not request that the trial court question the remaining jurors, and the juror's responses clearly indicated that the juror's statement to the other jurors about the juror's conflict was exceedingly minimal and that the others had no reaction to the statement. Sharpe v. State, 288 Ga. 565, 707 S.E.2d 338 (2011).

When the defendant was on trial for murdering a girlfriend, as defense counsel decided not to further question a prospective juror, who had strong feelings about domestic violence, in order to avoid tainting the remaining jurors, this was a reasonable strategic decision that did not constitute ineffective assistance. Cade v. State, 289 Ga. 805, 716 S.E.2d 196 (2011).

Failure to challenge jury array. — Counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge or object to the racial composition of the jury panel because the panel appeared to mirror the demographics of the county as a whole. Goodall v. State, 277 Ga. App. 600, 627 S.E.2d 183 (2006).

As defense counsel testified that counsel believed the state's race-neutral reasons for striking African-Americans during voir dire, and as the jury panel comprised 10 white members and two African-American members, counsel was not ineffective for not raising a Batson challenge. Crawford v. State, 294 Ga. App. 711, 670 S.E.2d 185 (2008).

Because the defendant waived any objection regarding an unsummoned juror, and because evidence supported the trial court's finding that the state's reasons for striking the challenged jurors were race-neutral, the defendant did not show that counsel's failure to object constituted ineffective assistance. Allen v. State, 299 Ga. App. 201, 683 S.E.2d 343 (2009).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to raise a Batson challenge because the defendant failed to show that a Batson challenge would have been successful since the defendant neither called the state's prosecutors to testify at the motion for new trial hearing nor sought out or attempted to introduce their notes regarding the striking of jurors prior to trial; only the state attempted to elicit that information during the state's cross-examination of trial counsel, and the resulting testimony indicated that the state did have race-neutral reasons for using the state's peremptory strikes. Stokes v. State, 289 Ga. 702, 715 S.E.2d 81 (2011).

Failure to object to juror. — Trial court determined under O.C.G.A. § 15-12-163(c) that a juror who had recently moved from the county was competent to serve, and the defendant presented no evidence to contradict this finding; even if the counsel's failure to object to the juror could be deemed ineffective representation, the defendant did not show that the deficiency prejudiced the defense. Lawson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 852, 630 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIII for failing to properly pursue an equal protection objection under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. II based on the exclusion of African-Americans from the jury and from the pool of available jurors; the only evidence showed that the population of available African-American jurors in the trial court's county was very small, and the defendant did not show that the jury list failed to contain a fair cross section of the community or that there was purposeful discrimination in the selection of the panel. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Appeals court rejected the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim, based on trial counsel's failure to move for mistrial or seek the removal of a juror who became nauseated during the state's cross-examination of the defendant and left the courtroom with the bailiff, but who thereafter indicated a willingness to continue and was allowed to remain on the jury, as: (1) nothing showed either that the juror was rendered unable by illness to continue or that anything improper occurred while the juror was separated from the others during the juror's temporary illness; (2) the defendant failed to show any prejudice by the lack of an inquiry; and (3) the defendant was not entitled to a presumption of prejudice due to an irregularity in the conduct of a juror. Jones v. State, 282 Ga. 47, 644 S.E.2d 853 (2007).

Defendant did not overcome the strong presumption that trial counsel's failure to seek a juror's removal for cause constituted reasonable professional assistance because the defendant did not question trial counsel at the motion for new trial hearing about counsel's decision-making with regard to this issue, and the trial transcript showed that the juror did not meet the qualification for dismissal for cause. Higginbotham v. State, 287 Ga. 187, 695 S.E.2d 210 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to move to strike three prospective jurors for cause, all of whom said the jurors had strong feelings about individuals involved in the sale of illegal drugs, because the jurors all indicated the jurors could try to judge the case based upon the court's instructions and the evidence. Ellis v. State, 292 Ga. 276, 736 S.E.2d 412 (2013).

Failure to object to limitation on voir dire. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to limitations on voir dire because the defendant was nevertheless able to adequately explore any inclination or bias that might have derived from strong feelings that prospective jurors had about individuals involved in the sale of illegal drugs. Ellis v. State, 292 Ga. 276, 736 S.E.2d 412 (2013).

Failure to ensure defendant's presence at in-chamber hearing on juror removal. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for malice murder, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial based on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to a juror remaining on the panel after a brief encounter with one of the state's witnesses and the failure to insist that defendant be allowed to personally participate in the in-chambers hearing on the issue. The decision to allow the juror to remain on the panel was a reasonable tactical decision made after a hearing was held on the issue and no harm was established by the defendant not being present during the in-chambers hearing on the issue as a result of the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt. Peterson v. State, 284 Ga. 275, 663 S.E.2d 164 (2008).

Failure to allow defendant's "participation" in voir dire. — Defendant had not shown ineffective assistance of counsel based on the defendant's claim that the defendant was not allowed to participate in jury selection. Trial counsel testified that the defendant was present during voir dire and that counsel and the defendant did have some discussion about prospective jurors; moreover, the defendant did not suggest how jury selection would have been different if the defendant had participated. Daugherty v. State, 291 Ga. App. 541, 662 S.E.2d 318 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 792 (Ga. 2008).

Failure to poll jury. — Because the failure to timely request a jury poll did not amount to deficient performance and trial counsel's preparation was not deficient or prejudicial, the appeals court rejected the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims. Hodge v. State, 287 Ga. App. 750, 652 S.E.2d 634 (2007).

A jury sent a question to the trial court, but before it could respond, the jury reached a verdict. The defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for not demanding that the jury be polled; moreover, the defendant failed to show it was reasonably probable that had the jury been polled, a problem with the verdict would have become apparent. Soloman v. State, 294 Ga. App. 520, 669 S.E.2d 430 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to conduct a poll of the jury because the defendant cited no authority to support the position that a poll of the jury was required under the circumstances to provide effective representation. Bonner v. State, 308 Ga. App. 827, 709 S.E.2d 358 (2011).

Counsel's use of peremptory strike after juror removed for cause. — Defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel after defendant's attorney used a peremptory strike to strike a juror who had already been stricken for cause; defendant was prejudiced by the unnecessary waste of a peremptory strike, and the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial was improper. Fortson v. State, 277 Ga. 164, 587 S.E.2d 39 (2003).

Failure to request voir dire transcription. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failure to request that voir dire be transcribed; the defendant argued that a juror made a misrepresentation during voir dire that the juror did not know the defendant even though the defendant had served prison time with the juror's son, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in accepting the juror's testimony that the juror did not know the defendant or have any bias against the defendant. Robinson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 76, 635 S.E.2d 380 (2006).

Because convictions did not merge, trial counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to the trial court's failure to merge them. Smashum v. State, 293 Ga. App. 41, 666 S.E.2d 549 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 952 (Ga. 2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to have voir dire taken down by a court reporter because the defendant did not show prejudice since the defendant failed to establish that a Batson violation, or any other irregularity, occurred and the record revealed no dispute at trial about the questioning and responses with respect to a juror; trial counsel testified that even though voir dire was not officially recorded, the co-counsel's primary duty was to take notes throughout trial, including voir dire, and that all the notes and other legal work by defense counsel on the case were turned over to the appellate counsel. Hunt v. State, 288 Ga. 794, 708 S.E.2d 357 (2011).

Failure to provide voir dire transcript. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the state's explanations for striking jurors, to move to suppress evidence obtained from a search after the armed robbery of a theater, to move to strike certain testimony, and by waiving the defendant's right to a unanimous verdict because the defendant failed to provide a transcript of the voir dire conference. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 41, 625 S.E.2d 411 (2005).

Failure to ask that closing argument be recorded. — Because the jury was informed of a stipulation and were read the contents of the victim's post-mortem toxicology reports, the trial court properly limited defense counsel's closing arguments; defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to ask that closing argument be reported or for failing to request a jury charge on manslaughter, since defendant claimed that the shooting was accidental. Williams v. State, 279 Ga. 600, 619 S.E.2d 649 (2005).

In view of the trial court's curative instruction and the evidence against the defendant, no reasonable probability existed that the outcome of the defendant's case would have been different had trial counsel requested that the jury be excused before counsel moved for a mistrial. Dixon v. State, 285 Ga. App. 211, 645 S.E.2d 692 (2007).

Failure to challenge admission of testimony. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge the admission of testimony regarding the victim's dying declaration because the statement satisfied the requirements for admission of a dying declaration under former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-6 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-8-804); the defendant identified no valid basis for objection. Mathis v. State, 291 Ga. 268, 728 S.E.2d 661 (2012).

Failure to object to further jury deliberations. — Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to object to the trial court's ordering the jury back into deliberations when the jury could not come to a verdict on the charged offense or the lesser-included offense; an objection would have been meritless, as the jury had not yet come to a decision on the count at issue, thus there had been no acquittal. Giacini v. State, 281 Ga. App. 426, 636 S.E.2d 145 (2006).

Failure to object to communication with jury on unanimous decision issue. — When a trial judge, upon learning of a jury's question during deliberations as to whether its verdict had to be unanimous, allowed the bailiff to communicate an answer to the question directly to the jury outside the presence of defendant, counsel, the prosecutor, the judge, or a court reporter, before telling the prosecutor or defense counsel of the court's intentions, and defense counsel did not raise an objection or request that the matter be placed on the record, it could not be found that defendant was not prejudiced. Lindsey v. State, 277 Ga. App. 18, 625 S.E.2d 431 (2005).

Jury instructions impacting ineffectiveness argument. — Despite the various ineffective assistance of counsel claims involving a number of evidentiary issues and the jury instructions issued by the trial court, because the defendant failed to show that the objections made or not made by trial counsel prejudiced the defense, or that the instructions given were not in and of themselves deficient or correct statements of the law, the claims lacked merit. Goldey v. State, 289 Ga. App. 198, 656 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

In a prosecution against the defendant on two counts of child molestation, because trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to request specific jury charge addressing alleged improper bolstering testimony, present any expert testimony which was not helpful to the defense, and elicit available favorable evidence and impeach the victim's testimony, the defendant's convictions of related offenses were upheld on appeal; thus, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial on grounds that trial counsel was ineffective. Rouse v. State, 290 Ga. App. 740, 660 S.E.2d 476 (2008).

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on a claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to request an adverse inference instruction when the defendant failed to return to the courtroom after the first day of trial; appellate counsel declined to have trial counsel testify at the hearing on the motion for a new trial and without any other evidence to the contrary, trial counsel's decision regarding the instruction was presumed to be strategic. Spragg v. State, 292 Ga. App. 37, 663 S.E.2d 389 (2008).

Failure to obtain recusal of trial judge. — Because the absence of a Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 25.1 affidavit in support of defendant's motion to recuse the trial judge did not affect the court's consideration of the motion, and although defense counsel was unable to cite any law indicating that the judge should be disqualified after presiding over defendant's prior probation revocation proceedings, defendant did not demonstrate either deficient performance by counsel or prejudice in failing to secure the trial judge's recusal. Paul v. State, 296 Ga. App. 6, 673 S.E.2d 551 (2009).

Failure to request mistrial based on presence of SWAT team members. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a mistrial or curative instructions because the defendant did not show with reasonable probability that the presence of SWAT team members in the courtroom affected the outcome of the trial. Davis v. State, 309 Ga. App. 831, 711 S.E.2d 324 (2011).

Failure to request mistrial. — Transcript revealed that the state's inquiry into defendant's silence was neither manifestly intended to comment on defendant's failure to testify nor was it of such character that it would have prejudiced the jury, and because the trial court sustained the defense's objection to the questioning and gave a curative instruction to the jury, defendant could not show either that counsel's tactical decision not to move for a mistrial fell outside the wide range of reasonably effective assistance, or that defendant would have been granted a mistrial but for counsel's decision not to move for one. Allen v. State, 277 Ga. 502, 591 S.E.2d 784 (2004).

Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied as the trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in failing to move for a mistrial when the trial counsel learned of an improper jury-bailiff communication since the improper communication was placed on the record and remedial instructions were given before the jury's deliberations. Lawson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 870, 635 S.E.2d 259 (2006).

Defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV due to defense counsel's failure to request a mistrial when a police officer testified that the officer believed that the victim in the child molestation case was telling the truth; while the witness was prohibited under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-80 from bolstering the victim's testimony, it was not clear that the trial court would have granted a mistrial had the defendant requested one, as the defense counsel had objected to the statement and the trial court had issued a curative instruction. Goldstein v. State, 283 Ga. App. 1, 640 S.E.2d 599 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0623, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 338 (Ga. 2007).

Because trial counsel's failure to move for a mistrial could have been a strategic decision, and because the defendant did not question trial counsel concerning this decision, the defendant failed to show that this failure amounted to deficient performance. Vonhagel v. State, 287 Ga. App. 507, 651 S.E.2d 793 (2007).

As there was no showing that a juror heard anything improper during a bench conference, the trial court did not err in not sua sponte declaring a mistrial. Defense counsel was not ineffective for not moving for a mistrial or removal of the juror as such motion would have been denied. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 304, 667 S.E.2d 65 (2008).

Trial court did not err in finding that the defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for a mistrial or object to the state proceeding against the defendant on a different indictment in the midst of trial because any error in failing to try the defendant upon a "perfect" indictment was manifestly harmless when after the trial court severed an armed robbery charge from one of the indictments, the charges were identical in the two indictments, and the defendant did not show that the defendant suffered any prejudice from the state's mistake or by proceeding under the older indictment; the trial court's instruction to the jury regarding the mistake dealt with trial counsel's concern that the jury would think the defendant had two pending indictments, and the instruction was sufficient to cure any error. Smith v. State, 302 Ga. App. 222, 690 S.E.2d 867 (2010).

Because defendant's failure to renew motions for a mistrial after declining a curative instruction waived the issue on appeal, and because the outcome of the trial would not have been different if trial counsel had renewed the motions, defendant was not prejudiced by counsel's failure to do so. Johnson v. State, 305 Ga. App. 853, 700 S.E.2d 735 (2010).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that the defendant was deprived of effective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to seek a mistrial when the prosecutor elicited certain testimony from the police detective who investigated the case and procured the photographic lineup because the defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that an objection or motion for mistrial related to the detective's testimony would have changed the outcome of the defendant's trial; the robbed teller made an in-court identification of the defendant as the perpetrator, and the jurors were shown video footage of the robber committing the crime as well as still photographs of the robber's face. Ware v. State, 307 Ga. App. 782, 706 S.E.2d 143 (2011).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to renew a motion for mistrial after the trial court gave a curative instruction because the defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice; trial counsel had twice moved for a mistrial, which the trial court denied, and the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in giving the curative instruction, which preserved the defendant's right to a fair trial. Sanders v. State, 290 Ga. 445, 721 S.E.2d 834 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a mistrial after learning of improper conduct between two jurors and a spectator at the trial because the communication at issue did not involve extrajudicial information, a discussion of the facts or legal issues in the case, or improper conduct by the jurors themselves and, thus, the defendant suffered no prejudice. Causey v. State, 319 Ga. App. 841, 738 S.E.2d 672 (2013).

Trial counsel's decision not to move for a mistrial when the trial court mentioned the redacted count of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon did not amount to ineffective assistance because the decision was based on counsel's belief that the single mention would not have any influence on the jury and the fact that the trial court gave an adequate curative instruction. Vanstavern v. State, 293 Ga. 123, 744 S.E.2d 42 (2013).

Failure to file motion for directed verdict. — Defendant's contention that the defendant did not receive effective assistance of counsel because counsel made no motion for a directed verdict of acquittal based on insufficiency of the evidence is without merit. Galloway v. State, 165 Ga. App. 536, 301 S.E.2d 894 (1983).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to file a motion for directed verdict based upon the alleged fatal variance between the indictment and the proof at trial; such a motion would have been meritless, as the variance was found to be immaterial because the indictment still gave the defendant adequate notice of the charge alleged. Fields v. State, 281 Ga. App. 733, 637 S.E.2d 136 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to move for a directed verdict on malice and felony murder charges because the evidence was sufficient to authorize a conviction on malice murder, and a motion for directed verdict would have been fruitless. Kendrick v. State, 287 Ga. 676, 699 S.E.2d 302 (2010).

Trial court erred by denying the defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that trial counsel was ineffective by failing to move for a directed verdict as to a count of the indictment alleging that the defendant operated a motor vehicle as a habitual violator without a valid driver's license because the state failed to prove the charge alleged in that count; because the trial court would have been required to grant a motion for directed verdict, trial counsel was ineffective by failing to make such a motion. Murray v. State, 315 Ga. App. 653, 727 S.E.2d 267 (2012).

Because the evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's convictions and to establish venue, there was no merit to the defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a directed verdict of acquittal on those issues. Bearden v. State, 316 Ga. App. 721, 728 S.E.2d 874 (2012).

Failure of counsel to testify at motion for new trial. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel as defendant did not show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel, especially since the defendant's trial counsel did not testify at the defendant's motion for a new trial and, thus, the defendant did not overcome the presumption that the defendant's trial counsel's conduct fell within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance. Gardner v. State, 261 Ga. App. 188, 582 S.E.2d 167 (2003).

Since defendant's trial attorneys did not testify at the new trial hearing, and it was impossible for the trial court to determine their reasons for the objections made at trial, defendant failed to carry defendant's burden that defense counsel were ineffective in failing to object to rap lyrics admitted at trial as improper character evidence, but objected instead on the basis of relevancy. Holmes v. State, 271 Ga. App. 122, 608 S.E.2d 726 (2004).

In a trial for kidnapping and false imprisonment, although the defendant claimed defense counsel was ineffective for failing to move for a mistrial, counsel did not testify at the hearing on the motion for new trial; thus, the defendant failed to make an affirmative showing that counsel's alleged deficiencies were not trial strategy. Watson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 174, 620 S.E.2d 176 (2005).

Failure to explain recidivist statute. — Defendant's argument, that defense counsel was ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, for failure to explain the recidivist statute to defendant, failed; although the defendant and defense counsel gave conflicting testimony on this issue, the trial court was permitted to accept the testimony of counsel, who testified that counsel had discussed recidivist punishment with the defendant and relayed the prosecution's plea offers to the defendant. Copeland v. State, 281 Ga. App. 11, 635 S.E.2d 283 (2006).

Failure to seek first offender treatment. — Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied as trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance in failing to seek first offender treatment since defendant's sweeping allegations of ineffective assistance with only the barest of reference to the record were insufficient to establish an ineffectiveness claim; further, the trial counsel did not believe that the defendant would be eligible for such treatment given the defendant's prior misdemeanor offenses and the defendant pointed to no evidence suggesting that the defendant would have received first offender status had it been requested. Lawson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 870, 635 S.E.2d 259 (2006).

Failure to pursue insanity defense.

— Defendant was not erroneously denied a new trial on grounds that trial counsel was ineffective, as the evidence, via trial counsel's testimony, showed that: (1) counsel, after gathering the defendant's medical history and interviewing the defendant's medical provider, did not believe the defendant was insane; and (2) counsel, after consulting with the defendant and gaining an approval, made a strategic decision not to pursue a mental health defense, opting instead to pursue a claim of self-defense. Radford v. State, 281 Ga. 303, 637 S.E.2d 712 (2006).

Failure to request specific instruction on insanity. — Defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed because there was no error in counsel's failure to request a more specific instruction on insanity as the instruction given specially explained that the defendant had the burden of proving insanity by a preponderance of the evidence and properly defined that burden of proof. Simon v. State, 321 Ga. App. 1, 740 S.E.2d 819 (2013).

Inadequate presentation of mitigation case during sentencing. — Vacation of a death sentence was warranted since the defendant's trial counsel was deficient in the conduct of the sentencing phase due to inadequate investigation and presentation of possible mitigation evidence. Turpin v. Christenson, 269 Ga. 226, 497 S.E.2d 216 (1998), cert. denied, 525

Habeas court's order denying the petitioner's claim that the petitioner was entitled to a new sentencing trial was reversed and the petitioner's death sentence was vacated because trial counsel performed deficiently by failing to sufficiently develop mitigating evidence from non-experts, and there was a reasonable probability that the jury would have reached a different outcome in the sentencing phase of the petitioner's trial if the additional evidence habeas counsel obtained had been presented at trial; trial counsel failed to fully investigate whether the petitioner had suffered one or more brain injuries prior to the petitioner's crimes, and unduly limiting counsel's interviews of the petitioner's family and friends to an unreasonably narrow range of persons, and there was additional evidence from non-experts concerning the petitioner's traumatic childhood and the petitioner's change in behavior and apparent mental distress following two head injuries. Perkins v. Hall, 288 Ga. 810, 708 S.E.2d 335 (2011).

Standard for effective counsel on appeal. — To prevail on a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel, a defendant must show: (1) that counsel's performance was deficient; and (2) that the deficiency prejudiced the defense. The trial judge, who oversaw the trial and heard the evidence presented at the hearing on the motion for new trial, makes the findings on whether the performance was deficient and whether it prejudiced the defendant, and an appellate court does not disturb such findings unless they are clearly erroneous. Horne v. State, 260 Ga. App. 640, 580 S.E.2d 644 (2003).

Failure to file an appeal. — Defendant could not obtain a reversal of a rape conviction due to trial counsel's ineffective assistance in failing to file an appeal as defendant was granted the right to file an out-of-time appeal. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for not timely pursuing a new trial motion or an appeal, as the trial counsel advised the defendant to raise ineffective assistance on appeal and to obtain new counsel to pursue that claim, and the trial court appointed new counsel for the defendant for the sole purpose of airing the issue both in the trial court and on appeal. Moore v. State, 279 Ga. App. 105, 630 S.E.2d 557 (2006).

Given that the defendant had no right to file a direct appeal from a guilty plea that was evident from the record, a motion for an out-of-time appeal, which alleged ineffective assistance of counsel, was properly denied, and counsel could not be deemed ineffective for failing to inform the defendant of the right to appeal; thus, the defendant's only remedy was by habeas corpus. Barlow v. State, 282 Ga. 232, 647 S.E.2d 46 (2007).

A trial court abused the court's discretion in ruling the court lacked jurisdiction to consider an inmate's motion for an out-of-time appeal because the motion was based on a claim that the inmate's right to a direct appeal was denied due to ineffective assistance of counsel, and on that claim, the trial court was required to inquire into the facts to determine responsibility for the failure to pursue a timely appeal. Duncan v. State, 291 Ga. App. 580, 662 S.E.2d 337 (2008).

Meritless enumerations of error. — Because defendant's enumerations of error were meritless, they provided no basis for reversal of defendant's convictions under the guise of ineffective assistance of counsel. Nelson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 92, 625 S.E.2d 465 (2005).

Because the defendant failed to cite any legal authority requiring trial counsel, in order to be effective, to poll the jury, this claim of ineffective assistance of counsel lacked merit. Vonhagel v. State, 287 Ga. App. 507, 651 S.E.2d 793 (2007).

Refusal to withdraw as trial counsel after defendant filed bar complaint. — In the defendant's convictions for armed robbery, kidnapping, and aggravated assault in connection with robbery of a fast food restaurant, the defendant failed to show trial counsel performed deficiently by failing to withdraw as counsel despite existence of conflict of interest created by the defendant having filed a bar complaint against trial counsel; evidence supported the trial court's determination that the defendant failed to carry the burden of proving that trial counsel's refusal to withdraw constituted ineffective assistance. Holsey v. State, 291 Ga. App. 216, 661 S.E.2d 621 (2008).

Ineffectiveness of post conviction counsel. — Trial court erred in denying the petitioner's application for habeas corpus relief as the petitioner's appellate counsel was ineffective for failing to contend on appeal that the state failed to establish the chain of custody of the substance identified at trial as cocaine as any competent attorney would have raised that issue on appeal, the appellate attorney provided deficient representation in failing to do so, and the error was prejudicial to the petitioner because the error, if raised, would have led to a different outcome on appeal. Phillips v. Williams, 276 Ga. 691, 583 S.E.2d 4 (2003).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was waived as defendant's original post-conviction counsel moved for a new trial, but did not raise an ineffective assistance of trial counsel claim; defendant's claim that the original post-conviction counsel was deficient in failing to raise an ineffective assistance claim below had to be addressed in a habeas corpus proceeding. Mullins v. State, 267 Ga. App. 393, 599 S.E.2d 340 (2004).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed as any shortcoming of counsel appointed to represent defendant at defendant's ineffective assistance of trial counsel hearing was due to defendant's failure to cooperate with appointed counsel. Spear v. State, 271 Ga. App. 845, 610 S.E.2d 642 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to trial counsel's failure to raise the issue of ineffective assistance of counsel as the first appellate counsel raised the issue in the amended motion for new trial. Butler v. State, 277 Ga. App. 57, 625 S.E.2d 458 (2005).

Because the state failed to prove venue beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant's appellate counsel provided professionally deficient performance in failing to raise the meritorious issue on appeal, and the defendant was prejudiced thereby; the defendant was convicted in Toombs County of selling cocaine to an informant, and evidence that the drugs sales occurred somewhere in Vidalia, Georgia, was insufficient to establish that the crimes occurred in Toombs County because the habeas court properly took judicial notice that Vidalia was located in two different counties, Toombs and Montgomery. Thompson v. Brown, 288 Ga. 855, 708 S.E.2d 270 (2011).

Habeas court erred in granting the petitioner's application for habeas corpus relief because the petitioner could not show that but for the errors of appellate counsel, the outcome of the appeal would have been different in reasonable probability; irrespective of any contention that there was ineffective assistance, the petitioner remained a fugitive from justice, and the petitioner's appeal would have been dismissed. Tompkins v. Hall, 291 Ga. 224, 728 S.E.2d 621 (2012).

Failure to dispute the amount of restitution ordered as a condition of probation may have been an error, but that of itself would not constitute ineffective assistance. Johnston v. State, 165 Ga. App. 792, 302 S.E.2d 708 (1983).

Failure to appear at arraignment. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to appear at the arraignment because the defendant did not assert any harm arising from counsel's failure to appear other than the loss of the right to a hearing on a motion to suppress; the defendant could not show that the motion to suppress had any likelihood of success. Coney v. State, 316 Ga. App. 303, 728 S.E.2d 899 (2012).

Failure to show deficiencies were prejudicial. — Despite the defendant's twenty-one ineffective assistance of counsel claims, the Supreme Court of Georgia analyzed only five of these claims, and found that the defendant failed to show prejudice due to counsel's failure to ask for a continuance, and that the remaining four claims addressed lacked merit. Moreover, the court declined to analyze the deficient performance prong of the defendant's remaining claims of ineffectiveness, as the defendant could not show how any of those deficiencies were prejudicial. Ruffin v. State, 283 Ga. 87, 656 S.E.2d 140 (2008).

Use of hearsay as impacting ineffective counsel claim. — Because the defendant failed to show by the record that the trial court's limited consideration of the alleged hearsay statements at issue adversely affected the sentence imposed, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective by failing to object to the consideration of that evidence. Geyer v. State, 289 Ga. App. 492, 657 S.E.2d 878 (2008).

Ineffective assistance not shown by failure to view videotape of witness.

— Defendant failed to establish that trial counsel provided ineffective assistance based on counsel failing to view before trial a videotaped police interview with one of the state's witnesses that, according to the defendant, revealed information about what benefits the witness expected from police, and counsel could have used the interview to impeach the witness's credibility. In light of the evidence of the defendant's guilt, and the fact that the witness's trial testimony merely corroborated another witness's trial testimony, it was unlikely that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel viewed the interview before trial. English v. State, 290 Ga. App. 378, 659 S.E.2d 783 (2008).

Lack of preparation by counsel not credible. — The court rejected a claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel when the trial court found the defendant's claims regarding trial counsel's lack of preparation not to be credible, and at trial the defendant repeatedly stated that the defendant was satisfied with the defendant's representation. Finnan v. State, 291 Ga. App. 486, 662 S.E.2d 269 (2008).

Adequate investigation by counsel.

— Based on the testimony given at the hearing on a defendant's motion for new trial, the trial court was authorized to find that defense counsel adequately investigated the case and consulted with the defendant about the trial. An assistant attorney testified to meeting with the defendant at least five or six times; the chief public defender, who handled the trial, testified to meeting with the defendant more than once and that the defendant was informed about what the attorneys were doing; and the defendant testified that the attorneys had gone over the case with the defendant and discussed the defendant's concerns. Gary v. State, 291 Ga. App. 757, 662 S.E.2d 742 (2008).

Failure of counsel to seek a mistrial. — Counsel for a defendant was not shown to have been ineffective in the defendant's criminal trial when counsel failed to seek a mistrial upon the admission of testimony that the defendant had committed prior sexual abuse on a family member as the jury was admonished to ignore the remark and the jury was given a curative instruction, and counsel chose not to seek a mistrial as a matter of trial strategy. Carroll v. State, 292 Ga. App. 795, 665 S.E.2d 883 (2008).

Failure to inform of repealed section. — Denial of the defendant's motion to withdraw a guilty plea pursuant to Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 33.12(A) was proper because the defendant failed to establish that but for defense counsel's failure to inform the defendant of the repeal of former O.C.G.A. § 17-10-6, which allowed for a sentence review, the defendant would have insisted on a trial; further, the defendant was aware of the maximum sentence, and the availability of a sentence review did not alter the possibility that the defendant could have potentially been required to serve up to 66 years in prison. The record supported a finding that the defendant entered the plea knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily. Vaughn v. State, 298 Ga. App. 669, 680 S.E.2d 680 (2009).

Failure to file appeal as ineffective assistance. — Because there was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault with intent to rape under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), counsel's failure to file an appeal could not be deemed ineffectiveness; accordingly, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant's motion for an out-of-time appeal. Clark v. State, 299 Ga. App. 558, 683 S.E.2d 93 (2009).

Reasonable defense strategy. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial after the defendant was convicted of statutory rape because the defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel; the trial court's determination that the defendant's trial counsel articulated a reasonable defense strategy was not clearly erroneous because counsel made a strategic decision that a specific line of investigation was unnecessary since the expected finding from the investigation would not have been helpful to the defense employed, and at trial, counsel presented evidence consistent with the defense strategy. Burce v. State, 299 Ga. App. 849, 683 S.E.2d 901 (2009).

Counsel decision on calling witness not ineffective. — Trial counsel's performance was not deficient because trial counsel testified that counsel received and reviewed discovery material provided by the district attorney and viewed the crime scenes, that counsel's investigator interviewed witnesses who gave statements to police, that counsel met with the defendant approximately six times in the months before trial, and that counsel ascertained that family members were willing to be alibi witnesses for the defendant, but counsel elected not to have the family members testify since the defendant acknowledged being at the crime scenes. Haynes v. State, 287 Ga. 202, 695 S.E.2d 219 (2010).

Ineffectiveness claim founded on prosecutor's opening statement. — Defendant could not succeed on defendant's ineffective assistance claim predicated upon the prosecutor's opening statement because the defendant did not cross-examine the prosecutor at the hearing on the defendant's motion for a new trial or otherwise present any evidence reflecting on what the prosecutor anticipated the evidence would show prior to trial, and, therefore, the defendant could not establish that the prosecutor lacked a good faith basis for the prosecutor's assertions made during the prosecutor's opening statement; the trial court specifically instructed the jury that opening statements were not to be considered as evidence. Boggs v. State, 304 Ga. App. 698, 697 S.E.2d 843 (2010).

No impermissible conflict of interest impacting effectiveness. — Defendant's trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance because none of the alleged failures on the part of trial counsel, who was the chief assistant public defender with more than 20 years of criminal experience and 100 jury trials, were so serious as to deprive the defendant of a fair trial, a trial whose result was reliable; even if it could be said that trial counsel was deficient in counsel's performance, the defendant failed to show that, but for counsel's unprofessional errors, there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. Gresham v. State, 289 Ga. 103, 709 S.E.2d 780 (2011).

No ineffectiveness in stipulating to admission of statement. — Defendant failed to carry the defendant's burden of showing that trial counsel was ineffective for stipulating to the admissibility of a statement because the defendant failed to make a strong showing that the defendant's statement would have been suppressed had counsel made the motion. Arellano-Campos v. State, 307 Ga. App. 561, 705 S.E.2d 323 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C0801, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 484 (Ga. 2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to obtain criminal histories of the state's witnesses prior to trial because there was no showing that any state witness had such a history to discovery; nor was trial counsel found to be ineffective for failing to object when the victim sat outside the courtroom with an assistant district attorney and a bailiff because there was no indication that the victim was coached. Ashmid v. State, 316 Ga. App. 550, 730 S.E.2d 37 (2012).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the testimony of the fire chief and the victim's boyfriend about what they overheard on speaker phone on the way to the hotel after the fire, because the testimony was admissible and, thus, could not support such a claim. Crawford v. State, 318 Ga. App. 270, 732 S.E.2d 794 (2012).

C. Use of Experts

Expert on defendant's mental health. — Because the defendant failed to offer proof at a motion for a new trial hearing that the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective in that counsel failed to elicit sufficient testimony from an expert at a hearing about the defendant's mental abilities and condition when the defendant made a statement to the police, the defendant failed to demonstrate prejudice and the defendant's claim of ineffective assistance was properly denied. Watkins v. State, 289 Ga. 359, 711 S.E.2d 655 (2011).

Expert on police interrogation tactics. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to retain an expert with greater expertise regarding police interrogation tactics and the possibility of false confessions because the question of whether someone might be persuaded to give a false confession through persuasive interrogation techniques was "not beyond the ken of the average juror," and, therefore, the absence of expert testimony on that question would not be prejudicial. Humphrey v. Riley, 291 Ga. 534, 731 S.E.2d 740 (2012).

Use of medical experts. — Based on trial counsel's testimony regarding pre-trial consultations with a trauma nurse and a physician, both of whom discounted the suggested alternative explanation for the victim's initial brain injury, trial counsel's strategic decision not to continue hunting for a defense expert, but instead to challenge the state's experts on cross-examination, was not unreasonable and did not constitute deficient performance. Brown v. State, 292 Ga. 454, 738 S.E.2d 591 (2013).

Failure to present medical or psychological testimony in child molestation case. — Defense counsel was ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to present expert medical or psychological testimony in a child molestation case in which the prosecution had presented four experts including a psychologist and a pediatrician; trial counsel was aware of the substance of the testimony of the state's experts, testimony from credible, objective scientists was available to trial counsel to completely refute the state's experts' opinions and to substantially undermine the state's case, and the state's evidence, other than opinions from their experts, was far from overwhelming. Goldstein v. State, 283 Ga. App. 1, 640 S.E.2d 599 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0623, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 338 (Ga. 2007).

Failure to call psychologist. — Even if trial counsel were ineffective in not calling a psychologist to testify for the defense that the defendant was incompetent to stand trial and that the defendant was insane at the time of the crime under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-3-2 and 16-3-3, the defense expert's testimony would not have changed the outcome; the defense expert's opinion was contradicted by a second expert, whose opinion was based on an evaluation over an extended period of time as opposed to the defense expert's evaluation of less than one day, and by testimony of the defendant and trial counsel that the defendant understood the basis of the charges and the nature of the proceedings and assisted in preparing the defense. Wallin v. State, 285 Ga. App. 377, 646 S.E.2d 484 (2007).

Expert on DNA analysis. — Defendant's argument that counsel was ineffective for not calling a DNA expert was meritless. The defendant did not produce an expert to testify that the state's DNA evidence was defective, and unlike the case relied upon by the defendant, the DNA evidence was not the sole link between the defendant and the crimes. Williams v. State, 284 Ga. 849, 672 S.E.2d 619 (2009).

Because the defense counsel's rationale for not calling a DNA expert witness was not impeached, and counsel's decisions with regard to the choice of what objections to make, defenses to raise, and theories to advance at trial amounted to strategic decisions, the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claims lacked merit; moreover, even if the appeals court assumed for the sake of argument that trial counsel was somehow deficient at trial, the defendant failed to show that but for such deficiency, a reasonable likelihood that the outcome of the trial would have been different. Bharadia v. State, 282 Ga. App. 556, 639 S.E.2d 545 (2006), cert.

denied, No. S07C0522, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2007).

Defendant did not demonstrate prejudice from trial counsel's failure to call an expert witness to testify on DNA analysis; the defendant failed to introduce any evidence that the defendant could have called an expert witness who would have testified that the crime lab's testing results were unreliable and counsel did employ an expert whose report said that the expert had nothing to add to the lab's report. Ross v. State, 231 Ga. App. 793, 499 S.E.2d 642 (1998).

Use of expert on mental capacity of victim. — In a rape and aggravated sodomy case, the trial court properly rejected the defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for not introducing evidence on the adult victim's mental capacity to consent. Because the defendant failed to proffer the testimony of an uncalled witness, the defendant could not prove that there was a reasonable probability that the trial would have ended differently; furthermore, counsel gave a reasonable explanation for not introducing expert testimony in that counsel believed that the victim might have the capacity to consent and that counsel believed that expert testimony on the issue would not sway the jury. Ravon v. State, 297 Ga. App. 643, 678 S.E.2d 107 (2009).

Failure to solicit funds for expert witness. — Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim failed since, inter alia, trial counsel's failure to file a motion to suppress eyewitness identification testimony was not erroneous since the testimony of the witnesses established that the in-court identifications had an independent origin apart from any allegedly suggestive pretrial procedures, and counsel's failure to seek funds to retain an expert for the purpose of providing expert testimony on the reliability of eyewitness identifications did not amount to ineffective assistance since the defendant failed to show that the outcome would have been different had trial counsel sought such funds. Wright v. State, 265 Ga. App. 855, 595 S.E.2d 664 (2004), overruled on other grounds, Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009).

A defendant failed to show that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel as a result of defense counsel failing to timely request funds for expert assistance so that the defendant could have a firearms expert testify on the defendant's behalf at trial as there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different, even if defense counsel was deficient in failing to file a timely motion for funds for expert assistance. The defendant was unable to show that the trial court would have granted the motion even if it had been timely and there was no evidence in the record that the state's medical examiner and ballistics expert were biased or incompetent, and the state's case did not rest entirely on the experts' testimony, but rather was also established by the defendant's own admissions. Fincher v. State, 289 Ga. App. 64, 656 S.E.2d 216 (2007).

Defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective for failing to seek funds to hire an expert witness failed because the defendant did not show that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel requested funds and called such a witness. The defendant did not proffer expert testimony at the hearing on the defendant's motion for new trial and thus did not show prejudice. White v. State, 293 Ga. App. 241, 666 S.E.2d 618 (2008).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to employ, or request funds from the trial court to employ, an expert witness to challenge an officer's testimony that the officer smelled the odor of raw marijuana emanating from the defendant's truck because the defendant was unable to overcome the presumption that counsel made a strategic decision regarding the issue that fell within the broad range of reasonable professional conduct; the defendant did not call trial counsel to testify at the hearing on the motion for new trial so that counsel could explain why counsel did not attempt to employ an expert to challenge the officer's testimony. Bass v. State, 309 Ga. App. 601, 710 S.E.2d 818 (2011).

Failure to use expert on eyewitness identification.

— Defendant's trial counsel testified that counsel chose not to pursue evidence of an expert in eyewitness identification because counsel feared that doing so would have prompted the state to do the same, which counsel believed ultimately would have harmed the defense; trial counsel's tactical decision that the risks of introducing such expert evidence outweighed its potential benefits did not constitute deficient performance. Breland v. State, 287 Ga. App. 83, 651 S.E.2d 439 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 759 (Ga. 2007).

Failure to present expert witness.

— Defendant failed to prove that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to present expert witnesses and obtain additional DNA evidence as the defendant failed to make a proffer of any favorable evidence that could have been elicited if an expert witness had been called. Wynn v. State, 322 Ga. App. 66, 744 S.E.2d 64 (2013).

Failure to call expert witness.

— Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to call an expert witness and other allegedly helpful witnesses as defendant failed to proffer the testimony of the witnesses. Stevenson v. State, 272 Ga. App. 335, 612 S.E.2d 521 (2005).

Questioning of ballistics expert.

— Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to prepare to cross examine a ballistics expert the state called because counsel testified that counsel had reviewed the ballistics evidence; therefore, counsel was prepared to question a ballistics expert, regardless of the expert's identity and did indeed cross-examine the expert the state called. Funes v. State, 289 Ga. 793, 716 S.E.2d 183 (2011).

Physicians. — Counsel's failure, in prosecution for rape, to subpoena the physician who circumcised the defendant and to have in court a picture of the defendant's penis taken after his arrest was not sufficient to establish negligence or unfaithfulness on the part of counsel. Jones v. Balkcom, 210 Ga. 262, 79 S.E.2d 1 (1953), cert. denied, 347 U.S. 956, 74 S. Ct. 682, 98 L. Ed. 1101 (1954).

Use of expert in murder trial.

— When, in a murder trial, defense counsel did not secure an expert witness to counter the state's theory that the defendant shot the victim in the head while subduing the victim by sitting on the victim, this was not ineffective assistance of counsel as this amounted to reasonable trial tactics or strategy. Moore v. State, 279 Ga. 45, 609 S.E.2d 340 (2005).

Failure to use drug expert. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to hire an expert to testify to the detrimental effects of cocaine use in a case in which the defendant was charged with violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-43 after swearing in an affidavit that the victim was suicidal and was using crack cocaine; the relevant consideration was what the defendant knew or could show concerning the victim's mental state at the time the defendant had the victim confined, because the defendant had not seen the victim for several months and could not have observed the victim on the date or during the time frame stated in the affidavit. Washington v. State, 271 Ga. App. 764, 610 S.E.2d 692 (2005).

Expert on battered woman's syndrome and PTSD. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to present expert testimony that the defendant suffered from battered woman syndrome and post-traumatic stress disorder as the defendant did not admit to participating in the crimes; the defendant was not prejudiced by the failure to establish an evidentiary basis for a coercion defense. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Use of polygraph experts. — Because trial counsel's decision not to call a polygraph examiner to introduce evidence of the test result was a reasonable strategy and the defendant was not prejudiced thereby, the defendant failed to show that counsel was ineffective. Keown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 166, 620 S.E.2d 428 (2005).

Excluded experts. — When defense counsel did not provide the prosecutor with timely notice of defendant's expert witness or timely provide a copy of the witness's report, as required by O.C.G.A. §§ 17-16-4(b)(2), 17-16-7, and 17-16-8(a), and the witness was excluded, the defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel; while counsel was deficient, it was not shown that the defendant was prejudiced as another expert testified to essentially the same facts and conclusions as the excluded witness, and referred to the excluded witness's findings, so the excluded witness's testimony would have been cumulative, and it was not shown that the outcome of the defendant's trial would have differed had counsel's performance not been deficient. Mann v. State, 276 Ga. App. 720, 624 S.E.2d 208 (2005).

Use of nurse practitioner as expert. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to expert testimony from a nurse practitioner with respect to an opinion that the victim's version of sexual misconduct committed by the defendant was true, as the expert's testimony was largely predicated on the nurse's own physical examination of the victim and in part on hearsay in other reports, and such was not improper bolstering of the victim's testimony but instead was an expert opinion that the medical evidence supported the victim's story. Davenport v. State, 278 Ga. App. 16, 628 S.E.2d 120 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Expert in child sexual abuse syndrome. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel because trial counsel failed to call an expert witness regarding child sexual abuse syndrome as counsel explained that counsel did not employ an expert witness regarding child sexual abuse syndrome because, in counsel's opinion, it was inapplicable. Tadic v. State, 281 Ga. App. 58, 635 S.E.2d 356 (2006).

Use of psychologist. — As the jury could have found the defendant guilty after listening to the state's witnesses, a psychologist testimony regarding the defendant's competency did not influence the outcome of the trial; hence, defense counsel's failure to object to the psychologist raising the issue about the defendant's mental health was harmless, part of counsel's reasonable trial strategy, and did not amount to the ineffective assistance of counsel entitling the defendant to a new trial. Griffin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 249, 635 S.E.2d 853 (2006).

Use of licensed professional counselor. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 because defense counsel relied on the testimony of a licensed professional counselor to testify regarding the insanity defense relied upon by the defendant; while the defendant claimed that the defendant would have been able to convince the jury that the defendant was insane if defense counsel had sought the expertise of a licensed psychologist or psychiatrist, this argument failed, as an insanity defense did not require the expert testimony of a psychologist or psychiatrist, and the witness had conducted forensic evaluations, sometimes at the request of a court, more than 25 times, and the witness had been qualified as an expert in forensic counseling between eight and 10 times. Perez v. State, 281 Ga. 175, 637 S.E.2d 30 (2006).

Use of emergency room physician.

— Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim, which alleged counsel was ineffective in failing to call an expert witness to rebut testimony given by the emergency room physician who treated the victim's injuries and failing to request a lesser included offense jury instruction on the aggravated assault charge, lacked merit, as the defendant made no showing as to what the medical expert would have testified to, and failed to identify any lesser included offense on which counsel should have requested a jury instruction. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. App. 813, 637 S.E.2d 751 (2006).

Use of psychiatrist. — Defendant's stalking convictions were upheld on appeal, given that trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to present the testimony from a second psychiatrist regarding the defendant's mental condition, as the defendant failed to show how testimony from a second psychiatrist would have aided the defense, and a request for recharge alone did not prove that the jury was confused on the issue of the defendant's mental condition or that counsel had not provided them with sufficient evidence concerning it. Albert v. State, 283

Ga. App. 79, 640 S.E.2d 670 (2006).

Use of firearms expert. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, the defendant failed to establish that trial counsel's decision not to consult or hire an expert witness to support the defendant's defense of accident was deficient performance because trial counsel's testimony at the defendant's motion for a new trial set forth that trial counsel did not want to challenge the state's firearms expert on the issue of the force necessary to pull the trigger because the defendant had testified that the gun was in the waistband of the defendant's pants and it would not make sense to carry a weapon in that manner if the weapon discharged with little force. As a result, trial counsel's decision not to consult or hire an expert was reasonable, and matters of reasonable trial strategy and tactics did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Thomas v. State, 284 Ga. 647, 670 S.E.2d 421 (2008).

Use of blood splatter expert. — In a murder prosecution, defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to properly interview a blood spatter expert before calling the expert as a witness. The expert's discussions with counsel provided support for the defendant's claim that the shooting was accidental, but at trial, the expert's testimony differed from the information relayed to counsel over the phone, and defense counsel was surprised by the testimony, which aided the prosecution. Watkins v. State, 285 Ga. 355, 676 S.E.2d 196 (2009).

Failure to hire expert witness to testify on child victim's allegations.

— While the defendant argued that the defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for failing to hire an expert witness to testify regarding the child victims' allegations, the defendant failed to produce such an expert at the hearing on the motion for new trial, and the defendant did not proffer evidence showing how such an expert would have changed the outcome of the case; the defendant thus failed to establish the claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Sarratt v. State, 299 Ga. App.

568, 683 S.E.2d 10 (2009).

Failure to call doctor. — Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to subpoena a doctor and by failing to recognize that the doctor was a necessary witness for impeachment purpose because the defendant did not make the requisite showing of prejudice; the impeachment evidence purportedly contained in the doctor's medical report was cumulative of evidence that had already been placed before the jury, and the defendant did not allege or show that the doctor's testimony would have been beneficial to defendant's defense in any other respect. Bearfield v. State, 305 Ga. App. 37, 699 S.E.2d 363 (2010).

Failure to call expert on consensual sexual intercourse. — Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to use an expert witness regarding the issue of consensual intercourse because trial counsel testified that counsel did not believe an expert witness would have been helpful to the defense; the defendant failed to make a proffer of any favorable evidence that could have been elicited if an expert witness had been called. Ellis v. State, 316 Ga. App. 352, 729 S.E.2d 492 (2012).

Failure to hire defense reconstruction expert. — Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to have a defense reconstruction specialist testify, as the counsel considered whether another expert was needed, but believed that an officer provided the information needed to support the sole defense of misfortune or accident, i.e., that the victim was standing in the middle of the road and it was very dark. Corbett v. State, 277 Ga. App. 715, 627 S.E.2d 365 (2006).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on six counts of first degree vehicular homicide and other crimes, the defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel as defense counsel presented seven witnesses who testified that the defendant was not driving the vehicle at issue; the fact that certain photographs and blood test sampling were not presented into evidence and that there was a significant amount of other evidence that went to the defendant's defense that the defendant was not driving, it was a reasonable strategic decision not to hire an accident reconstruction expert. Davis v. State, 293 Ga. App. 799, 668 S.E.2d 290 (2008).

Failure to hire gun residue expert. — In an aggravated assault prosecution, as the defendant denied involvement in the shooting but told police the defendant's hands would contain gunshot residue because the defendant had handled a gun that day, the defendant was not prejudiced by counsel's failure to order an independent gunshot residue test, which in light of the defendant's statement, would have been expected to yield a positive result. Carlos v. State, 292 Ga. App. 419, 664 S.E.2d 808 (2008).

Failing to object to presence of interpreters. — With regard to two defendants' convictions for murder, the defendants failed to show that the defendants received ineffective assistance of counsel based on the defendants' respective trial counsel failing to object to the presence of two sign language interpreters in the jury room as the trial court had the two interpreters take an oath swearing that, during jury deliberations, the interpreters would merely interpret and not interject the interpreters' personal opinions, conclusions, or comments. The defendants failed to present a shred of evidence that the interpreters did anything other than comply fully with the oath taken and that trial counsel had any reasons to suspect the interpreters did otherwise. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 599, 669 S.E.2d 98 (2008).

Failure to object to expert testimony. — Trial counsel's failure to object to testimony by an expert witness for the state in an aggravated battery trial, arising from injuries to the defendant's infant son, was not ineffectiveness as the expert's statement that the case was one of a non-accidental head injury was admissible as to the ultimate issue because it was beyond the ken of the average layperson; further, as the failure to object was clearly part of trial counsel's trial strategy, there was no ineffectiveness. Lindo v. State, 278 Ga. App. 228, 628 S.E.2d 665 (2006).

Defendant did not establish ineffective assistance of counsel based on defense counsel's failing to object to an expert's testimony despite the fact that counsel allegedly did not receive or review the psychosexual report prepared by the expert; there was conflicting testimony as to whether counsel had received the report, and even if counsel did not receive the report, there was no reasonable probability that the state's production of the report would have brought about a different result. Brooks v. State, 286 Ga. App. 209, 648 S.E.2d 724 (2007).

Counsel's failure to object when a sheriff's investigator testified was not ineffective assistance of counsel as the investigator did not state the investigator's opinion as to the veracity of the victims or the defendant; the investigator testified that the victims' injuries, or lack thereof, were either consistent or inconsistent with the physical evidence or the victims' testimony. Thus, the investigator's testimony was not objectionable as impermissible bolstering. Gray v. State, 291 Ga. App. 573, 662 S.E.2d 339 (2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the testimony of the crime scene investigator that a partial latent print on a handgun could have been the defendant's even though the investigator had also testified that the prints were insufficient to make an identification because in light of the investigator's testimony as a whole, trial counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to object, and the outcome would not have been different had counsel done so; by stating that the fingerprints were insufficient to make a match with anyone, the investigator in essence informed the jury that the fingerprints could have been made by anyone, including the defendant. Odom v. State, 304 Ga. App. 615, 697 S.E.2d 289, cert. denied, No. S10C1801, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 927 (Ga. 2010).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance when counsel failed to object to the State of Georgia reviewing an expert's notes at a hearing because trial counsel gave a reasonable strategic explanation for that decision — that there was nothing detrimental to the defendant in the notes. In addition, the defendant did not demonstrate that, even if trial counsel had objected, there was a reasonable probability that the result of the hearing would have been different. Watkins v. State, 289 Ga. 359, 711 S.E.2d 655 (2011).

Testimony from medical examiner.

— The defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object when a medical examiner testified that the victim's death was a homicide and not an accident, and despite the defendant's contrary claim, the testimony was not an expression of the witness's opinion on the ultimate issue in the case, as: (1) counsel did not consider the testimony objectionable because there was no dispute that the "manner" of the victim's death was a homicide, and such tactic was not unreasonable; (2) the ultimate issue for the jury to determine was whether the defendant acted with malice, in response to the victim's provocation, or whether self-defense was an issue; (3) counsel testified that an objection would have been in order had the medical examiner invaded the province of the jury by expressing the opinion that the homicide was a murder; and (4) the defendant failed to show any prejudice by the testimony presented. Berry v. State, 282 Ga. 376, 651 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

Expert testimony on holster. — Defense counsel was ineffective for failing to object to an expert's inadmissible hearsay testimony that a holster was designed for a .45 caliber pistol, which was based on the expert's conversation with a representative of the holster's manufacturer. The testimony was prejudicial, as it was the only evidence connecting the defendant to a .45 pistol and it buttressed the testimony of the state's key witness, whose credibility was a serious issue. Cobb v. State, 283 Ga. 388, 658 S.E.2d 750 (2008).

Testimony of toxicologist. — Defendant failed to establish an ineffective assistance of counsel claim because, inter alia, the defendant's argument that the defendant did not have notice about the state's toxicologist testifying at trial was belied by the record; in the state's pretrial disclosure certificate, the state identified the toxicologist as a potential witness. Thus, an objection to the toxicologist testifying based on an alleged lack of notice would have been entirely without merit, and counsel's failure to object on this basis did not amount to ineffective assistance. Rector v. State, 285 Ga. 714, 681 S.E.2d 157, cert. denied, 558 U.S. 1081, 130 S. Ct. 807, 175 L. Ed. 2d 567 (2009).

Testimony from psychologist. — Defense counsel's failure to object to a psychologist's testimony that the psychologist's evaluation strongly suggested that the victim was sexually abused as alleged was ineffective assistance because, considered in context, the testimony improperly amounted to a factual conclusion regarding whether the child was sexually abused and whether the defendant was the abuser; the expert's opinion was not superfluous, but usurped the jury's authority. It was highly probable that the failure to object to this testimony contributed to the guilty verdict. Pointer v. State, 299 Ga. App. 249, 682 S.E.2d 362 (2009).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's motion for a new trial based on the ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to object to an expert's opinion testimony because the record did not support the defendant's argument that the expert's testimony was objectionable; the expert's testimony was limited to describing how the expert and doctors in the medical community generally performed genital examinations of female patients and did not touch on whether either the defendant or the victim was telling the truth on whether the defendant committed aggravated sexual battery, and the expert's testimony regarding the typical medical examination of a preadolescent girl's genitals was relevant to the issues raised by the defendant's defense. Lee v. State, 300 Ga. App. 214, 684 S.E.2d 348 (2009).

Expert on interviewing techniques. — Defendant did not show that trial counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel in a child molestation case as counsel did not hire experts on interviewing techniques or on reviewing medical records because: (1) while the testimony of an expert on interviewing techniques was proffered, it was not shown that there was any reasonable likelihood that such testimony would have resulted in a different verdict in defendant's trial; (2) counsel's decision not to hire such experts was one of reasonable trial strategy, as there was no indication the techniques used to interview the child victim were improper; and (3) no proffer of what an expert on reviewing medical records would have said was made. Weeks v. State, 270 Ga. App. 889, 608 S.E.2d 259 (2004).

Testimony from FBI expert. — Defendant unsuccessfully contended that defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to object to an FBI agent's testimony that the crime scene appeared to have been staged and that, based on this scene, burglary was an unlikely motive; furthermore, even if trial counsel had objected to this testimony, there was no reasonable probability that the outcome of defendant's trial would have been different, given the overwhelming nature of the evidence against the defendant. Bridges v. State, 286 Ga. 535, 690 S.E.2d 136 (2010).

Testimony from child therapist. — Defendant did not establish that defendant's trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to a child therapist's testimony on the ground that the testimony bolstered the child molestation victim's accusations because the therapist never expressly stated that the therapist believed the victim had been abused; although the defendant argued that the therapist's testimony was subject to that interpretation, the testimony the defendant cited did not address the ultimate issue before the jury or bolster the victim's credibility. O'Neal v. State, 304 Ga. App. 548, 696 S.E.2d 490 (2010).

Blood splatter expert. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to limit the trial testimony of the prosecution's blood spatter expert because counsel consulted with a qualified expert and counsel's consultations gave counsel no basis for objecting to the conclusion reached by the prosecution's expert as the expert consulted reached the same conclusion as the prosecution's expert. Yancey v. State, 292 Ga. 812, 740 S.E.2d 628 (2013).

Crime scene reconstructionist expert. — Trial counsel's failure to object to testimony from a crime scene investigator was not deficient because the opinion about the victim's physical positioning was within the bounds of a crime scene reconstructionist expert. Vanstavern v. State, 293 Ga. 123, 744 S.E.2d 42 (2013).

Failure to request admission of expert's report into evidence. — In a murder prosecution in which the defendant claimed self-defense, a forensic toxicologist testified for the defense that the victim's blood tested positive for a metabolite of cocaine and that paranoia and aggressiveness were side effects of cocaine use. The defendant's claim that counsel was ineffective for withdrawing a request to admit the toxicologist's lab report into evidence failed as the results of the report were read into the record, the toxicologist's testimony was more extensive than the report, and the defendant's assertion that admission of the report would have altered the outcome of the trial was mere speculation. Timmreck v. State, 285 Ga. 39, 673 S.E.2d 198 (2009).

D. Objections to Evidence

Failure to object to physical and hearsay evidence. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim, as even assuming that the defendant's counsel did not object to the admission of certain physical and hearsay evidence, the defendant failed to establish the existence of a reasonable probability that the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been different had defense counsel objected, especially since the evidence of the defendant's guilt was overwhelming. Ferguson v. State, 262 Ga. App. 28, 584 S.E.2d 618 (2003).

Trial court's determination that the defendant received effective assistance of counsel was not clearly erroneous since: (1) defense counsel failed to object to hearsay evidence that was cumulative, and therefore harmless, as the defendant failed to show that but for the alleged deficiency, the outcome of the proceedings would have been different; and (2) defense counsel failed to object to the defendant's spouse's testimony at the presentencing hearing, as there was no showing that the improper evidence prejudiced the defendant. Ingram v. State, 262 Ga. App. 304, 585 S.E.2d 211 (2003).

Other similar crimes evidence. — Inmate's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the introduction of evidence of other "similar crimes" since there was no reasonable probability that, had defense counsel objected and the "similar crime" issue been addressed on appeal, the trial court's ruling would have been reversed and a new trial ordered; thus, the inmate was not prejudiced by that failure. Walker v. Houston, 277 Ga. 470, 588 S.E.2d 715 (2003).

In a rape prosecution, defense counsel should have objected to the state's method of proving the defendant's prior transaction by introducing only a certified copy of the defendant's prior convictions, but the defendant did not show that the defendant was prejudiced by this error because it was harmless as there was such overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt that it was highly probable the error did not contribute to the verdict finding the defendant guilty. Cole v. State, 279 Ga. App. 219, 630 S.E.2d 817 (2006).

Failure to object to admission of prior convictions. — Defendant convicted of aggravated assault did not show that defense counsel provided ineffective assistance by: (1) failing to object to the admission of the defendant's prior convictions after the defendant placed the defendant's character in issue; (2) failing to object to the admission, at sentencing, of the defendant's prior convictions, which had been used at trial for impeachment, as the convictions were properly admitted; and (3) making a strategic decision not to request a jury instruction on the defense of accident, which the defendant did not raise until the defendant's own testimony, and any ineffective assistance arising from counsel's failure to investigate the defendant's prior guilty pleas used to enhance the defendant's sentence, which may have been involuntary, was rendered moot by the vacation of the defendant's sentence. Carswell v. State, 263 Ga. App. 833, 589 S.E.2d 605 (2003).

In a prosecution for selling marijuana and possessing marijuana with the intent to distribute, given that the state conceded that it failed to file notice regarding its intent to introduce a prior conviction as evidence in aggravation of punishment, the evidence was not introduced; as a result, defense counsel could not be found ineffective for failing to object to the introduction of the prior conviction. Allen v. State, 280 Ga. App. 663, 634 S.E.2d 831 (2006).

Defense counsel did not perform deficiently when defense counsel failed to make a meritless objection to the evidence of defendant's conviction for giving false information that was less than 10 years old as former O.C.G.A. § 24-9-84.1(a)(3) and (b) (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-6-609) authorized the admission of convictions 10 years old or less for crimes involving dishonesty or making a false statement, and the trial court did not have to weigh the probative value of the old conviction against the prejudicial effect since the conviction at issue was less than 10 years old. Habersham v. State, 289 Ga. App. 718, 658 S.E.2d 253 (2008).

Trial counsel's failure to object to evidence of a past conviction for theft as well as the defendant's guilty plea for drug charges did not amount to ineffective assistance because trial counsel testified that trial counsel allowed the admission of the drug offenses because counsel was pursuing a strategy of admitting those offenses and denying the molestation. Furthermore, trial counsel's failure to object to testimony about the existence of pornography in the defendant's bedroom did not support a claim of ineffective assistance because the pornography itself was not admitted and the pornography was sufficiently relevant. Worley v. State, 319 Ga. App. 799, 738 S.E.2d 641 (2013).

Failure to object to sufficiency of similar transaction notice. — Defendant's allegations of ineffective assistance of counsel lacked merit since the defendant failed to demonstrate that an objection to the sufficiency of a similar transaction notice would have been sustained, or that the defendant suffered harm as a result of counsel's inaction; further, defense counsel was not ineffective since the defendant failed to show that additional actions on counsel's part would have changed the trial court's fashioning of an alternative remedy to a continuance. Joiner v. State, 265 Ga. App. 395, 593 S.E.2d 936 (2004).

Objection to "always" carrying a gun. — Counsel's failure to object or move in limine to exclude testimony that the defendant "always" carried a gun, evidence that the defendant alleged constituted bad character evidence, did not amount to ineffective assistance since the evidence did not have the prejudicial effect attributed to it by the defendant. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. 853, 596 S.E.2d 597 (2004).

Objection to word "stories". — Counsel's failure to object when the state asked a police officer whether the "stories" the defendant told made sense in light of other evidence did not amount to ineffective assistance since the question and its negative response were not prejudicial to the defendant in light of the defendant's own testimony in which the defendant referred to the defendant's several different statements to the police as "stories." Williams v. State, 277 Ga. 853, 596 S.E.2d 597 (2004).

Failure to object not ineffective assistance. — Defendant's claim that the defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel failed when counsel's failure to ask for a curative instruction because of the admission of testimony by a co-conspirator was not an error as the testimony was admissible under the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule, counsel's failure to promptly interview restaurant employees did not amount to ineffective assistance as the purported witnesses alleged that they knew nothing and the defendant failed to make a proffer about what they might have said if interviewed earlier, counsel's failure to object and request a mistrial following certain comments by the assistant district attorney during closing arguments did not amount to ineffective assistance since the gravamen of the argument was to urge the jury to find from the inconsistencies that a witness had lied, and counsel's use of a videotaped police interview did not constitute ineffective assistance but was a tactical decision made to support the defense theory. Robinson v. State, 278 Ga. 31, 597 S.E.2d 386 (2004).

Failure to object to certain statements. — Evidence supported the trial court's finding that the defendant did not meet the defendant's burden of showing deficient performance or prejudice based on defense counsel's actions. Because the evidence sufficed to sustain the conviction, as a matter of law, counsel's failure to move for a directed verdict did not constitute ineffective assistance, and the defendant failed to show prejudice from the defendant's defense trial counsel's failure to object to certain statements. Sneed v. State, 267 Ga. App. 640, 600 S.E.2d 720 (2004).

Defendant could not demonstrate that the defendant was prejudiced by trial counsel's failure to object to a witness's testimony because the gist of the testimony was that the shooting of the victim was unprovoked, and the defendant failed to show that, but for counsel's failure to object to the specific statements, the outcome of the trial would have been any different. Nations v. State, 290 Ga. 39, 717 S.E.2d 634 (2011).

Failure to object to lineup. — Because a burglary victim recognized the defendant before a photographic lineup was introduced, the defendant did not show deficient performance or prejudice based on trial counsel's failure to object to the lineup; in any event, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, making terroristic threats, and possession of a firearm during the commission of the felonies under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(1), (a)(2), 16-7-1(a), 16-8-41(a), 16-11-37(a), and 16-11-106(b)(1). Williams v. State, 270 Ga. App. 845, 608 S.E.2d 310 (2004).

Objections to double hearsay. — Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object more fully to "double hearsay" testimony as the evidence was admissible. Dillard v. State, 272 Ga. App. 523, 612 S.E.2d 804 (2005).

Objections to alco-sensor results. — Counsel's failure to object to an officer's testimony that the defendant's alco-sensor result was .089 did not constitute ineffectiveness of counsel as the results were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-82 to impeach and rebut defendant's testimony that the result was .06. Capps v. State, 273 Ga. App. 696, 615 S.E.2d 821 (2005).

Objections to admission of videotape confession. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for allowing a videotaped confession to be played for the jury without objection and for not allowing the defendant to testify as the trial court did not find the defendant's version of events credible. Brooks v. State, 273 Ga. App. 691, 615 S.E.2d 829 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Objections during child sexual abuse cases. — Because a child victim testified about the defendant's sexual abuse and that the defendant showed the victim "pictures or movies where people didn't have any clothes on," the trial court properly admitted the videotapes and determined that a psychotherapist's testimony was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; consequently, defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 69, 616 S.E.2d 848 (2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1116, 126 S. Ct. 1917, 164 L. Ed. 2d 671 (2006); overruled on other grounds, Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009); cert. denied, Johnson v. Hart, 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 168059 (N.D. Ga. 2015).

In a child molestation prosecution, as evidence of the defendant's uncharged molestation of the victim was admissible without notice or a hearing, defense counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to such evidence. Furthermore, defense counsel was not ineffective for not objecting or requesting a mistrial after a witness testified that the defense had decided not to call the witness in its case in chief, as the testimony had little relevance to the facts in the case, and the trial court instructed the jurors at the close of the evidence that the defendant had no burden of proof. Stillwell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 805, 670 S.E.2d 452 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0493, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2009).

In a child molestation prosecution, counsel was not deficient for failing to object to evidence of the defendant's alleged physical abuse of the victims, an uncharged crime, as counsel testified that the defense theory was that the children lied about being molested because the defendant was overly strict and spanked the children, and the children wanted to get the defendant out of the house. This was a strategic decision, not an oversight. Ortiz v. State, 295 Ga. App. 546, 672 S.E.2d 507 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0803, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 269 (Ga. 2009).

Failure to object to burglar alarm.

— Defense counsel's failure to object to evidence that a burglar alarm went off at the house where the defendant was arrested shortly before the defendant was arrested was not ineffective assistance of counsel because even if this evidence improperly placed the defendant's character into evidence, contrary to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2, there was no reasonable probability that the defendant would have been acquitted, given the strength of other evidence against the defendant. Patterson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 341, 618 S.E.2d 81 (2005).

Failure to object to jacket and screwdriver. — Defense counsel's failure to object to evidence that a jacket and screwdriver were found under a deck where the defendant was arrested and the failure to object to the defendant being "asleep" at the time of arrest, was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the circumstances surrounding the arrest and the evidence was not irrelevant as the items had not been there the day before the defendant was arrested, and the defendant had been wearing a jacket when the defendant committed the crimes, and a screwdriver was used against a victim, so a jury could find that the items belonged to the defendant and linked the defendant to the crimes. Patterson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 341, 618 S.E.2d 81 (2005).

Failure to object to assault on accomplice evidence. — Counsel's failure to object to the admission of evidence that the defendant had, on a prior occasion, assaulted the defendant's accomplice was not ineffective assistance of counsel because the evidence was offered as impeachment of the defendant's testimony that the accomplice was the abusive partner in their romantic relationship. Thornton v. State, 279 Ga. 676, 620 S.E.2d 356 (2005).

Objections to videotape of eyewitness interview.

— When, in a prosecution for murder, the prosecutor proposed to play a videotape for the jury of a portion of an eyewitness's interview, deleting a portion in which the witness made derogatory comments about the defendant, and defense counsel insisted that the entire videotape be played, if this was an unreasonable decision by defense counsel, the defendant did not show the defendant was prejudiced, given the weight of the evidence against the defendant, as it could not be found that the outcome of the trial would have been different had the entire tape not been played to the jury. Washington v. State, 279 Ga. 722, 620 S.E.2d 809 (2005).

Failure to object to evidence showing motive.

— Defendant failed to establish that the defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel because, even assuming that the transcript was accurate and that the involvement of drug money was placed before the jury, the question elicited testimony which constituted relevant evidence of the defendant's motive, and thus defense counsel was not ineffective in failing to object, since any objection would have been fruitless. Jones v. State, 280 Ga. 205, 625 S.E.2d 1 (2005).

Defendant failed to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of trial counsel in the defendant's trial for the murder of the defendant's wife based on counsel's failure to object to evidence that the defendant held an accidental death policy in the amount of $243,750, payable to the defendant in the event of the wife's accidental death and to evidence showing that the defendant inquired into the wife's compensation and death benefits available through the wife's employer; there was independent evidence directly relating the existence of the insurance policies and death benefits to the defendant's financial motive for the murder. Financial gain from the defendant's marriage to the wife, clearly including the wife's insurance and employment benefits, and the prevention, at all costs, of the loss of such financial gain by virtue of a divorce, provided a compelling motive for the murder, and, thus, such evidence was admissible and any attempt to exclude the evidence would have been unsuccessful. Slakman v. State, 280 Ga. 837, 632 S.E.2d 378 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1218, 127 S. Ct. 1273, 167 L. Ed. 2d 95 (2007).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to object to the state's evidence regarding life insurance policies covering the defendant's spouse because there was a nexus between the life insurance and the spouse's murder when independent evidence directly related the existence of the insurance policies to the defendant's motive for murder; the defendant asked the defendant's employer about insurance proceeds on the day the murder was discovered, the defendant made it clear to others that the defendant wanted and needed the insurance money, and the defendant explained to fellow inmates that, as a result of the defendant's commission of the murder, the defendant would be receiving a large sum in insurance proceeds. Bridges v. State, 286 Ga. 535, 690 S.E.2d 136 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to evidence that the defendant had been fired, for violating a no-violence policy, from the restaurant which was robbed because the testimony was relevant to the issue of the defendant's motive for the defendant's actions and the evidence only incidentally placed the defendant's character into evidence. Donald v. State, 312 Ga. App. 222, 718 S.E.2d 81 (2011).

Because evidence of the defendant's prior drug use was introduced to show evidence of motive, it did not violate former O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-4-404); therefore, counsel was not ineffective for failing to raise a meritless objection. Simons v. State, 311 Ga. App. 819, 717 S.E.2d 319 (2011).

Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to object, request a limiting instruction, or move for a mistrial in response to the testimony of the victim's cousin regarding an altercation between the victim and the defendant on the night before the shooting because the testimony was admissible under the necessity exception to hearsay as a prior difficulty, showing the defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind; trial counsel was not deficient for failing to raise a meritless objection. Evans v. State, 288 Ga. 571, 707 S.E.2d 353 (2011).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to evidence that the defendant was angry at the victim because the victim failed to pay the defendant for drugs and started buying from another supplier as the evidence was relevant to motive and, thus, admissible. Griffin v. State, 292 Ga. 321, 737 S.E.2d 682 (2013).

Failure to object to evidence seized from vehicle. — Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel for not objecting to the introduction of evidence seized from the defendant's vehicle and for not preserving any objections to the jury charge; the trial court properly admitted the evidence seized from the vehicle and the trial court's jury instructions were not confusing. Scott v. State, 277 Ga. App. 126, 625 S.E.2d 526 (2006).

Failure to object to warrantless entry. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to challenge an officer's warrantless entry of a residence, as the man who consented to the entry had common authority over the premises. Mobley v. State, 277 Ga. App. 267, 626 S.E.2d 248 (2006).

Failure to object to prosecutor refreshing recollection. — Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel since when a prosecutor refreshed a victim's recollection with the victim's letter to the district attorney's office, the counsel failed to discuss the letter with the defendant and to seek a continuance, as: (1) the prosecutor's use of the letter to refresh the victim's recollection was proper; (2) counsel was permitted to review the letter beforehand; (3) there was no basis upon which a continuance might have been granted; and (4) the defendant failed to show how a continuance would have aided the defense. Haggins v. State, 277 Ga.

App. 742, 627 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Failure to object to similar transaction evidence. — In a rape prosecution, defense counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to the admission of similar transaction evidence; since this evidence was admissible, any objection by counsel would have been fruitless. Robertson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 376, 629 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for: (a) failing to object to the state's similar transaction evidence; (b) failing to object to alleged hearsay testimony; (c) failing to object to a certain state's exhibit; and (d) failing to request a jury charge on equal access, as: (1) the similar transactions were properly admitted for the limited purpose of showing the defendant's bent of mind; (2) regardless of whether or not trial counsel should have objected to either the alleged hearsay or to the challenged state's exhibit, no prejudice resulted from counsel's failure to do so; and (3) the contested jury charge, as a whole, adequately covered the principles contained in an equal access charge. Johnson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 98, 630 S.E.2d 612 (2006).

While it was improper for the prosecutor to cross-examine the defendant about the punishment received for prior convictions admitted as similar transactions evidence, and trial counsel's decision to forego raising an objection was not strategic, the defendant failed to show that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel objected; moreover, the improperly elicited testimony was one brief instance that occurred over a two-day jury trial, and the prosecutor did not attempt to capitalize on this specific testimony at any other point during the proceedings. Collins v. State, 283 Ga. App. 188, 641 S.E.2d 208 (2007).

Because there was nothing improper in a statement the trial court made to the panel during voir dire, counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to object to the statement, and counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to properly admitted similar transaction evidence. Edwards v. State, 282 Ga. 259, 646 S.E.2d 663 (2007).

Because: (1) the defendant failed to meet the burden of establishing that the state possessed favorable information, or that the trial's outcome might have been different if videotapes from the cameras on the vehicles of the two responding officers had been produced; and (2) counsel was not required to make an objection to the admission of similar transaction evidence since such would have been futile, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial as a result. Hinton v. State, 290 Ga. App. 479, 659 S.E.2d 841 (2008).

In a malice murder prosecution, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting testimony concerning the violent relationship between the defendant and the victim (the defendant's paramour) as the testimony qualified as prior difficulties or similar transaction evidence. Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to such testimony as the objection would have been overruled. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 304, 667 S.E.2d 65 (2008).

Even if a decision with regard to similar transaction evidence had the effect that the defendant claimed it did, it could not be used to support an ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on failure to object because it was decided after the defendant's trial was completed. Failure to make a meritless objection did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Walley v. State, 298 Ga. App. 483, 680 S.E.2d 550 (2009).

Defendant failed to establish prejudice as a result of any failure on the part of trial counsel to object to the state's similar transaction evidence because there was overwhelming evidence against the defendant and, thus, the defendant could not show that the admission of the similar transaction evidence resulted in a guilty verdict. Ellis v. State, 316 Ga. App. 352, 729 S.E.2d 492 (2012).

Failure to object to weapon. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to a reassembled rifle being used as an exhibit at a trial on a charge of aggravated assault based on the fact that the rifle did not include the stock of the weapon, because the officer's testimony on direct and cross-examination made clear that the defendant pointed an incomplete weapon at the officer, even though the officer did not know at the time that the rifle's stock had been removed and instead believed that it was operational. Stancil v. State, 278 Ga. App. 843, 630 S.E.2d 130 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to testimony that a gun and ammunition, which were not alleged to be the murder weapon, were seized from the defendant's home and to the introduction of those items into evidence because the evidence was relevant and probative of the charge of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, and an objection to its admissibility would have been fruitless. Ardis v. State, 290 Ga. 58, 718 S.E.2d 526 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to hearsay testimony that the person who was arrested with the defendant yelled that there was a gun in the car when the person and the defendant were apprehended because the defendant did not establish prejudice since there was direct evidence from an officer that a gun was found in the car. Chatman v. State, 306 Ga. App. 218, 702 S.E.2d 51 (2010).

Failure to object to statements. — Defendant failed to establish a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel because defense counsel's failure to object to the admission of a witness's pretrial statement to police was not ineffective assistance of counsel since admission of the statement was proper; the defendant also failed to show that defense counsel's failure to object to opinion evidence given by police officers was not the result of a reasonable trial strategy on counsel's part, or that the result of the trial would have been different had counsel objected. Finally, the defendant failed to show that defense counsel's cooperating in the introduction of a witness's prior testimony was anything other than a decision made in the reasonable exercise of professional judgment. Cummings v. State, 280 Ga. 831, 632 S.E.2d 152 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the admissibility of a codefendant's custodial statement, which was redacted to eliminate the defendant's name and was read into evidence at trial, because the defendant did not show a reasonable likelihood that the outcome of the trial would have been different had counsel made a proper objection and succeeded in excluding the statement; the codefendant's statement was cumulative of other properly admitted evidence, and given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, including the defendant's admission to a close friend that the defendant shot at the victim, any possible error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. Ardis v. State, 290 Ga. 58, 718 S.E.2d 526 (2011).

Failure to object to hearsay. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to object to hearsay testimony of a note-passing inmate as the hearsay statements fell within the exception permitting hearsay statements made by co-conspirators during the pendency of the conspiracy; the failure to object did not constitute deficient performance. McKinney v. State, 281 Ga. 92, 635 S.E.2d 153 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failing to object to a witness's hearsay testimony that the codefendant told the witness that the three defendants acted together in carrying out the robbery and murder; this testimony was properly admitted as a statement by a coconspirator under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 14, 635 S.E.2d 723 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1215, 127 S. Ct. 1266, 167 L. Ed. 2d 91 (2007).

Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV and U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failing to object when the state allegedly presented the hearsay statements of a nontestifying codefendant to a second codefendant and to an acquaintance of the defendant's that inculpated the declarant in the offenses; the defendant was unable to prove that the defendant was prejudiced, as the strength of the evidence against the defendant included the defendant's statements to the codefendant and acquaintance and to the police admitting to shooting the victim, and the evidence included the murder weapon that was recovered from the defendant. Chenoweth v. State, 281 Ga. 7, 635 S.E.2d 730 (2006).

Failure to object to court procedures. — Denial of a defendant's motion for a new trial was proper as the trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to object and to move for a mistrial on the basis of the trial court's comments during a discussion of whether and why the trial counsel should be allowed to continue a line of questioning of the defendant's housemate regarding the defendant's crying after the defendant's arrest; there was nothing to support the defendant's claim that the trial court improperly commented on the evidence under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 when the court discussed whether and why the court should allow the line of questioning to continue. Temples v. State, 280 Ga. App. 874, 635 S.E.2d 249 (2006).

Failure to object to admission of defendant's statement. — Appeals court rejected the defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim based on counsel's waiver of an objection to the admission of a statement the defendant made to police, as the defendant could not establish the requisite prejudice flowing from the waiver since the statement was properly admitted. Givens v. State, 281 Ga. App. 370, 636 S.E.2d 94 (2006).

Failure to object to admission of bond order. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to object to the trial court's admission of the bond order, allegedly violated by the defendant in the instant case, and the defendant's guilty plea to stalking based on the incident that led to the bond condition that the defendant allegedly violated by illegally stalking the defendant's wife, which resulted in the defendant's convictions in the instant case; any objection would have been meritless since the bond order was direct evidence of the court order that barred the defendant's conduct that led to the criminal charges at issue, and the record revealed that defense counsel had tried to exclude the prior aggravated stalking plea and the other protective orders prior to the commencement of trial. Fields v. State, 281 Ga. App. 733, 637 S.E.2d 136 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Failure to object to child sexual abuse victim's videotape. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to request that the portion of the child sexual abuse victim's videotaped interview with the police, in which the victim mentioned the defendant's marijuana use, be redacted; because the videotape was relevant as evidence of the sexual abuse, as well as the victim's consistent account of that abuse, the entire videotape was admissible even though certain comments may have incidentally placed the defendant's character in issue, and, in light of the evidence in support of the defendant's conviction, the defendant could not show a reasonable probability that absent the alleged error in the admission of the victim's testimony regarding the defendant's past drug use, the results of the trial would have been different. Anderson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 58, 637 S.E.2d 790 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Failure to make futile objections. — Trial counsel's choice not to cross-examine a witness based upon a position that the testimony was and would be further damaging to the defendant was found to be an acceptable strategy and did not constitute ineffective assistance of counsel; moreover, a failure to make a futile objection could not serve as a basis for a claim of ineffective assistance. Meeker v. State, 282 Ga. App. 77, 637 S.E.2d 806 (2006).

Failure to object to prior difficulties evidence. — In a malice murder prosecution, trial counsel was not required to object when a witness testified about an encounter a few days before the victim was killed in which the defendant held a gun to the head of a friend of the victim, as the testimony amounted to evidence of prior difficulties between the defendant and the victim, and was admissible without notice and a hearing pursuant to Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3; hence, counsel could not be deemed ineffective for a failure to voice an objection to said that evidence. Sims v. State, 281 Ga. 541, 640 S.E.2d 260 (2007).

Failure to object to admission of fingerprints. — Because the defendant was lawfully arrested pursuant to the fifth warrant for the crime of armed robbery, and the warrant was sworn to, signed, and executed, the defendant's arrest was not illegal, and the defendant's fingerprints were not subject to exclusion; thus, trial counsel could not be found ineffective in failing to move for exclusion of the fingerprints. Skaggs-Ferrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 872, 652 S.E.2d 891 (2007).

Failure to object to victim's videotape. — Although the defendant's trial counsel's performance fell below the objective standard of reasonableness under the first prong of the Strickland ineffective assistance of counsel test, the error however was harmless because although the defendant's trial counsel performed deficiently in failing to raise a hearsay objection to admission of the victim's statements contained in the videotaped interview, the defendant did not show that trial counsel's error prejudiced the defense since the statements made by the victim during the videotaped interview were merely cumulative of testimony the victim had offered at trial and for which the victim was cross-examined by trial counsel. Forde v. State, 289 Ga. App. 805, 658 S.E.2d 410 (2008).

Failure to object to identification evidence. — Trial counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to object to witness testimony identifying the defendant as the person depicted in photographs derived from bank security videotapes. Trial counsel testified that the basis of the defense was misidentification, and inasmuch as the excludable testimony went to the heart of the defense, if the identification testimony had been excluded, there was a reasonable probability that the defendant would have been acquitted. Grimes v. State, 291 Ga. App. 585,

Failure to object to introduction of evidence in aggravation of punishment. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the state's introduction of evidence in aggravation of punishment on the ground that the notice was untimely and that the state had failed to list specifically what convictions were to be introduced. By filing notice five days before trial, the state had given timely notice under O.C.G.A. § 17-16-4, and the state, counsel, and the trial court had discussed the prior convictions in detail at two pretrial hearings more than 60 days before trial. McClam v. State, 291 Ga. App. 697, 662 S.E.2d 790 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 798 (Ga. 2008).

Failure to object to investigator's statements. — Trial counsel's failure to object to an investigator's statements was not ineffective assistance of counsel since trial counsel was not questioned about counsel's failure to object to the investigator's allegedly improper testimony, and without trial counsel's testimony regarding this issue, it could not be assumed that counsel's actions did not fall within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance. Shaffer v. State, 291 Ga. App. 783, 662 S.E.2d 864 (2008).

Objection to "scraggly" appearance. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to testimony that the defendant had a "scraggly" appearance and was not well groomed when the defendant was arrested. Counsel testified that counsel did not consider this evidence of bad character and thought it might rebut the notion that the defendant was the type of person who would deal in 63 pounds of marijuana; moreover, any error in failing to object was harmless because the overwhelming evidence supporting the verdict rendered it highly unlikely that the testimony about the defendant's appearance contributed to the verdict. Finally, counsel's failure to object to evidence that a defendant had been incarcerated in connection with the crime for which the defendant was on trial did not place the defendant's character in issue and did not result in ineffective assistance. Dade v. State, 292 Ga. App. 897, 666 S.E.2d 1 (2008).

Failure to object as ineffective assistance. — As the state could not comment on a defendant's failure to come forward, defense counsel was ineffective in not objecting when the state elicited testimony that the defendant knew police were looking for the defendant in connection with the charged crimes, but did not contact the authorities. As the defendant testified about "bad blood" between the defendant and the victim, raising a credibility issue, there was a reasonable probability that counsel's deficient performance affected the outcome, entitling the defendant to a new trial. Johnson v. State, 293 Ga. App. 728, 667 S.E.2d 637 (2008).

Failure to object to 9-1-1 call admission. — Any error by counsel in failing to object to the contents of a 9-1-1 call was cumulative of admissible evidence and therefore harmless. Eller v. State, 294 Ga. App. 77, 668 S.E.2d 755 (2008).

Objection to hearsay testimony of emergency room physician. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy, rape, and other related crimes, trial counsel's decision not to object to hearsay testimony of the emergency room physician who treated the victim did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel as the physician's testimony was admissible under the hearsay exception set forth in former O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4 (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-8-803) since the challenged statements related to the cause of the victim's injuries and were made for the purpose of the victim's diagnosis and treatment. As a result, the trial court did not err in admitting the statements and, therefore, since the statements were admissible, there was no merit to the defendant's contention that the defendant's trial counsel's failure to object to the hearsay testimony was ineffective assistance. Greene v. State, 295 Ga. App. 803, 673 S.E.2d 292 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0862, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 259 (Ga. 2009).

Objections to admission of videotape confession. — Defense counsel was deficient for failing to object to the admission, during the state's case-in-chief, of a videotape of the defendant's custodial interview, which was conducted in violation of Miranda. As there was reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different absent the admission of the defendant's custodial statement, the defendant established ineffective assistance of counsel. Frazier v. State, 298 Ga. App. 487, 680 S.E.2d 553 (2009).

Failure to object to public drunkenness. — Counsel's decision not to object to evidence of the defendant's public drunkenness arrest in an armed robbery trial did not constitute ineffective assistance because a gun found on the defendant during that arrest was relevant, the circumstances surrounding the gun's discovery were part of the res gestae, and the gun's admission was proper; given trial counsel's testimony that trial counsel chose not to pursue a motion in limine because the gun was coming into evidence and trial counsel would rather the jury know that the defendant came into possession of the handgun while intoxicated, rather than to speculate that the gun was for something more serious, the trial court was authorized to find that counsel's decision not to object to the evidence surrounding the gun's discovery was a matter of reasonable strategy. Even if the failure to request a limiting instruction was deficient performance, the lack of such an instruction was not prejudicial because evidence of public drunkenness was not so prejudicial that it would have swayed the jurors to convict, and, moreover, the evidence of guilt was overwhelming. Bonker v. State, 298 Ga. App. 867, 681 S.E.2d 256 (2009).

Objection to testimony concerning incriminating statements. — Trial counsel did not render ineffective assistance by failing to object to testimony concerning incriminating statements the defendant made to a jail cell informant because the testimony was merely cumulative of the admissible testimony of two other fellow inmates; therefore, the defendant failed to show the requisite prejudice to support the defendant's claim of ineffective assistance, and the trial court did not err in the court's determination that had trial counsel objected to the testimony, there was not a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different. Bridges v. State, 286 Ga. 535, 690 S.E.2d 136 (2010).

Failure to object to inadmissible evidence on other bad acts. — Defendant could not establish that defendant's trial counsel was deficient for failing to object to inadmissible evidence concerning other bad acts because trial counsel objected to the admission of the evidence and obtained a ruling from the trial court, and regardless of the format of trial counsel's objections, the allegations were made with sufficient specificity for the trial court to identify their precise basis since they specifically pointed out how the proposed evidence violated some established rule of evidence or procedure; even if counsel's performance was deficient, the defendant did not show there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different but for counsel's purported omission because there was overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt. Ellis v. State, 287 Ga. 170, 695 S.E.2d 35 (2010).

Failure to object to cross-examination regarding accomplice's motives. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the introduction of a recording of an accomplice's interrogation because the veracity of the accomplice was placed in issue by cross-examination regarding the accomplice's motives in testifying, and, therefore, the accomplice's prior consistent statements were admissible and were not improperly admitted to bolster the credibility of the accomplice in the eyes of the jury; the accomplice's statement explaining that the accomplice purchased a gun for the defendant because the defendant could not do so since the defendant had a criminal record and that the purpose of the crime was to obtain drugs were admissible to explain the accomplice's conduct. Ward v. State, 304 Ga. App. 517, 696 S.E.2d 471 (2010).

Objections to admission of videotaped confessions. — Trial counsel was not deficient in declining to challenge the admission of the defendant's videotape police interview on the ground that the defendant was intoxicated because a detective testified at trial that the defendant appeared intoxicated but not to the point that the defendant was unable to comprehend the questions posed to the defendant and respond accordingly; the videotape clearly showed that the defendant was coherent and responsive during the course of the interview. Boggs v. State, 304 Ga. App. 698, 697 S.E.2d 843 (2010).

Trial counsel was not deficient in failing to challenge the admission of the defendant's videotape police interview on the ground that the defendant had requested an attorney because the videotape itself showed the defendant waiving defendant's Miranda rights and consenting to speak with a detective without an attorney present, and at no point in the videotape did the defendant request an attorney; trial counsel was not required to anticipate that the defendant would take the stand and claim for the first time that the defendant had requested an attorney before speaking to the detective. Boggs v. State, 304 Ga. App. 698, 697 S.E.2d 843 (2010).

Failure to object to admission of juvenile court disposition order. — Trial counsel's failure to object specifically to admission of the sentencing portions of a juvenile court disposition order at trial constituted deficient performance because counsel's general relevancy objection and exception to a previous ruling made by another trial judge were not adequately specific and failed to give the judge presiding over the trial an opportunity to consider the need for redaction; there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the defendant's rape and aggravated sodomy trial would have been different had the damaging information been excluded from the jury's consideration because the evidence was not overwhelming since the evidence was introduced that the defendant's encounter with the victim could have been consensual. Higgins v. State, 304 Ga. App. 771, 698 S.E.2d 335 (2010).

Failure to object to recalled officer. — Defendant failed to show that defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to object when a police officer was recalled to the stand in order to testify about some of the state's exhibits, by failing to object to the admission of those exhibits, and by failing to cross-examine the officer because trial counsel joined in the objection to the state's recalling of the officer that was made by codefendants' counsel, and the defendant failed to cite any grounds upon which defendant's counsel should have objected to the admission of the state's exhibits; the defendant failed to provide any evidence that cross-examination of the recalled officer would have affected the outcome of the trial. Cruz v. State, 305 Ga. App. 805, 700 S.E.2d 631 (2010).

Failure to object to fingerprint analysis. — Defendant failed to show that defendant's trial counsel's failure to object to the admission of the state's fingerprint analysis was deficient performance because that evidence did not prejudice the defendant's trial strategy, which was to contest the occurrence of any kidnapping offense and concede the lesser crimes; there was no allegation in the record or on appeal that the state acted in bad faith in providing the defendant with the fingerprint analysis when it did, so the trial court was not required to exclude the evidence, and the defendant could not show that the trial court would have sustained an objection to the admission of the fingerprint report. Thornton v. State, 305 Ga. App. 692, 700 S.E.2d 669 (2010).

Failure to object to admission of drug evidence. — Defendant's trial counsel was not deficient in failing to object to the admission of a substance contained in the corner tie that defendant sold to the undercover officer as heroin on the ground that the state was unable to show the purity of the heroin it contained because the state was not required to establish the purity of the substance under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(b). Thomas v. State, 306 Ga. App. 279, 701 S.E.2d 895 (2010).

Counsel's failure to understand contemporaneous objection rule. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to understand the contemporaneous objection rule because the defendant did not show that a reasonable probability existed that trial counsel's failure to object properly resulted in the admission of evidence, which if excluded, would have resulted in a different outcome; the defendant pointed to no evidence that was erroneously admitted because of trial counsel's deficient performance. Chatman v. State, 306 Ga. App. 218, 702 S.E.2d 51 (2010).

Objection to introduction of letter.

— Because a letter addressed to the defendant was relevant and admissible in the defendant's trial for theft by taking of a car, an objection to its admission would have been futile, and trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object; the letter, which was found inside a bag police officers found near a second stolen vehicle, was relevant and admissible to prove identity because the letter tended to prove that the bag found near the second vehicle belonged to the defendant, and that fact tended to prove that the defendant was, in fact, the person who stole the second vehicle. Ferguson v. State, 307 Ga. App. 232, 704 S.E.2d 470 (2010).

Objections to chain of custody. —

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of trial counsel because the defendant did not show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different had trial counsel objected to the chain of custody of the sexual assault kit. Neal v. State, 308 Ga. App. 551, 707 S.E.2d 503 (2011).

Failure to object to victim's identification. —

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the victim's in-court identification of the defendant because the victim's in-court identification of the defendant was not tainted since the victim immediately identified the defendant from a photo array three days after the incident; the booking photo was provided to the victim by the victim's civil attorney, and trial counsel's failure to object to the photo's introduction or to request that the in-court identification be struck was not deficient. Delgiudice v. State, 308 Ga. App. 397, 707 S.E.2d 603 (2011).

Objections to evidence found in car.

— Trial counsel's performance was not deficient due to counsel's failure to object on grounds of relevancy to evidence concerning a partially-empty bottle of vodka found in the defendant's car upon the defendant's arrest because given the overwhelming evidence in the case, it was highly likely that the evidence concerning the vodka bottle did not contribute to the guilty verdict and was therefore harmless; even assuming that the defendant's counsel was deficient in failing to object to the evidence concerning the vodka bottle found in the defendant's car, the defendant did not show a reasonable likelihood that, but for counsel's error, the outcome of the trial would have been different. Brown v. State, 309 Ga. App. 511, 710 S.E.2d 674 (2011).

Failure to object to character evidence. — Defendant failed to establish that there was a reasonable probability that, but for the alleged deficiencies of trial counsel, the outcome of the trial would have been different because, even assuming that trial counsel performed deficiently by failing to object to character evidence, the defendant failed to show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different; the evidence of the crime charged was overwhelming. Lowe v. State, 310 Ga. App. 242, 712 S.E.2d 633 (2011).

Because the defendant did not seek a hearing on the motion for a new trial or present evidence in support of the claim that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to redact bad character evidence from a witness's testimony, the defendant failed to show that trial counsel was deficient in the handling of the evidence or that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different if the testimony had been excluded. Newkirk v. State, 290 Ga. 581, 722 S.E.2d 760 (2012).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to challenge the admission of bad character evidence against a codefendant because the defendant failed to call trial counsel as a witness during the motion for new trial hearing, and the record supported the trial court's finding that counsel made a conscious, strategic decision not to oppose the admission of evidence of the codefendant's cocaine conviction. Smith v. State, 316 Ga. App. 175, 728 S.E.2d 808 (2012).

Failure to object to admission of bloodstained clothes. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the defendant's bloodstained clothes without a showing of a chain of custody because the defendant was unable to make the requisite showing of prejudice since the evidence against the defendant was strong, including that the defendant was obsessed with the victim and acted aggressively toward the victim for several months, the victim was stabbed more than 100 times, and the defendant broke into the victim's home on more than one occasion within days of the victims' death and assaulted and attempted to rape the victim at knife-point. Simpson v. State, 289 Ga. 685, 715 S.E.2d 142 (2011).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission of the defendant's bloodstained clothes without a showing of a chain of custody because the record showed that every police officer on duty the day of the defendant's arrest had actual knowledge of facts sufficient to support a finding of probable cause for the arrest; thus, the seizure of the defendant's bloody clothes after the arrest was proper. Simpson v. State, 289 Ga. 685, 715 S.E.2d 142 (2011).

Failure to object to authentication of bank video. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the authentication of a bank video that depicted the robbery because the defendant did not show that an objection to the authentication of the surveillance tape would have been sustained or a reasonable possibility that allowing the tape to be viewed by the jury changed the outcome of the trial; defense counsel testified that the person was completely covered, so the video would show what it showed but would not help in any way in pointing towards the defendant. Williams v. State, 312 Ga. App. 22, 717 S.E.2d 532 (2011).

Failure to object to speculation. — Defendant was not prejudiced by trial counsel's failure to object to testimony speculating as to the defendant's state of mind because there was no reasonable likelihood that the testimony contributed to the guilty verdict on the lesser charge of attempted rape; the testimony regarding the victim's belief as to why the defendant was following the van in which the victim was traveling was not relevant to the consideration of the charges against the defendant, rape or attempted rape. Gomez-Oliva v. State, 312 Ga. App. 105, 717 S.E.2d 689 (2011).

Objection to prior convictions. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when the prosecuting attorney offered certified copies of the defendant's prior felony conviction to impeach the defendant's testimony under former O.C.G.A. § 24-9-84.1(a) (see now O.C.G.A. § 24-6-609) because the trial court properly could have concluded that the probative value of the conviction substantially outweighed any prejudicial effect, so the failure to object was not unreasonable; the prior conviction was recent, probative of the defendant's credibility as a testifying witness, and involved conduct dissimilar to the burglary for which the defendant was on trial. Robinson v. State, 312 Ga. App. 110, 717 S.E.2d 694 (2011).

Failure to object to investigator's testimony. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an investigator's testimony that was not opinion testimony, but fact testimony which itself contained an opinion. Further, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when an investigator testified that the defendant killed the victim or when a medical examiner testified that the death was a homicide as the identity of the person who caused the victim's death and the fact that the death was a homicide were not disputed; thus, the failure could not have affected the outcome of the trial. Butler v. State, 292 Ga. 400, 738 S.E.2d 74 (2013).

Failure to object to letter going to jury room during deliberations. — Claim that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to prevent a letter written by a jailhouse informant from going into the jury room during deliberations failed because the defendant failed to show that there was a reasonable probability that the outcome of the trial would have been different since the contents of the letter were not particularly harmful to the defendant. Young v. State, 292 Ga. 443, 738 S.E.2d 575 (2013).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object when a witness read into the record a letter the witness received from the jailhouse informant because it was a reasonable trial strategy to introduce the letter so that defense counsel could refute the informant's claims on more than one occasion. Young v. State, 292 Ga. 443, 738 S.E.2d 575 (2013).

Failure to object to admission of computer. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object or move for a mistrial when a laptop computer found during a search was introduced into evidence because counsel sought to exclude the computer and the images and links through a pre-trial motion to suppress and a motion in limine, both of which the trial court denied, obviating the need for counsel to object again at trial. Henry v. State, 316 Ga. App. 132, 729 S.E.2d 429 (2012).

Failure to object to evidence of incarceration. — State of Georgia did not elicit improper character evidence from the defendant, regarding the defendant's prior incarceration, during cross-examination as the defendant mentioned the prior incarceration during the defendant's testimony. Therefore, defense counsel's failure to object to the evidence of the defendant's prior incarceration was not ineffective assistance of counsel. Baker v. State, 307 Ga. App. 884, 706 S.E.2d 214 (2011), cert. denied, No. S11C0940, 2011 Ga. LEXIS 517 (Ga. 2011).

Chain of custody objections. — Defendant's argument, that defense counsel was ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failure to object to the admission of cocaine evidence based on a deficient chain of custody, failed; the state's evidence showed a proper chain of custody as to the cocaine in issue, and the failure to make a meritless objection did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel. Copeland v. State, 281 Ga. App. 11, 635 S.E.2d 283 (2006).

Defendant's argument that defense counsel was ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to raise a chain-of-custody objection to the drugs seized in the case failed, as counsel was not ineffective for failing to make an objection lacking in merit; because there was no affirmative evidence of tampering or substitution, a missing link in the chain of custody did not alone require exclusion of the evidence, and testimony presented by the state showed that an adequate chain of custody was established authorizing the admission of the state's exhibit. Franklin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 409, 636 S.E.2d 114 (2006).

Defendant's trial attorney did not perform deficiently because the attorney did not object to the admission of cocaine evidence on the ground that the state failed to establish an adequate chain of custody; because the evidence showed that the state established an adequate chain of custody, any motion to suppress on the ground that the state failed to do so would have been properly denied; at trial, an officer and a forensic chemist examined the state's exhibit, which was presented as cocaine retrieved from defendant's truck, and testified that it was the same bag that they had sealed and placed either in the evidence vault or the lock-box; in addition, both confirmed that their respective seals remained unbroken. Buckholts v. State, 283 Ga. App. 254, 641 S.E.2d 246 (2007).

Defendant failed to show that counsel provided ineffective assistance in violation of U.S. Const., amend. 6 and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. 1, Para. XIV, based on counsel's failure to have objected to evidence regarding the chain of custody of drugs that were seized from the crime scene, as the evidence showed that the police placed the drugs in a tamper-proof identifiable container and that the crime lab technician who tested it received it in the same container, and there was no indication that there had been any tampering or substitution. Reason v. State, 283 Ga. App. 608, 642 S.E.2d 236 (2007).

Failure to object to chaos in courtroom. — Defense counsel was not ineffective under Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV in failing to object to alleged chaos in the courtroom or to several jurors sleeping; evidence was presented, however, that the courtroom was neither chaotic nor were jurors sleeping during trial, and the defendant, therefore, failed to show deficient performance or prejudice. Martin v. State, 281 Ga. App. 64, 635 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

E. Jury InstructionsVoluntary manslaughter charge requested by defendant properly given.

— As a charge on voluntary manslaughter was justified, trial counsel was not ineffective for requesting it; furthermore, trial counsel was not ineffective for not making meritless objections. Hayles v. State, 287 Ga. App. 601, 651 S.E.2d 860 (2007).

Failure to request jury instruction on accomplice testimony.

— Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a jury instruction on the requirement for corroboration of accomplice testimony because the evidence did not require such an instruction given that there was other evidence corroborating the incriminating testimony from the accomplice. Brown v. State, 321 Ga. App. 198, 739 S.E.2d 118 (2013).

Failure to request jury charge in writing.

— In a defendant's prosecution for, inter alia, armed robbery, trial counsel was not ineffective because although counsel failed to file written jury charge requests on the lesser included crimes of false imprisonment and theft, those requests were made orally and were considered on the merits. Wesley v. State, 294 Ga. App. 559, 669 S.E.2d 511 (2008).

Failure to request a charge on criminal negligence.

— Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a jury charge on criminal negligence because the trial court properly charged the jury on first and second degree vehicular homicide, and a charge on criminal negligence would not have helped the jury distinguish the two offenses. Fouts v. State, 322 Ga. App. 261, 744 S.E.2d 451 (2013).

Failure to request jury charge on mere presence.

— Trial counsel was not ineffective for withdrawing a request for a jury charge on mere presence after the defense changed from the defendant did not shoot the victim to the defendant was not present at the scene of the offense. Graves v. State, 322 Ga. App. 24, 743 S.E.2d 582 (2013).

Failure to object to proper jury instruction. — In a defendant's prosecution for malice murder, trial counsel was not ineffective for requesting a jury instruction that was allegedly contrary to the defense strategy of convincing the jury that there was insufficient corroboration of the defendant's statement because the jury instruction was virtually identical to the standard instruction and actually supported the defense theory; at any rate, the state requested the exact same jury instruction. Hill v. State, 284 Ga. 521, 668 S.E.2d 673 (2008).

Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to an instruction that if the jury found the defendant was not guilty of armed robbery, the jury could not find the defendant guilty of possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b). As the commission of the underlying felony was an essential element of § 16-11-106(b), the instruction was a correct statement of the law. Soloman v. State, 294 Ga. App. 520, 669 S.E.2d 430 (2008).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the trial court's instruction regarding the charge of possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because the defendant did not point to any jury charge that was objectionable or any jury charge that should have been given but was not. Smith v. State, 302 Ga. App. 222, 690 S.E.2d 867 (2010).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of trial counsel due to counsel's failure to object to an allegedly sequential jury instruction and to attempt to exclude an allegedly prejudicial charge on adultery because the trial court's charge was not improperly sequential, and counsel could not be considered professionally deficient for failing to object to the charge; the charge on adultery did not prevent the jurors from considering adultery as provocation for a verdict of voluntary manslaughter because the trial court specifically charged the jury that the jury could consider voluntary manslaughter if it was shown by the evidence that the killing was done by the defendant without malice and not in the spirit of revenge but under a violent, sudden impulse of passion created in the mind of the defendant by ongoing adultery or recent discovery of past adultery. Loadholt v. State, 286 Ga. 402, 687 S.E.2d 824 (2010).

Trial court did not err in finding that trial counsel was not deficient in failing to object to a pre-trial instruction that was given to the jury pool because the pre-trial instruction was proper, and trial counsel found the instruction advantageous; the pre-trial charge, as a whole, did not shift the burden of proof to the defendant, and one of the defendant's trial counsel testified that counsel believed that the defendant actually benefitted from the instruction because the instruction sounded as if the instruction was in defendant's favor and that the giving of the instruction aided the defendant in effectively questioning the jurors regarding their viewpoints on the law during voir dire. Bridges v. State, 286 Ga. 535, 690 S.E.2d 136 (2010).

Trial counsel was not deficient for failing to object to the trial court's instruction on the lesser included offense of possession of MDMA (Ecstasy) because the instruction explained the elements of possession of MDMA with intent to distribute and delineated that charge from simple possession of MDMA; the charge substantially covered the principles in the defendant's request to charge and adequately instructed the jury as to the jury's consideration of the charged offense and the lesser offense, and since there was overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, in that the defendant possessed a distribution amount of MDMA, the defendant could not show a reasonable probability that the outcome of the defendant's trial would have been different. Taylor v. State, 306 Ga. App. 175, 702 S.E.2d 28 (2010).

Defendant's claim that the defendant's trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to object to the trial court's Allen charge was unsupported, and the defendant could not show prejudice or harm because there was no error on which to premise the claims of ineffective assistance; the record would not support a finding that the trial court's Allen charge improperly coerced the jury because the jurors deliberated for a considerable time after the instruction was given, and the jurors reaffirmed the verdict when polled. Sharpe v. State, 288 Ga. 565, 707 S.E.2d 338 (2011).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the aggravated assault charge because the defendant could show neither deficient performance nor prejudice in that the charge was based on the applicable aggravated assault code section and the charge as a whole was not erroneous. Gross v. State, 312 Ga. App. 362, 718 S.E.2d 581 (2011).

Counsel's failure to pursue correct jury instruction. — Defendant did not show that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel when defendant's trial counsel did not request a broader jury instruction on justification that would have stated that a victim's threats and menaces could justify a defendant's use of deadly force, as the justification charge the trial court gave the jury was adequate; moreover, since defendant's trial counsel did not testify at defendant's motion for a new trial, defendant did not show why defendant's counsel did not request a broader charge, and, thus, defendant did not overcome the presumption that the attorney's conduct was within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance because the attorney might have had several legitimate reasons for not requesting a broader charge, which also meant defendant could not show one required component of ineffectiveness, that the attorney's representation was deficient. Garrett v. State, 276 Ga. 556, 580 S.E.2d 236 (2003).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel when counsel did not request a misidentification charge, despite misidentification being the defendant's sole defense, because the jury charge as a whole correctly and thoroughly instructed the jury on such issues as the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof, credibility of witnesses, and impeachment of witnesses, and when there was overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Brown v. State, 260 Ga. App. 627, 580 S.E.2d 348 (2003).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel when the attorney did not request a charge on impeachment of a witness by a prior conviction of a crime of moral turpitude in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt, even if the convicted witness's testimony had been discounted. Holt v. State, 260 Ga. App. 826, 581 S.E.2d 257 (2003).

Defendant did not show that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel when defendant's trial counsel did not request a limiting instruction when the state introduced evidence that defendant had previously been convicted for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute; although defendant wanted that instruction to say that such evidence was limited to a firearms charge against defendant, and should not be considered in connection with the other charge against defendant of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, the trial court was not required to give that instruction because such evidence was admissible to show defendant's identity, and, thus, trial counsel was not ineffective for not requesting that instruction. Laye v. State, 261 Ga. App. 327, 582 S.E.2d 505 (2003).

Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to request a charge of mistake of fact under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-5 as the charge was not supported by the evidence since defendant testified that defendant was totally unaware of any of the codefendants' plans for breaking or entering the house; thus, the defense was a lack of knowledge of the crime, not that defendant knew they had broken into the victim's house, but believed that they were authorized to do so, and the trial court charged the jury on mere presence, mere association, and the requirement that the state prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant knew that a crime was being committed. Botelho v. State, 268 Ga. App. 129, 601 S.E.2d 494 (2004).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected as the jury instructions properly informed the jury of the state's need to prove defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and the type of evidence that could satisfy that burden; an additional charge on mere suspicion or speculation would not have produced a different outcome at trial. New v. State, 270 Ga. App. 341, 606 S.E.2d 865 (2004).

Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected as the jury instructions properly informed the jury of the state's need to prove defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and the type of evidence that could satisfy that burden; trial counsel's failure to object to the charge did not prejudice defendant. New v. State, 270 Ga. App. 341, 606 S.E.2d 865 (2004).

When, in a murder prosecution, the trial court erroneously charged the jury that it could infer defendant's intent to kill the victim from the use of a deadly weapon, but defendant did not object to this charge, defendant did not show that the counsel provided ineffective assistance, even if the failure to object was deficient performance, because the evidence of malice against defendant was overwhelming, so the error, if preserved, would have been found harmless, and defendant could not show prejudice. Morgan v. State, 279 Ga. 6, 608 S.E.2d 619 (2005).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to: (1) the trial court's instruction to the jury on aggravated assault for failing to define a deadly weapon; (2) the trial court's instruction to the jury on aggravated assault for failing to highlight the requirement that defendant knew that the victim was a police officer; and (3) the trial court's admission and treatment of defendant's prior convictions at sentencing; since there would have been no merit to any such objections, defendant's counsel could not have been ineffective in failing to make them. Milton v. State, 272 Ga. App. 908, 614 S.E.2d 140 (2005).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel by failing to object to language in the jury instructions to consider only evidence offered by the state in determining guilt or innocence as, read in its entirety, the jury charge properly instructed jurors on the state's burden of proof, reasonable doubt, and the definition of evidence; moreover, even if the trial court erred in including the complained-of language in the charge, such error did not require reversal because the charge as a whole was neither confusing nor misleading. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Trial court did not give an improper "sequential jury instruction" and counsel's failure to object on that ground did not constitute ineffective assistance because the instructions did not require the jury to acquit defendant of armed robbery before deliberating on the lesser offenses; the jurors were specifically told that they could consider the lesser offenses if they were unable to reach a verdict on armed robbery. Olarte v. State, 273 Ga. App. 96, 614 S.E.2d 213 (2005).

Defense counsel was not ineffective in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV for failing to request a charge on circumstantial evidence based on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, which imposed certain requirements for convictions based on circumstantial evidence; the trial court adequately charged the jury on reasonable doubt, and direct evidence for both offenses was presented. Guillen v. State, 275 Ga. App. 316, 620 S.E.2d 518 (2005).

Defendant was not entitled to a new trial due to ineffective assistance of counsel as there was no basis to argue or to seek a jury instruction that defendant justifiably threatened to kill an officer arresting the defendant. Mayfield v. State, 276 Ga. App. 544, 623 S.E.2d 725 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel by the failure to object to a jury instruction on the entire definition of what constituted a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30; any objection to the jury charge would have been futile. Butler v. State, 277 Ga. App. 57, 625 S.E.2d 458 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel based on defense counsel's withdrawal of a request for a justification instruction as defendant's testimony that defendant did not act with the intent to inflict injury on the victim did not support an instruction on justification. Alston v. State, 277 Ga. App. 117, 625 S.E.2d 475 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel based on counsel's failure to request an instruction on reckless conduct as defendant testified at trial and trial counsel testified at the new trial hearing that the defense strategy was to portray the stabbing of the victim as an accident; thus, the incident was either an accident or an aggravated assault and a charge on reckless conduct was unwarranted. Alston v. State, 277 Ga. App. 117, 625 S.E.2d 475 (2005).

Defense counsel's untimely submission of written requests to charge on lesser included offenses was not ineffective assistance, as the proposed jury charges submitted were not warranted by the evidence. Robertson v. State, 278 Ga. App. 376, 629 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

Since the trial court's charge on justification was proper, counsel's failure to object to the charge did not amount to ineffective assistance. Jones v. State, 279 Ga. App. 139, 630 S.E.2d 643 (2006).

Since the appellate counsel argued the defendant's motion for new trial but failed to raise an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, this claim was waived; in any event, since the trial court's charge on accomplice testimony was virtually identical to the charge on accomplice testimony contained in the pattern jury instructions and specifically approved by the Supreme Court of Georgia, trial counsel was not ineffective in not failing to object to the jury charge. Chapman v. State, 279 Ga. App. 200, 630 S.E.2d 810 (2006).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in requesting an inapplicable impeachment charge as the improper language was a mere passing reference in a lengthy instruction and the defendant could not show a reasonable probability that trial counsel's performance changed the outcome of the trial. Miller v. State, 281 Ga. App. 354, 636 S.E.2d 60 (2006), cert. denied, No. S07C0087, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 106 (Ga. 2007).

Trial counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to request a jury instruction on specific forcible felonies since even assuming that trial counsel was deficient, the defendant could not show prejudice as the trial court charged the jury on the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, the burden of proof, and the defense of justification, including the definition of a forcible felony; the jury was fairly informed as to when a homicide was justified and there was not a reasonable probability that the jury would have reached a different result if an instruction on specific forcible felonies had also been given. Lott v. State, 281 Ga. App. 373, 636 S.E.2d 102 (2006).

In a prosecution for trafficking in cocaine, the trial court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on the affirmative defense of entrapment, as: (1) sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant voluntarily committed the offense upon being given the opportunity to do so; and (2) no evidence was presented to show that the informant employed undue persuasion, incitement or deceit to induce the defendant into selling drugs; thus, the defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel for failing to present evidence to support an entrapment defense was rejected and did not warrant a new trial. Campbell v. State, 281 Ga. App. 503, 636 S.E.2d 687 (2006).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and obstruction, the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on allegations that trial counsel was ineffective, as: (1) a jury charge on the testimony of an accomplice was not required; and (2) in light of trial counsel's cross-examination of the accomplice, the court's credibility charge, as well as the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, a leniency instruction was unnecessary. Hayes v. State, 281 Ga. App. 749, 637 S.E.2d 128 (2006).

Although the defendant's counsel failed to secure a transcript of the defendant's child's juvenile court proceeding, wherein the child claimed sole responsibility for having shoplifted various items from a store, it was not shown that such a transcript or a jury charge on the child's prior consistent statements would have caused the jury to reject the testimony of the store's asset protection agent that the agent observed the defendant tear packaging off items of merchandise in defendant's shoplifting trial; accordingly, there was no ineffective assistance of the defendant's counsel in violation of the Sixth Amendment and Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, and the failure of the trial court to have given the jury prior consistent statement jury instructions under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-24(b) was not harmful error. Tucker v. State, 282 Ga. App. 807, 640 S.E.2d 310 (2006).

Because the trial court thoroughly instructed the jury that it was the arbiter of each witness's credibility and that it should give consideration to each witness's interest or lack thereof in the outcome of the case, no other instructions were necessary, as this charge adequately covered the possible motive, interest, or bias of a state witness; thus, counsel was under no obligation to request an additional instruction regarding motive, interest, or bias. Lee v. State, 281 Ga. 776, 642 S.E.2d 835 (2007).

Because an erroneous jury instruction on an offense of aggravated child molestation violated an inmate's due process rights by allowing the jury to convict in a manner not charged in the indictment, and the inmate's trial counsel was ineffective in failing to object to the instruction, the inmate was properly granted habeas relief. Hall v. Wheeling, 282 Ga. 86, 646 S.E.2d 236 (2007).

Defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to request a charge related to how the jury could consider the testimony of the lead detective who was excepted from the rule of sequestration given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt because the state sufficiently showed that the state needed the lead detective's presence in the courtroom for an orderly presentation of the case, and the defendant failed to show that any prejudice resulted from the trial court's failure to give the charge. Morgan v. State, 287 Ga. App. 569, 651 S.E.2d 833 (2007).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request in writing a jury instruction that excluded a statement that witnesses were presumed to speak the truth unless impeached. The court charged the jury that it could consider a number of factors, including a witness's manner of testifying, their means and opportunity for knowing the facts to which they testified, and the probability or improbability of their testimony. Stanford v. State, 288 Ga. App. 463, 654 S.E.2d 173 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 461 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court did not improperly instruct the jury on each of the elements of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391, including intoxication by toxic vapors, as the charge stated the law accurately, and the complained-of language concerning toxic vapors was mere surplusage. Hence, trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to that instruction. Rylee v. State, 288 Ga. App. 784, 655 S.E.2d 239 (2007).

As a jury charge was sufficient, defendant could not prove that trial counsel's failure to object to charge as given or to request certain charges fell outside the range of reasonable professional conduct; moreover, given the overwhelming evidence of guilt, defendant could not show prejudice. Gathuru v. State, 291 Ga. App. 178, 661 S.E.2d 233 (2008).

Defendant could not demonstrate a reasonable probability that the outcome of defendant's trial would have been different but for counsel's failure to object to language in an improper Allen charge. The language at issue was but one small part of an otherwise fair and balanced charge, and the charge as a whole could not be deemed unduly coercive; the jury was polled, and each juror affirmed the verdict as the one the juror had reached and agreed upon. Gilbert v. State, 291 Ga. App. 898, 663 S.E.2d 299 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 883 (Ga. 2008).

Trial counsel was not ineffective in failing to request charges on voluntary manslaughter, self-defense, and accident as such instructions were contrary to the defense strategy, based on the defendant's testimony, of contending that the defendant did not have a gun in the defendant's hands until the fighting and shooting were finished. Savior v. State, 284 Ga. 488, 668 S.E.2d 695 (2008).

Defendant failed to demonstrate that defendant's trial counsel provided ineffective assistance because the failure to submit written charges was deficient or prejudicial, and although the defendant contended that defendant's trial counsel should have submitted written jury charges, the defendant failed to indicate which charges should have been requested; at the charge conference, trial counsel sought, unsuccessfully, to have the court charge on lesser included offenses and participated in the formulation of the remaining charges, including a detailed discussion on the identification charge. Smith v. State, 303 Ga. App. 831, 695 S.E.2d 86 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to have the case submitted to the jury solely on the charge of voluntary manslaughter because the defendant failed to show deficient performance on trial counsel's part in withdrawing defendant's request to instruct the jury as to voluntary manslaughter since the crux of the defense was justification in defense of self. Kendrick v. State, 287 Ga. 676, 699 S.E.2d 302 (2010).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for withdrawing jury instructions on the defenses of accident and self-defense because no evidence was elicited at trial that would support a defense of accident or self-defense. Jones v. State, 287 Ga. 770, 700 S.E.2d 350 (2010).

Defendant failed to show prejudice due to trial counsel's failure to request a legally accurate charge on the specific factors the jury could consider in deciding witness credibility because the record showed that the trial court would have omitted a specific list of factors from the court's charge on witness credibility even if a proper request had been made; the jury was not restricted to only considering impeachment and prior difficulties when deciding whether a witness was credible. Weeks v. State, 316 Ga. App. 448, 729 S.E.2d 570 (2012).

Trial counsel could not be ineffective for failing to object to a jury instruction that did not affect the outcome of the trial or for failing to object to testimony, a tactical decision. Gaither v. State, 321 Ga. App. 643, 742 S.E.2d 158 (2013).

Failure to request jury charge on proximate causation. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a jury charge on proximate causation as the jury charge was sufficient to inform the jury that, in order to convict the defendant of felony murder, the jury had to determine that the defendant caused or was a party with the codefendant in causing the victim's death during the escape phase of the underlying felonies. Pennie v. State, 292 Ga. 249, 736 S.E.2d 433 (2013).

Counsel's failure to request instruction on identification. — During defendant's trial for aggravated stalking and criminal trespass, trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request pattern jury charges on identification. The jury saw the surveillance videos for themselves, and was able independently to judge the validity of the victim's identification; the defendant failed to show that the outcome would have been different if counsel had requested pattern jury charges on identification. Reed v. State, 309 Ga. App. 183, 709 S.E.2d 847 (2011).

Counsel's failure to request charge on individual determination of guilt. — Defense counsel did not provide ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to request a charge on individual determination of guilt as the trial court charged the jury that, although four individuals were indicted together, the jury was only to consider the case against the defendant. Botelho v. State, 268 Ga. App. 129, 601 S.E.2d 494 (2004).

Failure to request instruction on abandonment. — Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a jury instruction on abandonment because the defendant made no admission to engaging in the underlying crime. Simmons v. State, 289 Ga. 773, 716 S.E.2d 165 (2011).

Instructions on right to remain silent or testify. — Trial counsel was not deficient for failing to object to the trial court's instruction to the defendant concerning the right to testify; in any event, the defendant could not show prejudice because the defendant did not testify at a hearing on the motion for a new trial. Moss v. State, 278 Ga. App. 362, 629 S.E.2d 5 (2006).

Failure to request justification charge. — Defense counsel was not ineffective for failing to request for a jury charge on justification in accordance with O.C.G.A. § 16-3-20(6), as the defendant could not show that the defendant was justified in firing shots at the victim since the victim had only fired the victim's gun one time in the air and then was in a car and leaving at the time that the defendant and the codefendant fatally shot back. Stinchcomb v. State, 280 Ga. 170, 626 S.E.2d 88 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for new trial on the ground of ineffective assistance of counsel because there was no evidence to support an instruction on defense of habitation pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 16-3-23 and, thus, trial counsel did not perform deficiently in failing to request such an instruction; there was no evidence that the victim was attempting to unlawfully enter or attack the defendant's vehicle at the time the defendant stabbed the victim, and under the facts, there could be no reasonable belief that stabbing the victim was necessary to prevent or terminate the other's unlawful entry into or attack upon a motor vehicle. Philpot v. State, 311 Ga. App. 486, 716 S.E.2d 551 (2011).

Failure to request defense of habitation charge. — If the jury had been properly charged on defense of habitation (as opposed to only a self-defense instruction), it was reasonably probable that they would have accepted the substantial evidence that the victim unlawfully entered defendant's car in a violent and tumultuous manner for the purpose of offering personal violence to the occupants, and that defendant was justified under the circumstances in using deadly force to repel the attack; thus, defendant established that but for counsel's error there was a reasonable probability the result of the proceeding would have been different and that counsel was ineffective. Benham v. State, 277 Ga. 516, 591 S.E.2d 824 (2004).

Trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to request a charge on the defense of habitation, O.C.G.A. § 16-3-23, because there was no evidence that the victim attempted to enter an apartment to harm anyone inside the building, and the evidence demonstrated that the victim went inside the apartment to escape from the defendant when the victim saw that the defendant had a gun; the evidence did not reflect that the victim's intent was other than to change the locks of the apartment. Mubarak v. State, 305 Ga. App. 419, 699 S.E.2d 788 (2010).

Failure to request charge on mutual combat. — Trial counsel did not perform deficiently by failing to request a charge on mutual combat because there was no evidence of a mutual intention to fight; at trial, the defendant presented the defense of accident and asserted that the defendant lacked any intention to shoot the victim, but there was no evidence that reflected that the defendant and the victim mutually agreed to fight each other. Boatright v. State, 289 Ga. 597, 713 S.E.2d 829 (2011).

Failure to request self defense instruction. — Counsel was not ineffective for failing to pursue a request for a voluntary manslaughter instruction in a felony murder prosecution as the defendant's unequivocal testimony was that the defendant acted in self-defense out of fear of the victim, and without evidence that the defendant was provoked provided no basis for the instruction. Browning v. State, 283 Ga. 528, 661 S.E.2d 552 (2008).

Failure to object to charge defining sodomy. — Defense counsel was not ineffective in not objecting to a charge defining "sodomy" as "performing or submitting to a sexual act involving the sex organs of one and the mouth or anus of another" on the ground that the jury could have convicted the defendant of aggravated child molestation in a manner not alleged in the indictment; the only evidence of sodomy involving the child in question corresponded to the facts alleged, and thus an objection would have been meritless. Cherry v. State, 283 Ga. App. 700, 642 S.E.2d 369 (2007).
